Mr. Bivins of Decatur, Illinois, writes: "I have always thought I would never allow my name to be used in connection with the many advertised medicines, but, since I have received such wonderful benefit from the use of PEPS-AID for stomach trouble, I believe it would be wrong for me to withhold my name from the public. I was a sufferer from stomach trouble for more than thirty years and tried very many doctors and patent medicines with only temporary relief. Since I finished taking the last of three boxes of PEPS-AID, I have been entirely free from any stomach trouble."

"What PEPS-AID has done for Mr. Bivins it will do for you."

"BEST MEDICINE FOR WOMEN"

What Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Did For Ohio Woman.

Portsmouth, Ohio.—"I suffered from irregularities, pains in my side and was so weak at times I could hardly get around to do my work, and as I had four in my family and three boarders it made it very hard for me. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was recommended to me. I took it and it has restored my health. It is certainly the best medicine for woman's ailments I ever saw."—Mrs. SARA SHAW, R. Mrs. Shaw proved the merit of this medicine and wrote this letter in order that other suffering women may find relief as she did.

BEAUTY FROM PURER BLOOD

Fort Wayne, Ind.—"When I was a girl I became all run-down, weak and nervous and my stomach was in very bad shape—a gastric condition. My blood was very bad, and I broke out in sores. This was in the spring of the year. I tried medicines with no results at all. A friend told me of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery so I began its use at once and it soon cured me of my stomach trouble, cleared my blood and left me in a strong, healthy condition. I have also used the 'All-Healing Salve,' and found it excellent for healing open sores of every sort."—MRS. A. T. COGGESHALL, 1531 Calhoun St.

Every Woman Should Have a Bank Account

Not just to have one, nor merely for the purpose of saying she has one, but for the same reason exactly as a man has a bank account—and the added reason that it's the best possible way to teach her to be careful and conservative.

Every woman takes pride in the belief that she can take as good or better care of money than her husband, and she will be a distinct asset if she has a bank account to help her foster that belief.

This bank especially invites the accounts of frugal and careful wives and mothers, and will welcome and give earnest and individual attention to such accounts.

Red Cross Department

With the co-operation of the Editor and his staff it is our purpose in this Dept., to bring to the people of this community the activities of the Red Cross as they pertain to us locally. This organization is the Christian spirit in action, stripped of all form and pretence and closely allied with the Cross of Calvary in that they both represent service.

And it is with this spirit of service that Mrs. S. D. Gee, Mrs. Bert Jackson and Mrs. Ada Bassett will take entire charge of the baby layettes. The two former ladies will have charge of the outfits proper and Mrs. Bassett will look after the knitted or crocheted articles. They expect to have patterns and materials to cut the layettes sometime next week, and any woman, Red Cross member or not, is urged to help with this work. The ladies in charge ask that any woman desiring to do this home sewing, take from them an entire layette, not including knitted articles. She in turn may get anyone she chooses to help make the layette but the woman taking same will please return it. This will make it easier for the ladies in charge to keep an account of the garments. The Presidents of Ladies Aids are urged to take layettes to be made in their Societies. Mrs. Gee and Mrs. Jackson will also prepare the layettes for shipment and for further information we refer you to them. The Red Cross asks for the following:-Two outing flannel dresses, one wool knitted or crocheted jacket, three bleached muslin jackets, three thin white flannel brassieres, one flannel or daisy cloth hood, two pair bootees, two swaddling clothes or woolen blankets, three flannel binders, 12 diapers, three undershirts, one bonnet, and a bag filled with sundries for the little newcomer into a warring world.

We have been asked if the making of the baby layettes will do away with and take the place of the regular chapter room sewing. Most assuredly not. This call for home sewing in no degree lessens the urgent need of the hospital supplies and every woman who has been helping with this important part of the war work, and all other women who possibly can, are urged to come to the sewing room every Wednesday afternoon. There has also been a little misunderstanding about this chapter room sewing and some of our good women feel that only expert needle women should attempt to do the work and that the inspection of the sewing is very rigid. Not so. Any woman who can baste will find work and any woman who can sew on a machine, fell a seam and measure with a tape line, can make these garments. The Red Cross asks that the shirt pockets be exactly so many inches from the shoulder, that the seams and hems be on the outside, that open ends of hems be whipped, etc. Mrs. Dunkle's work is not to criticise the way you sew but to see that these variations from the regular way of sewing are done as the Red Cross desires. Our chapter has never had a garment returned to us for alteration and this is proof that it is well to look after these details.

Surgical Dressings.

For some time we have been receiving bulletins concerning the great need of surgical dressings and we surely need not explain the importance of this Dept. of Red Cross work. The American R. C., in France gives positively sickening details of the shortage of bandages and urges that each chapter have a class actively engaged in making surgical dressing. We felt so much concerned about this that we inquired at Ft. Wayne headquarters as to how we might take up this work. We found that we would have to have a Commissioned Teacher of Hospital work to come here or us send a woman to Wayne, that it is a week's course and the regular tuition fee is $5 per day. Naturally we were discouraged. But last Friday, Judge Link, Co., Chairman, 'phoned to our local chairman that he had arranged with a Com. Teacher for a course at Auburn this week, tuition free. He urged our Chairman that she allow nothing to interfere with her taking this course so that it may be presented to patriotic women and girls in St. Joe and vicinity. Mrs. Price has sacrificed her home duties for this week, has gone to Auburn and is learning the work—when she returns she expects to try to arrange a class, and every woman and girl will do well to be interested in this for it is a knowledge that will be beneficial in times of peace as well as war and by our efforts we might help to save the life of some soldier, perhaps a boy from our own territory, who knows? All lessons in our local chapter will be given free to anyone, irregardless of whether they are members of the Red Cross.

We have arranged for a series of six interesting articles, "War Talks, by Uncle Dan," written by Mr. Howard H. Gross, president of the Universal Military Training League, of which this is the first. They tell in a graphic way why military training is of value, both to the nation and to the individual, and our readers will find them of unusual interest.

WAR TALKS

By UNCLE DAN

Number One

America Must Fight Hard or Germany May Win—Necessity for Military Training.

"Now, Billie," said his mother, "your Uncle Dan is coming tomorrow to spend a week with us on the farm, and if you want to know about the war, here's your opportunity. Uncle Dan is probably one of the best-informed men in the country." Billie clapped his hands and gave such a whoop that he wakened the baby, but what could you expect of a fifteen-year-old boy who is a living interrogation point and wants to know about war?

Uncle Dan arrived in due time and Billie watched for an opportunity. It came that evening after dinner when Uncle Dan had lighted a cigar and taken a seat on the porch.

"I'm mighty glad you came, Uncle Dan. I want to talk to you about the war. We have just put military training in our township high school, but we had a hard time to do it. The Joneses and the Greggs objected. They said the war wouldn't come over here. Grandma Jones said: 'They ain't no use to worrit, it will soon blow over.' Well, we put the training in just the same. You orter heard Judge Brownell, the president of the school board, do the slackers up. He said unless we take off our coats and go to it, Germany may get win, and if she does, she will take over the great British fleet as a war trophy and compel us to do what ever she wants to; that she could make us pay all the cost of the war; the kaiser could tax us as he pleased and that we couldn't help ourselves. He could make every one pay over a part of what he earns; that he could make the farmers pay rent for their own farms, etc. Now, Uncle, what do you think of that?"

"Well, my boy," said Uncle Dan, "all that Judge Brownell says might easily come true and may unless we go quickly to the aid of the allies with large numbers of men and help them break the German line. Unless we can beat the submarines, they may prevent us from getting enough food to the allies to keep them going. In that case Germany would win. As matters stand today, our greatest need is trained men. If we had had several millions of men with military training in our industries and on our farms when the war came, who could have been called at once for service, I do not believe the kaiser would have forced the war upon us. As it was, he had no respect for us, and now we are in it and must go through with it. But never again must we be caught so wholly unprepared.

"There is only one safe way," said Uncle Dan, "and that is to adopt permanently universal military training, apply it to every young man who is physically fit, say in his nineteenth or twentieth year. The training can be carried forward in the United States training camps that are now being established for training men called by the selective draft. As soon as these men vacate these stations, they should be filled by younger men, and this should be made the permanent policy of the country."

Billie's mother, Mrs. Graham, had overheard the conversation. She came out and said: "Really, Brother Dan, are you serious as to the dangers of our country? If it is as bad as that, it is high time for us to wake up and do something about it."

"Exactly," replied Uncle Dan. "It is better to wake up now than to be rudely awakened later. We may as well understand, sister, that this is our war and we must win it or God help America. Everything that we have or hope to have—our liberties, our blessings, our opportunities are all involved in the great issue before us. Nothing must stand between us and winning this war. It is a question whether the peoples' right or the kaiser's might shall dominate the world. If there ever was a holy war, this is it. We are fighting for world liberty. We are fighting for the freedom of humanity. We are fighting for the right of men to govern themselves instead of being governed against their will by a war-mad overlord. Perilous times are ahead of us. We must be prepared to make any sacrifice, to perform any service that may be required of us."

"Oh, Uncle Dan," exclaimed Billie, "may I bring my chum, Jimmie Collins, when we have our next talk? He is a bug on this war business and just crazy to see you."

"Certainly," said Uncle Dan, with a hearty laugh. "If we are to have more talks, I shall be glad to have Jimmie join us."

Billie clapped his hands and ran to the 'phone and told Jimmie to be over at seven o'clock the next evening.

WAR TALKS

By UNCLE DAN

Number Two

Jimmie Collins Tells What He Saw—What Military Training Does for Boys.

"Well, here we are!" exclaimed Billie, presenting his chum, Jimmie Collins.

"Very glad to see you, Mr. Collins," said Uncle Dan with a smile.

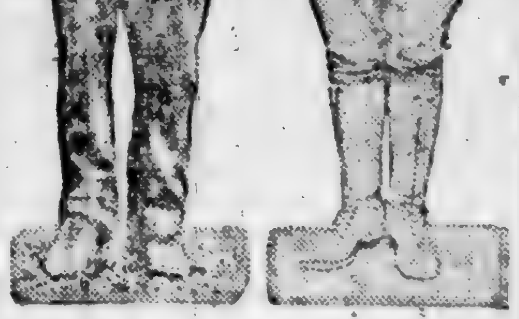
"Aw," said Billie, "Just call him Jimmie. That's the only name he knows. He's the pitcher of our baseball nine, and he's some pitcher, too. Just feel of his arm."

"Well," said Uncle Dan, feeling, "That's a mighty good arm!"

"Now, boys," said Uncle Dan, "what do you want to talk about?"

"Well," said Jimmie, "I was down to Galesburg a few months ago when the boys came home from the Mexican border. They looked fine. Everybody was surprised to see how straight they stood and how manly they were. The boys seemed proud to wear the uniform. I tell you their muscles were as hard as nails. I heard Banker Haskett say that the training and discipline the boys had had was exactly what every boy in the country ought to have, and that now these boys could get a better job at higher pay than they could have had before. Do you think that's so, Uncle Dan?"

Uncle Dan replied: "I have a friend who employs hundreds of young men. He always gives boys having had military training the preference; he says it pays to do so. He finds they are more alert, more prompt, more courteous; they know how to carry out orders; they are quicker to think and to act than those without training. He said from his experience he believed that six or eight months of intensive military training would add at least 20 per cent to a man's earning capacity, and that it was the best investment any young man could make.



AFTER FIVE MONTHS.

The two pictures are of the same young man. The first was taken the day he enlisted and the second after he had had five months' military training. His home is in North Carolina.

"Billie, if you will go up to my room and bring my small handbag, I will let you see two photographs of the same young man, showing what only five months of intensive training on the Mexican border did for him."

The bag was brought. Uncle Dan, showing the pictures, said: "Well, here they are. They tell their own story and it is a mighty interesting one. The young man, before training, has a discouraged look; he has seen but little of the world. There was very little in his surroundings to bring him out. When he joined the colors and Uncle Sam took him in charge, life for him took on a new meaning. He saw a chance to do something and be something. He woke up. His captain says he is twice the man he was when he joined the army. This may be one of the extreme cases," said Uncle Dan. "I can tell you, though, that war or no war, no one thing will do the young men of this nation so much good in so short a time as a few months of intensive military training. It fits a man to fight his own life battles in the business world as well as to defend his country and its flag.

"Nearly every civilized country gives its boys military training. It is compulsory. It is based upon the fact that it is the duty of everyone to help defend his country; and as war is now carried on, no one can do much unless he is trained. Also, the records show that the killed and wounded among untrained troops is nearly three times as great as it is with well-trained men who know how to fight and how to protect themselves. By this plan a nation has trained men to defend her and the individual is a stronger and better man for the training.

"If the Chamberlain Bill for Military Training is passed by congress, as it ought to be, the same thing would be done for millions of other young men throughout the land. Everybody ought to demand of his congressman and senators the passage of this bill."

"All right, sir, exclaimed Jimmie, we will see Judge Brownell, Mr. Haskett, and Professor Slocum, and get them busy."

Clark Writes Another letter

Camp Devens,
Dec. 29, 1917

St. Joe News,
St. Joe, Indiana.

Dear Fred:—

This is one of the cold days they have been telling us about ever since we came here, only 26 below, but nevertheless it did away with all drills.

I have spent most of the day in the Y. M. C. A. writing letters and this one is the fifteenth since noon.

The Y. M. C. A's. are the only homes we have when the day's drill is over or when the hours grow long on Sundays.

The barracks are quite warm in the day time, but as soon as taps we open all windows and sleep out of doors so to speak, and, take it from me, here it gets cold before morning while in bed, but one feels good after such a night.

We have been all packed ready to move for a long time but somehow it don't come time to do it. Sometimes I think we will not go across until spring, but two of the companies are across so we may go very soon.

Our Christmas was sure a great one. All the barracks were decorated for fair, and our mess hall was the most pleasant place on earth that day, only thirty-one turkeys and all that goes with them to smoke up a real meal for Xmas.

Calvin is very well, as well as myself. For a short time we both had bad colds but they don't last long in the army. Good medical attention and everything one can want.

I am writing this letter during the pauses of our six real picture show and it is rather broken, but I mean well just the same.

Snow about two feet deep and cold, oh, my yes! For the last week it has never been above eight below zero, so what drilling was done was all double time, or freeze in your shoes

With best wishes to all, I remain
Sincerely,
Clark F. Scholes.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Snow Bound

The basket ball team of the St. Joe High School has a record of never having canceled a game no matter what the weather.

According to schedule, St. Joe was billed to play at Pleasant Lake The roads were impassable for "flivvers," the usual mode of travel for the basket ballers. The bobsled bus of the Koch livery was procured and the trip begnn just as the worst storm you ever saw got a good start.

The trip to Auburn was bad, but nobody suffered. The train was late so the boys arrived at Pleasant Lake at 7 P. M. instead of 6.

The game began promptly, with barely 40 spectators present, and it sure was a thriller, While St. Joe lost the game, that was expected, since Pleasant Lake has the best team in the district. The score stood 30-56.

After the game, the St. Joe boys were taken in pairs to four of the homes to be entertained until Saturday at 9:15 A. M. By Saturday morning the worst storm in the history of the country was on. Temperature showed 22 below zero and the wind blowing from 45 to 60 miles an hour. About 4:30 Saturday afternoon it was learned that the trains were all annulled on the N. Y. C. There was some disappointment shown in the countenances of the St. Joe boys but that lasted only for a few minutes. So gentlemanly had the boys conducted themselves, that they received offer after offer for entertainment as long as they had to stay in Pleasant Lake.

Sunday the trains were all annulled for the day. The good people gave the boys a party which some of them will not soon forget. Monday all regular trains were annulled until the evening trains, but a special was run from Hillsdale at 10:30 A. M. There was some rejoicing when the train pulled in at Pleasant Lake at 12 M. When the boys got to Auburn at 12:45 there was the Kock sled, having been unable to get home. Next summer it is likely that some of our boys will be making regular trips to Pleasant Lake.

German Alien Enemies in U. S. to Register.

Among the regulations for the registration of German alien enemies in the United States during the first week of February, are the following:

All German males of the age of 14 years and upward are required to register. Notice of time and place of registration will be given by publication in newspapers.

The affidavit of each registrant must be accompanied by four unmounted photographs, signed across the face so as not to obscure the features, and the finger prints of each registrant shall be taken.

Between 10 and 15 days after registration each alien enemy must again appear before his registration officer to obtain a registration card, which will bear his name and his left thumb print. This card must be carried by the registrant for future identification.

An alien enemy who changes his place of residence to another place within the same registration district must at once report the change to the registration officer. No alien enemy shall move out of the district without a permit. Application for a permit must be made upon a form furnished by the Department of Justice, giving full particulars as to date, reason for change, and intended place of residence.

D. W. CARSON

Former Employee of St. Joe News Writes Very Interestingly of The Easthaven Hospital for the Insane at Richmond, Indiana and those About the Hospital.

Correspondence from the "bug house" is out of the ordinary; but when, in addition, the correspondent is a member of the Idiosyncratic and Kaleidoscopic Order of Bugs (33d degree), the extraordinary becomes common place. Well, that is the case with this letter: it is written on "Queer Street" by one who dwells on that thoroughfare. Some of your readers may pass it by with a contemptuous grunt. Others may read it out of curiosity—just to see if any good thing can come out of the "bug house" Nazareth. Be that as it may, it is penned with the hope that it may interest some, if not all, and with the purpose of giving an idea of this great eleemosynary institution.

First, let me do away with a wrong conception of the "bug house." Nearly all on the outside think it is a place whose inmates yell, rave, curse, fight and suffer from self-inflicted wounds. In the main, the contrary is true: it is a quiet place—very quiet. Of course, there are exceptions to this rule; for here the unexpected may be expected any moment and the improbable may become probable. The story of the two sailors will explain this latter phase of "bug house" life. They had just returned from a long voyage and were enjoying their first evening ashore at a sleight-of-hand show, having with them a pet parrot. They enjoyed the performance very much; and at the end of each act would turn to each other and remark: "That's pretty good, Jock—wonder what's comin' next?" In one of his tricks, the performer handled some explosives. He failed to do it right and blew up the building. The parrot was shot out of a window into a hedge. The Poll hung head downward, half blinded, plumage awry and badly burned. Sne had just life enough left to mournfully croak: "That's pretty d—d good, Jock—wonder what's comin' next?" So it is here: one constantly wonders what's coming next. But, I repeat, this is, as a general thing, a quiet place.

Easthaven is an institution in which Indiana may justly be proud. Here God's unfortunate ones are fortunate enough to have a place where they are cared for and restored to mental health. About the curing of patients another wrong impression prevails. Many think cures are effected by the use of drugs; that men and women are reduced to quietude by strong remedies. The reverse is true—little medicine is given. The doctors rely on restraint, proper food, regular hours and rest. Restraint is the chief factor—reasonable, not brutal, restraint. When a new patient arrives, he is put among others who follow implicitly the rules governing the inmates and he soon follows their example. A patient who understands his situation knows that it is to his advantage to do as he is told. Others are forced to do so. How? By coercion—by forcing him to do so. This is accomplished without blows or harsh treatment. The attendant employing such methods, and one does sometimes, is summarially dismissed if Dr Smith, the superintendent, learns of it. A stern command or making the unruly patient take a chair and remain there, will generally suffice to tame him. In extreme cases, a straight jacket,—a one-piece suit made of heavy canvas, by which the patient is fastened to a seat, provides the needful restraint. At night, a restraining sheet, by which the patient is forced to remain in bed, is used.

Regular hours and dieting conduce to the patient's recovery. Here, everything is timed by the whistle, which blows at stated hours every day. At 5:45 A. M.—no earlier, no later—every one gets up. No naps Sunday morning, either. At 8:00 p. m., all go to bed. Breakfast is at 6:30 a. m.; dinner, 11:30; supper, 5:30 p. m. There is no variation from this schedule. The food provided patients is an important item. No knick-nacks are served—nothing but the plain and substantial. Everything is steamed, baked or boiled. Nothing is fryed. There is some kicking, of course, principally by those who never fared so well in their lives; but all thrive upon it. As an evidence of the last statement, let me say that I was weighed today and have gained twenty pounds since coming here, Sept. 24. By the way, I soon expect to be in the Elza Kinsey and John Betz class; and if those gentlemen have any old clothes they wish to give away, they know my address.

Some one may ask: "How about the padded cells in which violent patients are kept." In reply, I say "there ain't no sich a thing." The padded cell exists only outside the "bug house" in the imagination of certain people. Such a room would give a violent patient a place in which to throw himself about and become even more violent. The straight jacket by day and the restraining sheet by night keep any inmate from injuring himself or those about him and soon overcome any tendency to yell or rave.

Easthaven is quite a good-sized town, numbering about 1,100 people in all. There are twelve wards for male patients and fifteen for females. These twenty-seven wards contain slightly over 900 inmates. Some wards—the worst ones—have but few patients; and others have more. C-D ward, the one I am on and the best in the whole institution on the male side, has room for 46 when full. The place is arranged on the cottage plan, each building containing one or more wards. There are two exceptions on each side, four male wards being housed in two cottages, one below and one above in each case; and the same is true of the female side. The men's wards are lettered; the women's numbered.

Is this "Queer Street?" It is. Bet your last dollar on it—you can't lose. Queer things happen until one gets tired of asking, "What's coming next?" Ah, yes! But stop and think. It's "Sad Street" also. Before laughing at the antics or utterances of the mind-befuddled one, pause a moment. Look at him as he is and pay no attention to what he does or say. Then pity will give place to mirth. To him, his fancied grievances or troubles are realities and he may be enduring untold agony. Is that anything to be amused at, funny as it may seem? Every minute of the day, every patient's cottage shuts in the direst agony. Yet the most sympathetic person, seeing such things daily, can not help being amused.

"Queer Street?" Yes! Funny incidents occur? Yes! I will give a few. Reader, don't get shocked at what follows. Remember, the persons whose doings and sayings I am about to chronicle are not bound by the ties of conventionality and their language is often more expressive than elegant. The queer events I am about to relate did not all occur at Easthaven.

Among the patients that I have

Obituary

DeForest Earl Brown, son of William and Sylvia Brown, was born in Allen county, Indiana, December 17, 1875, and departed this life January 8, 1918 at the age of forty-two years and twenty-one days.

In early life deceased moved with his parents to near Newville, Indiana. It was here that he grew to manhood and on November 28, 1896, united in marriage with Elma Ann Wineland. The children of this union were three, who, with their mother, survive the decease namely: Mrs. Zelphia Elizabe Steward, Ralph Marion, and Norn Irene. Excepting a few years re dence in St. Joseph county, Mich the family has resided mostly DeKalb county, Indiana, for so time in St. Joe, from which hon death has removed our brother.

Years ago he united with the Christian church in Newville, Indiana. He later transferred his membership to the Christian church in St Joe, in which he was an esteemed member at death. His ideas of a christian life were much higher than are commonly held. To exemplify them in his own living, he watched over self most exactingly. He was a man greatly beloved his household where each loving ministered to his needs, and wher all solicitously watched over his bedside throughout the long last day and night of his stay on earth with them. He was a man of good strength in the gospel hope, and perseveringly strong unto the end, which is most gratifying to the bereaved family.

Besides his beloved companion, the children already named, and a little grand child, he leaves his aged father, William Brown, who has for some time lived in his son's home to kindly aid in his care; also his two brothers, William B. and Grant M. Brown; and his two sisters, Mrs. Pearl Jackson, and Mrs. Blanche Sebring all of whom have their residences near by.

Funeral services held from the Christian church on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Pastor Spayd officiating; E. R. Kinsey funeral director; and interment in Riverside Cemetery.

Among those from out of town who attended the funeral of D. F. Brown, were: Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Wineland and Mr. and Mrs. Jay Wineland of Elkhart; Mr. and Mrs. Emanuel Hendricks, Mr. and Mrs. Grant Brown, Mrs. Mahlon Baker, Will Brown, Lester Sebring and two children of Auburn and Irvin Roberts of Scipio.

PEACE TERMS ARE GIVEN BY WILSON

Must Restore Alsace and Belgium, Is Declaration of the President.

OUTLINES FOURTEEN STEPS

Reorganize Countries on Lines of Nationalities or Fight to Death, Wilson Says of Peace—Insists on Evacuation of Russian Territory.

Washington, Jan. 9.—Open and free consideration of covenants of peace is the only way permanent peace can be secured. President Wilson told a special session of congress.

He restated specifically and emphatically the peace aims of the allies, so far as the United States is concerned for the benefit of the Russian people.

The president spoke as follows:

"Gentlemen of the Congress: Once more, as repeatedly before, the spokesmen of the central empires have indicated their desire to discuss the objects of the war and the possible basis of a general peace.

"Parleys have been in progress at Brest-Litovsk between representatives of the central powers to which the attention of all the belligerents has been invited, for the purpose of ascertaining whether it may be possible to extend these parleys into a general conference with regard to terms of peace and settlement.

Presented Definite Statement.

"The Russian representatives presented not only a perfectly definite statement of the principles upon which they would be willing to conclude peace, but also an equally definite program of the concrete application of those principles.

"The representatives of the central powers, on their part, presented an outline of settlement which, if much less definite, seemed susceptible of liberal interpretation until their specific program of practical terms was added.

"The program proposed no concessions at all, either to sovereignty of Russia or to the preferences of the population with whose fortunes it dealt, but meant, in a word, that the central empires were to keep every foot of territory their armed forces had occupied—every province, every city, every point of vantage—as a permanent addition to their territories and their power.

Full of Significance.

"The Russian representatives were sincere and in earnest. They cannot entertain such proposals of conquest and domination.

"The whole incident is full of significance. It is also full of perplexity.

"The Russian representatives have insisted, very justly, very wisely, and in the true spirit of democracy, that the conferences they have been holding with the Teutonic and Turkish statesmen should be held within open, not closed, doors, and all the world has been audience as was desired. To whom have we been listening then? To those who speak the spirit and intention of the resolutions of the German reichstag on the 9th of July last, the spirit and intention of the liberal leaders and parties of Germany, or to those who resist and defy that spirit and intention and insist upon conquest and subjugation? Or are we listening in fact to both unreconciled and in open and hopeless contradiction? These are very serious and pregnant questions.

World Peace at Stake.

"Upon the answer to them depends the peace of the world.

"But whatever the results of the parleys at Brest-Litovsk, whatever the confusions of counsel and of purpose in the utterances of the spokesmen of the central empires, they have again attempted to acquaint the world with their objects in the war and have again challenged their adversaries to say what their objects are and what sort of settlement they would deem just and satisfactory.

"There is no good reason why that challenge should not be responded to and responded to with the utmost candor. We did not wait for it. Not once, but again and again we have laid our whole thought and purpose before the world, not in general terms only, but each time with sufficient definition to make it clear what sort of definitive terms of settlement must necessarily spring out of them.

Lauds Lloyd George's Speech.

"Within the last week Mr. Lloyd George has spoken wih admirable candor and in admirable spirit for the people and government of Great Britain. There is no confusion of counsel among the adversaries of the central powers, no uncertainty of principle, no vagueness of detail.

"The only secrecy of counsel, the only lack of fearless frankness, the only failure to make definite statement of the objects of the war, lies with Germany and her allies.

"The issues of life and death hang upon these definitions. No statesman who has the least conception of his responsibility ought for a moment to permit himself to continue this tragical and appalling outpouring of blood and treasure unless he is sure beyond a peradventure that the objects of the vital sacrifice are part and parcel of the very life of society and that the people for whom he speaks think them right and imperative as he does.

"There is, moreover, a voice calling for these definitions of principle and purpose which is, it seems to me, more thrilling and more compelling than any of the many moving voices with which the troubled air of the world is filled. It is the voice of the Russian people. They are prostrate and all but helpless, it would seem, before the grim power of Germany, which has hitherto known no relenting and no pity.

Russ Power Shattered.

"Their power apparently is shattered, and yet their soul is not subservient. They will not yield either in principle or in action. The conception of what is right, of what it is humane and honorable for them to accept, has been stated with a frankness, a largeness of view, a generosity of spirit and a universal human sympathy which must challenge the admiration of every friend of mankind, and they refused to compound their ideals or desert others that they themselves may be safe.

"They call to us to say what it is that we desire, in what, if in anything, our purpose and our spirit differ from theirs; and I believe that the people of the United States would wish me to respond with utter simplicity and frankness.

"Whether their present leaders believe it or not, it is our heartfelt desire and hope that some way may be opened whereby we may be privileged to assist the people of Russia to attain their utmost hope of liberty and ordered peace.

No Secret Understandings.

"It will be our wish and purpose that the processes of peace, when they are begun, shall be absolutely open and that they shall involve and permit henceforth no secret understandings of any kind. The day of conquest and aggrandizement is gone by; so is also the day of secret covenants entered into in the interest of particular governments and likely at some unlooked-for moment to upset the peace of the world.

"We entered this war because violations of right had occurred which touched us to the quick and made the life of our own people impossible unless they were corrected and the world secured once for all against their recurrence.

"What we demand in this war, therefore is nothing peculiar to ourselves.

"It is that the world be made fit and safe to live in; and particularly that it be made safe for every peace-loving nation which, like our own, wish to live its own life, determine its own institutions, be assured of justice and fair dealing by the other peoples of the world as against force and selfish aggression.

"The program of the world's peace, therefore, is our program, and that program, the only possible program, as we see it, is this:

Wants Open Covenants.

1. Open covenants of peace, openly arrived at, after which there shall be no private international understandings of any kind, but diplomacy shall proceed always frankly and in the public view.

2. Absolute freedom of navigation upon the seas, outside territorial waters, alike in peace and in war, except as the seas may be closed in whole or in part by international action for the enforcement of international covenants.

3. The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

4. Adequate guaranties given and taken that national armaments will be reduced to the lowest point consistent with domestic safety.

5. A free, open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims, based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the equitable claims of the government whose title is to be determined.

Must Evacuate Russia.

6. The evacuation of all Russian territory and such a settlement of all questions affecting Russia as will secure the best and freest co-operation of the other nations of the world in obtaining for her an unhampered and unembarrassed opportunity for the independent determination of her own political development and national policy.

7. Belgium, the whole world will agree, must be evacuated and restored, without any attempt to limit the sovereignty which she enjoys in common with all other free nations. No other single act will serve as this will serve to restore confidence among the nations in the laws which they have themselves set and determined for the government of their relations with one another. Without this healing act the whole structure and validity of international law is forever impaired.

Must Free France.

8. All French territory should be freed and the invaded portions restored and the wrong done to France by Prussia in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine, which has unsettled the peace of the world for nearly fifty years, should be righted in order that peace may once more be made secure in the interest of all.

9. A readjustment of all frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognizable lines of nationality.

10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.

Evacuate Balkans.

11. Roumania, Serbia and Montenegro should be evacuated; occupied territories restored; Serbia accorded free and secure access to the sea; and the relations of the several Balkan states to one another determined by friendly counsel along historically established lines of allegiance and nationality; and international guaranties of the political and economic independence and territorial integrity of the several Balkan states should be entered into.

12. The Turkish portions of the present Ottoman Empire should be assured a secure sovereignty, but the other nationalities which are now under Turkish rule should be assured an undoubted security of life and an absolutely unmolested opportunity of autonomous development, and the Dardanelles should be permanently opened as a free passage to the ships and commerce of all nations under international guaranties.

13. An independent Polish state should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputable Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

14. A general association of nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to great and small states alike.

"In regard to these essential rectifications of wrong and assertions of right we feel ourselves to be intimate partners of all the governments and peoples associated together against the imperialists. We cannot be separated in interest or divided in purpose. We stand together until the end.

"For such arrangements and covenants we are willing to fight and to continue to fight until they are achieved; but only because we wish the right to prevail and desire a just and stable peace such as can be secured only by removing the chief provocations to war, which this program does remove.

Not Jealous of Germany.

"We have no jealousy of German greatness and there is nothing in this program that impairs it. We grudge her no achievement or distinction of learning or of pacific enterprise such as have made her record very bright and very enviable.

"We do not wish to injure her or to block in any way her legitimate influence or power. We do not wish to fight her either with arms or with hostile arrangements of trade, if she is willing to associate herself with us and the other peace-loving nations of the world in covenants of justice and law and fair dealing.

"We wish her only to accept a place of equality among the peoples of the world—the new world in which we now live—instead of a place of mastery.

"Neither do we presume to suggest to her any alteration or modification of her institutions. But it is necessary, we must frankly say, and necessary as a preliminary to any intelligent dealings with her on our part, that we should know whom her spokesmen speak for when they speak to us, whether for the reichstag majority or for the military party, and the men whose creed is imperial dominion.

"We have spoken now, surely, in terms too concrete to admit of any further doubt or question. An evident principle runs through the whole program I have outlined.

"It is the principle of justice to all peoples and nationalities, and their right to live on equal terms of liberty and safety with one another, whether they be strong or weak. Unless this principle be made its foundation no part of the structure of international justice can stand. The people of the United States could act upon no other principle, and to the vindication of this principle they are ready to devote their lives, their honor and everything that they posses.

"The moral climax of this, the culminating and final war for human liberty has come, and they are ready to put their strength, their own highest purpose, their own integrity and devotion to the test."

HEROISM IN THE GREAT WAR

Brave Men Who Play a Passive Part in Face of Fire Deserve Honor.

In the fire and strife of battle, writes J. B. Brand in the Wide World, countless brave deeds have been accomplished in the present war. Men whose blood is aflame with excitement and who rush toward the enemy with arms in the hands, accomplish many an act of glory. In the struggle they are active participators, whose energy and spirit of determination may decide the course of the fight. There are, nevertheless, others who play a more passive part in the fray, and who are none the less brave on that account. Look, for instance, at the ambulance men who rescue the wounded under heavy fire, or at the men of the army service corps, who often drive wagon loads of munitions under severe bombardment; look, even at musicians belonging to our military bands who, in the last three years, have frequently been in as much danger at the actual combatants, while playing to encourage the fighting units. I can remember that in the Russo-Japanese campaign the Russians, who were led by officers who knew little of the modern science of war, were often played right into the firing line by their military bands, with the steadiness and precision which one might have expected to see on parade ground, but not on the battlefield under shot and shell.

"BARBAROUS AS SLAVE DRIVERS"

Methods of Exponents of German "Kultur" in Carrying Out Deportation Order.

ADD HYPOCRISY TO CRUELTY

Officers of "Modern Attila" Gave Attitude of England as Excuse for Repeating in France Atrocities Practiced in Belgium.

The course of the German armies in France was marked with the same brutalities that characterized the occupation of Belgium. Ample proof has been produced that the entire proceedings were a deliberate part of the calculated system of "frightfulness."

In France the German system of forced labor and deportations, with its horrors, was the same as in Belgium. In this article is shown the real identity of German practice in both occupied regions. This can be done from the official documents and from a summary by Ambassador Gerard. The harrowing details may be gathered from the scores of depositions which accompany the note addressed by the French government to the governments of the neutral powers July 25, 1916. These are on file in the state department, and have also been translated, along with the official documents, in "The Deportation of Women and Girls From Lille." (New York, Doran.)

German Proclamation at Lille.

"The attitude of England makes the provisioning of the population more and more difficult.

"To reduce the misery, the German authorities have recently asked for volunteers to go and work in the country. This offer has not had the success that was expected.

"In consequence of this the inhabitants will be deported by order and removed into the country. Persons deported will be sent to the interior of the occupied territory in France, far behind the front, where they will be employed in agricultural labor, and not on any military work whatever. By this measure they will be given the opportunity of providing better for their subsistence.

"In case of necessity, provisions can be obtained through the German depots. Every person deported will be allowed to take with him 30 kilograms of baggage (household utensils, clothes, etc.), which it will be well to make ready at once.

"I therefore order that no one, until further orders, shall change his place of residence. No one may absent himself from his declared legal residence from 9 p. m. to 6 a. m. (German time), unless he is in possession of a permit in due form.

"Inasmuch as this is an irrevocable measure, it is in the interest of the population itself to remain calm and obedient.

"COMMANDANT.

"Lille, April, 1916."

Notice Distributed in Lille.

"All the inhabitants of the houses, with the exception of children under fourteen and their mothers, and also of old people, must prepare themselves for transportation in an hour and a half's time.

"An officer will decide definitely what persons will be taken to the concentration camps. For this purpose all the inhabitants of the house must assemble in front of it; in case of bad weather they may remain in the passage. The door of the house must remain open. All protests will be useless. No inmate of the house, even those who are not to be transported, may leave the house before 8 a. m. (German time).

"Each person will be permitted to take 30 kilograms of baggage; if anyone's baggage exceeds that weight, it will all be rejected, without further consideration. Packages must be separately made up for each person and must bear an address legibly written and firmly affixed. This address must contain the surname and the Christian name and the number of the identity card.

"ETAPPEN-KOMMANDANTUR.

(Lille, April, 1916.)

Belgian Address to French President.

"To Monsieur Raymond Poincare,
President of the French Republic,
Paris.

"Sir: We have the honor to express again our most sincere gratitude to you for your most kind reception, a few days ago, of the deputation which went with feelings of legitimate emotion to inform you of the deportation of lads and girls, which the German authorities have just carried out in the invaded districts.

"We have collected some details on the subject from the lips of an honorable and trustworthy person, who succeeded in leaving Tourcoing about ten days ago; we think it our duty to bring these details to your notice by reproducing textually the declarations which have been made to us:

"'These deportations began towards Easter. The Germans announced that the inhabitants of Roubaix, Tourcoing, Lille, etc., were going to be transported into French districts where their provisioning would be easier.'

"'At night, at about two o'clock in the morning, a whole district of the town was invested by the troops of occupation. To each house was distributed a printed notice, of which we give herein an exact reproduction, preserving the style and spelling.' (See document, above.)

"'The inhabitants so warned were to hold themselves ready to depart an hour and a half after the distribution of the proclamation."

"'Each family, drawn up outside the house, was examined by an officer, who pointed out haphazard the persons who were to go. No words can express the barbarity of this proceeding nor describe the heartrending scenes which occurred; young men and girls took hasty farewell of their parents—a farewell hurried by the German soldiers who were executing the infamous task—rejoined the group of those who were going, and found themselves in the middle of the street, surrounded by other soldiers with fixed bayonets.'

"'Tears of despair on the part of parents and children so ruthlessly separated did not soften the hearts of the brutal Germans. Sometimes, however, a more kind-hearted officer yielded to too great despair and did not choose all the persons whom he should—by the terms of his instructions—have separated.'

Herded Like Cattle.

"'These girls and lads were taken in street cars to factories, where they were numbered and labeled like cattle and grouped to form convoys. In these factories, they remained 12, 24 or 36 hours until a train was ready to remove them.'

"'The deportation began with the villages of Roncy, Haluin, etc., then Tourcoing and Roubaix. In the towns the Germans proceeded by districts.'

"'In all about 30,000 persons are said to have been carried off up to the present. This monstrous operation has taken eight to ten days to accomplish.

"'The reason given by the German authorities is a humanitarian (?) one. They have put forward the following pretexts: provisioning is going to break down in the large towns in the north and their suburbs, whereas in the Ardennes the feeding is easy and cheap.'

"'It is known from the young men and girls, since sent back to their families for reasons of health, that in the department of the Ardennes the victims are lodged in a terrible manner, in disgraceful promiscuity; they are compelled to work in the fields. It is unnecessary to say that the inhabitants of our towns are not trained to such work. The Germans pay them 1.50 m. But there are complaints of insufficient food.'

"Barbarity of Slave Drivers."

"'They were very badly received in the Ardennes. The Germans had told the Ardennais that these were "volunteers" who were coming to work, and the Ardennais proceeded to receive them with many insults, which only ceased when the forcible deportation of which they were the victims became known.'

"'Feeling ran especially high in our towns. Never has so iniquitous a measure been carried out. The Germans have shown all the barbarity of slave drivers.'

"'The families so scattered are in despair and the morale of the whole population is gravely affected. Boys of fourteen, schoolboys in knickerbockers, young girls of fifteen to sixteen, have been carried off, and the despairing protests of their parents failed to touch the hearts of the German officers, or rather executioners.'

"One last detail: 'The persons so deported are allowed to write home once a month; that is to say, even less often than military prisoners.'

"We do not wish here to enter into the question of provisioning in the invaded districts; others, better qualified than ourselves, give you, as we know, frequent information. It is enough for us to describe in a few words the situation from this aspect:

Entire Population in Misery.

"The provisioning is very difficult; food, apart from that supplied by the Spanish-American committee, is very scarce and terribly dear. . . . People are hungry and the provisioning is inadequate by at least a half; our population is suffering constant privations and is growing noticeably weaker. The death rate, too, has increased considerably.

"With all confidence in the sympathy of the government we venture to address a new and pressing appeal to your generous kindness and far-reaching influence in the name of those who are suffering on behalf of the whole country."

"Paris, 15th June, 1916, 3, rue Taitbout."

(Signed on behalf of various specified organizations by Toulemonde, Charles Droulers, Leon Hatine-Dazin, and Louis Lorthiois.)

AMPLE PROOF OF ATROCITIES

Committee Appointed by the Belgian Government Collected Facts as to German War Practices.

In the hope of arousing the sympathy and securing the aid of the neutral nations, the Belgian government appointed a committee to ascertain the facts about German war practices. The evidence collected by the Belgian commissioners is detailed and explicit, and their reports give names, places, and dates. The following is a summary of the charges made:

"That thousands of unoffending civilians, including women and children, were murdered by the Germans.

"That women had been outraged.

"That the custom of the German soldiers immediately on entering a town was to break into wineshops and the cellars of private houses and madden themselves with drink.

"That pillage had been accompanied by wanton destruction and by bestial and sacrilegious practices."

TWO DOLLAR WHEAT

This Price Will Hold for Some Years.

A well advised commercial authority gives it as his opinion, "as a slow descent may be counted on in the prices for grain when the war ends—it may take several years to restore the world's stock of foodstuffs to normal—there is good ground for confidence in the outlook for rapid development in agriculture."

If this be correct, it follows that the profession of farming will materially increase its ranks in the next few years.

Today, the price of wheat is set by the United States government at $2.20 per bushel, and in Canada the price has been set at $2.21. This, of course, is less freight and handling charges which brings the average to the farmers at about $2.00 per bushel. This price will pay so long as land, material and labor can be secured at reasonable prices. It remains for the would-be producer to ascertain where he can secure these at prices that will make the production of grain profitable. He will estimate what price he can afford to pay for land that will give him a yield of wheat which when sold at $2.00 per bushel, will return him a fair profit. Local and social conditions will also enter into the consideration. Finding what he wants he would be wise to make his purchase now. Land prices in some portions of the country are low, certainly as low as they will ever be. City property and town property will fluctuate, but farm property will hold its own. The price of grain is as low as it will be for some years. Therefore it would be well to look about, and find what can be done.

There are doubtless many opportunities in the United States, especially in the Western states, to purchase good agricultural lands, that will produce well, at reasonable prices. If the would-be buyer has the time to investigate, and that is needed, for these lands do not exist in any considerable area, he would be well repaid. Not only will his land certainly increase in value—the unearned increment would be an asset—while under cultivation he can find nothing that will give better results. He will at the same time be performing a patriotic act, a needful act, one that would meet with the food controller's plea to increase agricultural production and assist in reducing the deficit of 75 million bushels of wheat reported by the controller.

In addition to the vacant lands in the United States which should be brought under cultivation. Western Canada offers today the greatest area of just the land that is required, and at low prices—prices that cannot last long. Even now land prices are increasing, as their value is daily becoming more apparent, and their location desirable.

As to the intrinsic value of land in Western Canada, hundreds of concrete cases could be cited, which go to prove that at fifty and sixty dollars per acre—figures that have recently been paid for improved farms—the crops grown on them gave a profit of from twenty to thirty per cent and even higher, on such an investment. One instance, is that of a young Englishman, unaccustomed to farming before he took his seat on the sulky plow with which he does most of his work, after allowing himself $1,000 for his own wages last year, made a profit of $2,200 on a $20,000 investment. His total sales amounted to $5,700 and his expense, which included the $1,000 wages for himself, was $3,500. The interest was 11½ per cent.

To the man who does not care to buy or who has not the means to purchase, but possesses wealth in his own hardihood, his muscle, and determination, there are the thousands of free homesteads of which he may have the pick on paying an entry fee of ten dollars. These are high class lands and adapted to all kinds of farming. Send to your nearest Canadian Government Agent for literature, descriptive of the splendid opportunities that are still open in Western Canada. Adv.

PRUDENCE SAYS SO

By ETHEL HUESTON

The Story of a Houseful of Loveable Girls

Copyright Bobbs-Merrill Co.

IN WHICH CAROL RECEIVES A MAD KISS IN THE DARK FROM A BOLD MAN—AND ENJOYS THE SENSATION

Synopsis.—The story concerns the household of Rev. Mr. Starr, a Methodist minister at Mount Mark, Ia., and the affairs of his five loveable daughters—Prudence, the eldest; Fairy, the next; Carol and Lark, twins; and Connie, the "baby." Prudence marries and goes away. Her place as "mother" in the home is taken by Aunt Grace. Fairy is engaged to wed. The twins and the "baby," just coming into womanhood, have the usual boy-and-girl love affairs, and the usual amazing adventures of adolescence.

"Oh, no, I like to be out in the night air. I want to talk to you about being a preacher, you know. I think it is the most wonderful thing in the world, I certainly do." Her eyes were upon his face now seriously. "I didn't say much, I was surprised, and I was ashamed, too, professor, for I never could do it in the world. Never! It always makes me feel cheap and exasperated when I see how much nicer other folks are than I. But I do think it is wonderful. Really sometimes I have thought you ought to be a preacher, because you're so nice. So many preachers aren't, and that's the kind we need."

The professor put his other hand over Carol's, which was restlessly fingering the crease in his sleeve. He did not speak. Her girlish, impulsive words touched him very deeply.

"I wouldn't want the girls to know it, they'd think it was so funny, but—" She paused uncertainly, and looked questioningly into his face. "Maybe you won't understand what I mean, but sometimes I'd like to be good myself. Awfully good, I mean." She smiled whimsicaly. "Wouldn't Connie scream if she heard that? Now you won't give me away, will you? But I mean it. I don't think of it very often, but sometimes, why, Professor, honestly, I wouldn't care if I were as good as Prudence!" She paused dramatically, and the professor pressed the slender hand more closely in his.

"Oh, I don't worry about it. I suppose one hasn't any business to expect a good complexion and just natural goodness, both at once, but—" She smiled again. "Five thousand dollars," she added dreamily. "Five thousand dollars! What shall I call you now? P'fessor is not appropriate any more, is it?"

"Call me David, won't you, Carol? Or Dave."

Carol gasped. "Oh, mercy! What would Prudence say?" She giggled merrily. "Oh, mercy!" She was silent a moment then. "I'll have to be contented with plain Mr. Duke, I suppose, until you get a D. D. Duckie, D. D." she added laughingly. But in an instant she was sober again. "I do love our job. If I were a man I'd be a minister myself. Wouldn't I be a peach?"

He laughed, too, recovering his equanimity as her customary buoyant brightness returned to her.

"You are," he said, and Carol answered:

"Thanks," very dryly. "We must go back now," she added presently. And they turned at once, walking slowly back toward the parsonage.

"Can't you write to me a little oftener, Carol? I hate to be a bother, but my uncle never writes letters, and I like to know how my friends here are getting along, marriages, and deaths, and just plain gossip. I'll like it very much if you can. I do enjoy a good correspondence with—"

"Do you?" she asked sweetly. "How you have changed! When I was a freshman I remember you told me you received nothing but business letters, because you didn't want to take time to write letters, and—"

"Did I?" For a second he seemed a little confused. "Well, I'm not crazy about writing letters, as such. But I'll be so glad to get yours that I know I'll even enjoy answering them."

Inside the personage gate they stood a moment among the rose bushes. Once again she offered her hand, and he took it gravely, looking with sober intentness into her face, a little pale in the moonlight. He noted again the royal little head with its grown-up crown of hair, and the slender figure with its grown-up length of skirt.

Then he put his arms around her, and kissed her warmly upon the childish, unexpecting lips.

A swift red flooded her face, and receding as swiftly, left her pale. Her lips quivered a little, and she caught her hands together. Then sturdily, and only slightly tremulous, she looked into his eyes and laughed. The professor was in nowise deceived by her attempt at light-heartedness, remembering as he did the quick quivering lips beneath his, and the unconscious yielding of the supple body in his arms. He condemned himself mentally in no uncertain terms for having yielded to the temptation of her young loveliness. Carol still laughed, determined by her merriment to set the seal of insignificance upon the act.

"Come and walk a little farther, Carol," he said in a low voice. "I want to say something else." Then after a few minutes of silence, he began rather awkwardly, and David Arnold Duke was not usually awkward:

"Carol, you'll think I'm a cad to say what I'm going to, after doing what I have just done, but I'll have to risk that. You shouldn't let men kiss you. It isn't right. You're too pretty and sweet and fine for it. I know you don't allow it, commonly, but don't at all. I hate to think of anyone even touching a girl like you."

Carol leaned forward, tilting back her head, and looking up at him roguishly, her face a-sparkle.

He blushed more deeply. "Oh, I know it," he said. "I'm ashamed of myself. But I can't help what you think of me. I do think you shouldn't let them, and I hope you won't. They're sure to want to."

"Yes," she said quietly, very grown-up indeed just then, "yes, they do. Aren't men funny? They always want to. Sometimes we hear old women say, 'Men are all alike.' I never believe it. I hate old women who say it. But—are they all alike, professor?"

"No," he said grimly, "they are not. But I suppose any man would like to kiss a girl as sweet as you are. But men are not all alike. Don't you believe it. You won't, then, will you?"

"Won't believe it? No."

"I mean," he said, almost stammering in his confusion, "I mean you won't let them touch you."

Carol smiled teasingly, but in a moment she spoke, and very quietly. "P'fessor, I'll tell you a blood-red secret if you swear up and down you'll never tell anybody. I've never told Lark—well, one night, when I was a sophomore—do you remember Bud Garvin?"

"Yes, the tall fellow with black hair and eyes, wasn't he? In the freshman zoology class."

"Yes. Well, he took me home from a party. And Bud, well—he put his arm around me, and—maybe you don't know it, professor, but there's a big difference in girls, too. Now some girls are naturally good. Prudence is, and so's Lark. But Fairy and I—well, we've got a lot of the original Adam in us. Bud's rather nice and I let him—oh, just a little, but it made me nervous and excited. But I liked it. Prudence was away, and I hated to talk to Lark that night, so I sneaked in Fairy's room and asked if I might sleep with her. She said I could, and told me to turn on the light, it wouldn't disturb her. But I was so hot I didn't want any light, so I undressed as fast as I could and crept in. Somehow, from the way I snuggled up to Fairy, she caught on. I was out of breath, really I was ashamed of myself, but I wasn't just sure then whether I'd ever let him put his arm around me again or not. But Fairy turned over, and began to talk.

"She said that once, when she was fifteen, one of the boys at Exminster kissed her good night. And she didn't mind it a bit. But father was putting the horses in the barn, and he came out just in time to see it; it was a moonlight night. After the boys had gone, father hurried and took Fairy indoors for a little talk, just the two of them alone. He said that in all the years he and my mother were married, every time he kissed her he remembered that no man but he had ever touched her lips, and it made him happy. He said he was always sort of thanking God inside, whenever he held her in his arms. He said nothing else in the world made a man so proud, and glad and grateful, as to know his wife was all his own, and that even her lips had been reserved for him like a sacred treasure that no one else could share. He said it would take the meanest man on earth, and father thinks there aren't many as mean as that, to go back on a woman like that. Fairy said she burst out crying because her husband wouldn't ever be able to feel that way when he kissed her. But father said since she was so young and innocent, and it being the first time, it wouldn't really count. Fairy swore off that minute—never again! Of course, when I knew how father felt about mother, I wanted my husband to have as much pleasure in me as father did in her, and Fairy and I made a solemn resolve that we would never, even 'hold hands,' and that's very simple, until we got crazy enough about a man to think we'd like to marry him if we got a chance. And I never have since then, not once."

"Carol," he said in a low voice, "I wish I had known it. I wouldn't have kissed you for anything. God knows I wouldn't. I—I think I am man enough not to have done it anyhow if I had only thought a minute, but God knows I wouldn't have done it if I had known about this. You don't know how—contemptible—I feel."

"Oh, that's all right," she said comfortingly, her eyes glowing. "That's all right. We just meant beaux, you know. We didn't include uncles, and fathers, and old schoolteachers, and things like that. You don't count. That isn't breaking my pledge."

The professor smiled, but he remembered the quivering lips, and the relaxing of the lithe body, and the forced laughter, and was not deceived.

"You're such a strange girl, Carol. You're so honest, usually, so kind-hearted, so generous. But you always seem trying to make yourself look bad, not physically, that isn't what I mean." Carol smiled, and her loving fingers caressed her soft cheek. "But you try to make folks think you are vain and selfish, when you are not. Why do you do it? Everyone knows what you really are. All over Mount Mark they say you are the best little kid in town."

"They do!" she said indignantly. "Well, they'd better not. Here I've spent years building up my reputation to suit myself, and then they go and shatter it like that. They'd better leave me alone."

"But what's the object?"

"Why, now, p'fessor," she said, carefully choosing her words, "you know, it's a pretty hard job living up to a good reputation. Look at Prudence and Fairy and Lark. Everyone just naturally expects them to be angelically and dishearteningly good. And if they aren't, folks talk. But take me now. No one expects anything of me, and if once in a while I do happen to turn out all right by accident, it's a sort of joyful surprise to the whole community. It's lots more fun surprising folks by being better than they expect, than shocking them by turning out worse than they think you will."

"But it doesn't do you any good," he assured her. "You can't fool them. Mount Mark knows its Carol."

"You're not going?" she said, as he released her hand and straightened the collar of his coat.

"Yes, your father will chase me off if I don't go now. How about the letters, Carol? Think you can manage a little oftener?"

"I'd love to. It's so inspiring to get a letter from a five-thousand-dollars-a-year scientist; I mean, a was-once. Do my letters sound all right? I don't want to get too chummy, you know."

"Get as chummy as you can," he urged her. "I enjoy it."

"I'll have to be more dignified if you're going to McCormick. Presbyterian! The Presbyterians are very dignified. I'll have to be formal from this on. Dear sir: Respectfully yours. Is that proper?"

He took her hands in his. "Goodby, little pal. Thank you for coming out, and for telling me the things you have. You have done me good. You are a breath of fresh, sweet air."

She moved her fingers slightly in his hand, and he looked down at them. Then he lifted them and looked again, admiring the slender fingers and the pink nails.

"Don't look," she entreated. "They're teaching me things. I can't help it. This spot on my thumb is fried egg, here are three doughnuts on my arm—see them? And here's a regular pancake." She pointed out the pancake in her palm, sorrowfully.

"Teaching you things, are they?"

"Yes, I have to darn. Look at the tips of my fingers, that's where the needle rusted off on me. Here's where I cut a slice of bread out of my thumb! Isn't life serious?"

"Yes, very serious." He looked thoughtfully down at her hands again as they lay curled up in his own. "Very, very serious."

"Goodby."

"Goodby." He held her hand a moment longer, and then turned suddenly away. She watched until he was out of sight, and then slipped upstairs, undressed in the dark and crept between the covers. Lark apparently was sound asleep. Carol giggled softly to herself a few times, and Lark opened one eye, asking, "What's amatter?"

"Oh, such a good joke on p'fessor," whispered Carol, squeezing her twin with rapture. "He doesn't know it yet, but he'll be so disgusted with himself when he finds it out."

"What in the world is it?" Lark was more coherent now.

"I can't tell you, but you'll certainly scream if you ever do know it."

"You can't tell me?" Lark was wide awake, and quite aghast.

"No, I truly can't."

Lark drew away from the encircling arm with as much dignity as could be expressed in the dark and in bed, and sent out a series of deep breaths, as if to indicate that snores were close at hand.

Carol laughed to herself for a while, until Lark really slept, then she buried her head in the pillow and her throat swelled with sobs that were heavy but soundless.

The next morning was Lark's turn for making the bed. And when she shook up Carol's pillow she found it very damp.

"Why, the little goose," she said to herself, smiling, "she laughed until she cried, all by herself. And then she turned the pillow over, thinking I wouldn't see it. The little goose! And what on earth was she laughing at?"

CHAPTER IX.

Jerry Junior.

For some time the twins ignored the atmosphere of solemn mystery which pervaded their once so cheerful home. But when it finally reached the limit of their endurance they marched in upon their aunt and Fairy with an admirable admixture of dignity and indignation in their attitude.

"Who's haunted?" inquired Carol abruptly.

"Where's the criminal?" demanded Lark.

"Yes, little twins, talk English and maybe you'll learn something."

"Then, in common vernacular, though it is really beneath us, what's up?"

Fairy turned innocently inquiring eyes toward the ceiling. "What, indeed?"

"Oh, don't try to be dramatic, Fairy," counseled Lark. "You're too fat for a star-Starr."

The twins beamed at each other approvingly at this, and Fairy smiled. But Carol returned promptly to the charge. "Are Jerry and Prudence having domestic difficulties? There's something going on, and we want to know. Father looks like a fallen Samson, and—"

"A fallen Samson, Carol! Mercy! where did you get it?"

"Yes, kind of sheepish, and ashamed, and yet hopeful of returning strength. Prudence writes every day, and you hide the letters. And Aunt Grace sneaks around like a convict with her hand under her apron. And you look as heavy-laden as if you were carrying Connie's conscience around with you."

Aunt Grace raised her eyebrows. Fairy hesitated, nodded, smiled. Slowly then Aunt Grace drew one hand from beneath her apron and showed to the eagerly watching twins a tiny, hand-embroidered dress. They stared at it, fascinated, half frightened, and then looked into the serious faces of their aunt and sister.

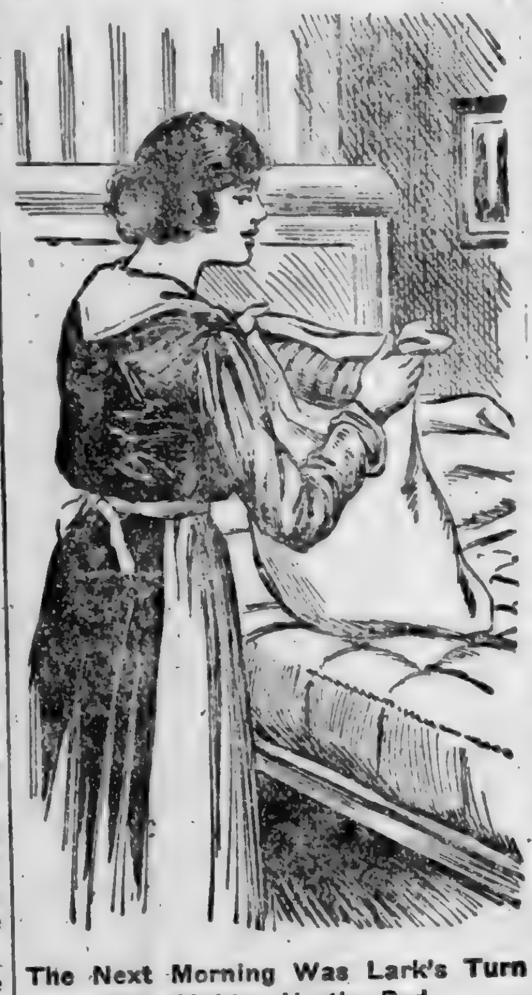
"I—I don't believe it," whispered Carol. "She's not old enough."

Aunt Grace smiled.

"She's older than mother was," said Fairy.

Lark took the little dress and examined it critically. "The neck's too small," she announced critically. "Nothing could wear that."

"We're using this for a pattern," said Fairy, lifting a yellowed, much-worn garment from the sewing basket. "I wore this, and so did you and so did Connie—my lovely child."



The Next Morning Was Lark's Turn For Making Up the Bed.

Carol rubbed her hand about her throat in a puzzled way. "I can't seem to realize that we ever grew out of that," she said slowly. "Is Prudence all right?"

"Yes, just fine."

The twins looked at each other bashfully. Then, "I'll bet there'll be no living with Jerry after this," said Lark.

"Oh, papa," lisped Carol, in a high-pitched voice supposed to represent the tone of a little child. They both giggled, and blinked hard to crowd back the tears that wouldn't stay choked down. Prudence! And that!

"And see here, twins, Prudence has a crazy notion that she wants to come home for it. She says she'll be scared in a hospital, and Jerry's willing to come here with her. What do you think about it?"

The twins looked doubtful. "They say it ought to be done in a hospital," announced Carol gravely. "Jerry could afford it."

The Starr family is setting much store by Jerry Junior, to be, but Mother Nature doesn't tell all her secrets—she enjoys a joke on human beings now and then.

Keep Your House Sweet.

An excellent deodorizer is a little pan of cloves which have been sprinkled with a few drops of spirits of lavender. Put a few bits of charcoal into the bottom of the pan. If charcoal is not convenient some bits of orange peel will do, as they soon turn into charcoal. Sprinkle the cloves liberally on these, and when wanted to perfume the house place on the stove until they begin to smoke. The fumes soon will penetrate the house, and the odor is much like that of the carnation. It will effectively cover the odors of fish, cabbage, turnips and the like.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR JANUARY 20

JESUS AT WORK.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 1:21-45.

GOLDEN TEXT—We must work the works of him that sent me while it is day.—John 9:4.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 4:23-25; Luke 4:16-22, 31-44; Matt. 9:35-48; 11:28-30; Luke 8:1-3.

PRIMARY MEMORY VERSE—And he healed many that were sick.—Mark 1:34.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The power and sympathy of Jesus.

MEMORY VERSE—Gal. 6:2.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus meeting human needs.

At the risk of repetition we will once more call attention to the new plan of Sunday-school lessons. Its characteristics are: First, the uniform teaching. A general lesson title and the same general Scripture passages as the basis of study for all grades. One Golden text for all, although frequently a devotional Scripture lesson and particular text which is intended for the opening worship of the school or for departments of the school, with additional scriptural material for the use of teachers of the various grades. Second, the grades and ages. The grades recognized are: Primary, pupils from six to eight inclusive; junior, nine to eleven or twelve inclusive; intermediate boys and girls, twelve or thirteen to seventeen inclusive; senior or young people, eighteen to twenty-four; adults, twenty-five and upwards. Beginners are not included in these lessons, as they have been provided for in the beginners' lessons of the graded courses. Third, the graded teachers. Different lesson topics or titles as adapted to the different grades. Again, memory verses for the various grades. Additional scriptural material intended especially for the graded lesson writers and teachers. Sometimes the lesson text for a certain grade is simply a small portion of the uniform or general Scripture passage for that day.

The first six months of this year will be devoted to the Gospel of Mark. Every syllable will be covered during the course. Then there is to be a three months course of study in the Christian life on such vital topics as: The Beginning of a Christian Life, Reading God's Word, Praying to God, Obeying God, Growing Stronger, Speaking for Christ, Conquering Evil, etc., apparently disconnected, but really a vitally related course on topics dealing with Christian living.

The Lesson for Today.

I. The Man of the Unclean Spirit (vv. 21-27). Jesus was teaching in the synagogue, and the results were far different from those in Capernaum or Nazareth. (See Luke 4:16-30.) But as always, evil is present with good, and evil always recognizes true piety, hence those present recognized that a God-sent man with a God-given message was speaking. Sunday-school teachers should also speak with authority, for we are as "the oracles of God." (I Peter 4:11.) Notice Christ's power over spiritual evil. (vv. 23-27.) Demoniacal possession, we are told, is quite common today in China and other heathen lands. The terror of this demon at the words of Christ may suggest how evil men will feel when Christ shall come again. As always, evil desires to be "let alone," but Christ would not let him alone. The demon did not want to come out, but he was helpless before the power of Christ and had to come, and in coming he made himself so felt that the people were "all amazed." Neither astonishment nor amazement, however, is conversion.

II. Peter's Mother-in-Law (vv. 28-34. In this next scene we have one of the homes wherein Jesus manifested his power over physical or bodily illness. Notice Christ was abiding with his own loved ones. Here is an example on the part of Christ of how to do personal work. Also an example and a testimony that service is a testimony of gratitude. The fact that this one was healed and that she began at once to serve, is also a testimony to the fact of the cure. There was sickness in that home, not "error of mortal mind," and they did what was best—brought the sick one to Jesus. Again in verse 30 is this keyword of Mark's Gospel, "straightway." Jesus could heal at a distance (John 4:50-53), but he liked to come straight up to the afflicted one. Notice he took her by the hand. This, too, is a lesson for us. The gospel of a handclasp is too often neglected. The "taking-by-the-hand" religion is much needed in our churches today. Notice he also "raised her up." People need to be lifted today. It is not enough to command them to rise; we must also help them to arise. Then it was that "the fever left her." Sickness, as well as demons, gave way before the Lord.

The concluding scene of this day (vv. 32-35) is remarkable and presents a vivid and beautiful picture. "At even when the sun did set" (v. 32) they brought unto him "all" that were diseased. While all were gathered at the door, not all were healed, for the record says, "many were healed." We read, "many are called, but few chosen." All that city was gathered that eventide about Peter's door (v. 23), but the sad part of it was that not all received the healing touch of Christ. They had had a wonderful Sabbath day. They had seen proof of the power of the Master.

TWO KINDS OF WAR JOBS

Not Always Quite Safe to Believe a Man Not in Khaki to Be a Slacker.

A youthful volunteer, stationed at one of the great military camps not far from New York, accosted brusquely a civilian carrying a tennis racquet.

"Tennis, eh?" he said, scornfully. "Why don't you get a rifle?"

The man with the racquet looked at him thoughtfully, without anger. "I don't blame you for being a bit cocky," he replied at last. "If I were in your place I'd be the same way. How would you like to be staying at home? I have a wife and two little boys and a mother and a sister—and my two brothers have gone to France. I've got to stay at home. GOT to—do you get that?"

Dodd's Kidney Pills Relieve After 20 Years' Suffering

Mrs. James Dotz, of Zanesville, O., is one of thousands of people who in the past 40 years have been relieved of the agonies of kidney trouble by taking Dodd's Kidney Pills. Only recently we received an unsolicited letter from Mrs. Dotz, which reads as follows:

"For twenty long years I suffered with heart disease and bladder inflammation. I had frequent chills, cramps in the muscles and suffered from headache and backache. I was often dizzy and had flashes of light and floating specks before my eyes. I could get no help until I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Then I began to improve right away and six boxes of these Pills completed the cure.

"My little boy also had kidney trouble and was cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I hope thousands of others suffering as I have, hear of your wonderful remedy."

Mighty few people realize in time that Kidney Trouble is making its advances upon their health. They put off treatment—they say, "Oh, I'll be all right in a day or two." And the malady tightens its grip. Result: Bright's Disease, hospital treatment, doctor's bills—often death.

Stamps Replace Pennies in Stores.

In view of the increasing shortage of pennies, a movement to give postage stamps as change has been inaugurated in Minneapolis department stores. Several stores reported that they had started such a plan and that it was working successfully. Shortage of pennies in the Northwest has become so acute that bankers in small towns have declared an embargo on coppers, according to Minneapolis bankers. Repeated pleas to the subtreasury in Chicago have been made by local banks, but their requests for pennies have met with little or no response.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Catarrhal Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Catarrhal Deafness, and that is by a constitutional remedy. HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE acts through the Blood on the Mucous Surfaces of the System. Catarrhal Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result. Unless the inflammation can be reduced and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing may be destroyed forever. Many cases of Deafness are caused by Catarrh, which is an inflamed condition of the Mucous Surfaces.

ONE HUNDRED DOLLARS for any case of Catarrhal Deafness that cannot be cured by HALL'S CATARRH MEDICINE.

Reached Limit of Endurance.

Provoked to an impatience that was little less than monumental because of the ceaseless reports of unimportant news of the enemy's doings, an English army officer recently could restrain himself no longer. "The enemy is continuing to fortify the coast, sir," said the subaltern. "I don't care if they fiftify it," roared the officer; "it'll make no difference."

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

About the "Bug House"

nown in institutions like East-Haven were many whose mind had one astray on religion. One queer aracter stands out above them all, for he was ever getting off odd remarks. One night, he was arranging his bed preparatory to retiring. All at once, he turned to those about him in the dormatory. "Boys," he said "when I get my bed fixed to my liking, I am going to have a word of prayer. I don't think it will do a d—d bit of good, but God can't say I haven't done my part." Another time, he was singing "Here, Lord, I give myself away," etc. He stopped, chuckled and added: "The Lord didn't get a hell of a sight when I gave myself away."

There is one whom I see every day who has a queer hallucination. He can't take because God Almighty will not let him say anything but "Chicago." I know God Almighty loves me," he says, "even if He does set and spit tobacco juice on me all day. Chicago." One evening, he was taking a bath while I was standing nearby. When about half done, he got out of the tub and came up to me, looking as serious as if he were on nis way to be hanged. "God Almighty never revenges God Almighty's revenge. Chicago." Three times within that one bath he came to me and repeated those words.

I shall never forget "Klondike." e gave him the name of the famous gold field because of the richness of his clothes, particularly his vest front, which was rich with the accumulated drippings of many meals. That one garment, if boiled, would have had the strength, but not the savor, of gallons of beef tea. Once, I asked him where his home was. "I don't know," he replied mournfully. "It used to be in Wolf Lake; but they have made a new map of Indiana since then and moved Wolf Lake, and I don't know where it is."

I could write indefinitly about queer patients, from Bradt, whose 'backbone was gone and whose ribs rattled around inside of him and hurt" to Joe—poor Joe. Joe was in a railroad wreck and mind and body are wrecked in consequence. The man has become a child. "Sunday I'll be out of here —down by the river with Bessie—hundred shoes–gold watch–seegars and schnaps." This he says over and over. He has a wife and two daughters—Katie and Bessie; but Bessie is always with him. "Joe," he says to himself, "Bessie wants you down by the river." Bessie came to see him recently. "I know you," he said; but never called her by name. He asked her to play for him, and it was a pleasing sight to see him go with her to the piano. From the time he first met her, his arm had been about her and he kept her within his embrace as they went. He sat beside her while she played and sang—eager, intent, rapturously enjoying every note that came from her hand or from her lips. The greatest prima donna in the world, accompanied by the most skilled pianist, would not have moved Joe. Bessie played—Bessie sang—Joe was ecstatic. The father's love for his favorite child was revealed. "Pretty soon, Bessie get married," said Joe afterward. Poor fellow! Bessie's young husband was with her and as proud of her as was Joe; and, between you and me, I don't blame him, for Bessie is a sweet, winsome young lady. Poor Joe!

There is much more that I could write—this letter is only the beginning; but I must close.

WAR TALKS

By UNCLE DAN

Number Five

Jimmie and a German Boy Clash—Must Do Three Things to Save Country.

It was a warm evening, so Uncle Dan went out to a lawn seat under the spreading branches of the great tree that suggested the farm's name of Oak Hill. Billie and Jimmie had been laying for him, so Uncle Dan was captured by the boys on short order.

"Say, Uncle Dan," Billie began. "We had a red-hot argument at school yesterday with Carl Newman. Carl said that German schools were miles ahead of our schools and that no one could come up to the educated German. Well, Jimmie got hot under the collar and handed it back to him good and plenty. Jimmie said if their education taught them to torpedo Lusitanias, sink hospital ships, murder hundreds of women and children, make slaves of the Belgians, poison wells, destroy fruit trees and commit all sorts of crimes, then we did not want that kind of education here. What do you think about it, Uncle Dan? I told Jimmie you spent a lot of time in Europe and knew all about schools, so give us your opinion."

"Well," replied Uncle Dan, deliberately, "the German schools are very thorough; they furnish exceedingly valuable and practical instruction. The industrial training given there is probably the best to be found. The schools as a whole, however, in my opinion, appeal to the head only, and never to the heart. The aim and trend is to make the individual blindly submissive to the Prussian plan of world dominion; they teach that it is the destiny of Germany to rule the world, and that to the glory and advance of Germany, in this plan, all things must give way; that the kaiser as head of the state, can do no wrong if he carries forward the plan of world control. Some of the greatest teachers and preachers even defend and justify her heartless crushing of Belgians and the many other atrocious crimes she has committed in this war. Thank God, our American education reaches both the head and the heart. It is an education with a soul, and we must maintain the high ideals we have fixed. In a word, in Germany, the people are taught that they exist for the government,–while here the government exists to serve the people."

"Just wait a minute," interrupted Billie. Say that over again slowly, so I can write it down."

Uncle Dan, smilingly, complied.

Billie exclaimed: "Now, we will hand that nut out for Carl to crack. Carl, you know," continued Billie, "has a very smart father who keeps him posted on the German arguments. Carl said our government was only an experiment anyway; that it would not last twenty years, and that it might burst up any old time. Jimmie asked him if Germany was so mighty good, why they did not go back there to live."

"Our government will go on forever, won't it, Uncle Dan?"

"Now," said Uncle Dan, "you are raising a big question, and one that has troubled me for years. Our government is still in the experimental stage; in fact, it is the greatest experiment ever undertaken, and if popular government is to be successful, a few things must be done, otherwise, to paraphrase the great Lincoln, the government of the people, by the people and for the people, will perish. It is my firm conviction," said Uncle Dan, in a very impressive manner, "that if our country is to go on, as we hope and pray, we must very quickly do at least three things, and I will name them in the order of importance as it appears to me:

"First, adopt compulsory universal military training of all young men physically fit before they reach the age of twenty years.

"Next, require that every foreigner who comes here to live must, within a reasonable time, say a year, declare his intention of becoming an American citizen and take the necessary steps to do so, thereby, from that moment, assuming all the obligations of citizenship of our country, and that means he must defend our flag upon equal terms with our native born, and if he is not willing to do this, he should be sent back from whence he came."

"That's the stuff," exclaimed Billie.

"And, finally, enact such legislation as will make voting compulsory. Popular government is based upon the participation of all and the rule of the majority, and democracy cannot continue and be successful unless we live up to the spirit of the institution.

"The first step, however, is the passing of the Chamberlain bill for universal military training. If you will get the leading citizen, and especially the editor of your paper, to write personal letters to your congressman and both senators, urging their support, it will help enormously.

"I see by the morning papers," said Uncle Dan, "that the Rotary clubs of the entire country, the livest, most efficient organization to be found, have unanimously decided to get back of the Chamberlain bill and give it loyal and enthusiastic support. They will work with the Universal Military Training league to accomplish this important piece of legislation, which will do more than anything else to make us a real nation with a common viewpoint, bring us back to sane living, and teach us the patriotism of service."

Postponed.

The War Conference as billed for Jan. 22 at Auburn, has been called off by the Council as they are unable to make the necessary arrangements for the meeting due to everything being hindered by the heavy snow. The announcement will be made later.

New Suits in Court.

A suit for $350 attorney's fees has been filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Howard Bennihghoff of Fort Wayne against the estate of Orlin Wildeson.

Mr. Benninghoff says that on January 5, 1917, he was employed by John J. Wildeson, and Ethel Ruth Wildeson, the only children and direct heirs of Orlin Wildeson, as their attorney in contesting their father's will and a deed by which he had conveyed to his housekeeper, Jane Patterson, his real estate valued at $2,400, and practically all of his personal property valued at $1,200. Jane Patterson also filed a claim for $2,000 as housekeeper for Orlin Wildeson, but that Mr. Benninghoff succeeded in getting her to compromise all of her claims for $400.

Mr. Benninghoff says he also acted as attorney for the administrator of the estate, John J. Wildeson.

Mr. Benninghoff says there has been trouble in agreeing upon a reasonable fee and that he believes the court should rule upon the case.

A new suit in the DeKalb circuit court has been brought by William L. Wallace against Harrison Enzor and C. M. Enzor for enforcement of a mechanic's lien. Mr. Wallace claims a bill contracted by the defendents for repairing a barn has not been paid and a judgment of $50 is asked, including a $25 attorney's fee. Edgar W. Atkinson is attorney for the plaintiff.

The ministers of the 14 northern counties of Indiana will meet in a Joint Council at South Bend on January 28-29-30. Revs. Spayd and Mumma are arranging to attend.

Frank Curie desires that the fellow who helped himself to a portion of a shock of fodder from his field Monday evening, come back and he can have the balance of the shock.

The Frank E. Johnson drain was ordered established by the commissioners. There were no remonstrances and the assessments were approved. Frank Scholes was appointed superintendent of construction, with bond of $200. He was ordered to proceed with the drain.

The suit that was billed for Saturday morning before S. S. Widney, J. P., by A. J. Allen against Frank P. Hart, came to a sudden end, when J. M. Life of Auburn, attorney for Mr. Hart laid the matter before the plaintiff as to their reasons for fighting the case. The amount involved was but $15:00 but Mr. Hart refused to pay as he was not the person who should have made the settlement. A number of witnesses and several jurymen were present ready for the trial.

Mr. H. B. Gerhardt, Sales Mgr. of Lutheran Publishing House of Philadelphia, will be in St. Joe Thursday afternoon and evening. He will display books, magazines and Sunday School supplies and everybody is invited to call at the Lutheran church and examine the same from 1:30 to 4:00 P. M. Mr. Gerhardt will give an address in the evening at 7 o'clock. This is a rare privilege as very few of us can go to the publishing house so its representative and samples are brought to us. Be sure to come and see.

The boys hurried to the fire with buckets and put the fire out without calling for help. Overheated flue was the cause.

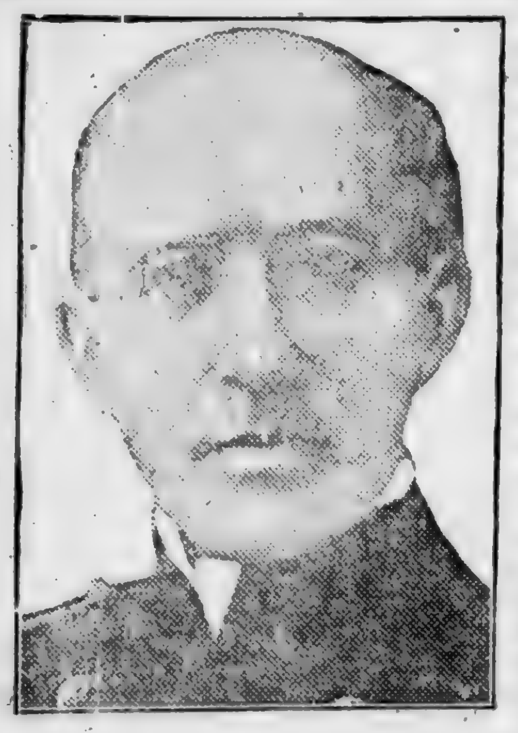
OUT-OF-ORDINARY PEOPLE

WILL SPEED UP SHIPBUILDING



Civil Engineer Frederic R. Harris, chief of the bureau of yards and docks, has been designated by President Wilson to succeed Washington L. Capps, chief naval constructor, as president of the Emergency Fleet corporation.

Civil Engineer Harris is forty-two years old and was appointed to the navy from New York state, January 3, 1903. He is a graduate of Steves institute. His equivalent rank in the navy is that of rear admiral.

The appointment was made at the suggestion of Mr. Daniels, secretary of the navy, following a conference between Mr. Daniels and E. N. Hurley, chairman of the shipping board.

Immediately before the election of Charles Piez of Chicago as vice president of the Emergency Fleet corporation changes were made in the by-laws of the organization by which some of the powers and duties formerly exercised and performed by the president were transferred to a general manager. Mr. Piez was elected to that office at the same time he was elected vice president, and he will exercise absolute supervision of the construction of the steel ships being built by the fleet corporation.

TO DIRECT ALL RAILROADS

Control of the nation's railroads to bring about uniform operation for the war has been assumed by the government, with Secretary McAdoo, still retaining his cabinet post, in charge as director general of railroads.

This decision, the government's solution for the difficulties of the present transportation situation, was announced in a proclamation by President Wilson, effective at noon Friday, December 28, and taking over every railroad engaged in general transportation in continental United States, with its appurtenances, including steamship lines. All lines will be operated as a single system under Director McAdoo.

In a statement issued with the formal proclamation President Wilson declared he would ask congress as soon as it reassembled for legislation guaranteeing:

"First, that the railroad properties will be maintained during the period of federal control in as good repair and as complete equipment as when taken over by the government; and, second, that the roads shall receive a net operating income equal in each case to the average net income of the three years preceding June 30, 1917."

Government backing also will be given new issues of railroad securities so that a market will be readily found.

Railroad officials will retain direct management of the roads and the railroad war board, composed of five railroad heads, will continue actual operation, under Director McAdoo's supervision.

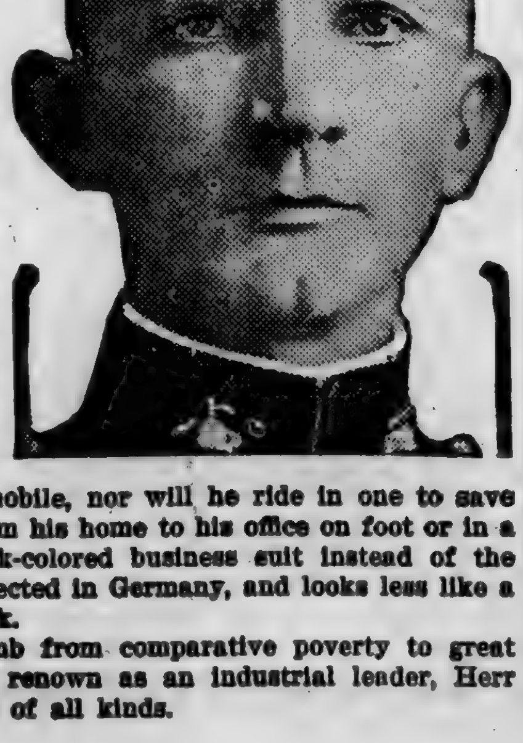
RIGHT MAN IN BIG POSITION

If it should fall to the lot of Brig. Gen. Ira A. Haynes, in command of the field artillery of the National army at Camp Jackson, S. C., to be compelled to perform duties other than those of a military character it is probable he will be found equal to the task, for this expert artilleryman was once in command at Fortress Monroe, Va., and the army thinks that anybody who successfully has commanded at this post can meet any duty requirements that either civil or military life is likely to impose.

Other officers than Ira A. Haynes have been commandants at the big post at the mouth of Chesapeake bay, and it is probable that the rest, like him, can qualify for a mayoralty job, a railroad or a steamship director's job, or that of arbiter of the "elegancies" at any summer or winter resort in the United States.

The commanding officer at Fortress Monroe is the principal of the big artillery school which is attended constantly by some 300 officers of the service. He teaches, he commands the artillery regiment, he is port master, he is the general supervisor of operations of the street railroad which trespasses on government property and he is the regulator of the conduct of residents and of strangers at the post. It is related that at Fortress Monroe not long ago a board of officers presided over by the post commander gave final judgment as to just what kind of dances the young people should be allowed to indulge in.

RANKS HIGH IN GERMANY



One of the most important wheels in the German war machine is August Thyssen, in antebellum days a coal and steel magnate of the first rank, but now, in view of the industrialization of war, general field marshal of the industrial army and collaborator and confidant of Hindenburg. He is small and frail, but powerful as an industrial leader. Notwithstanding the tremendous scope of his work, he clings stubbornly to old-fashioned methods where he himself is concerned.

He will not tolerate a stenographer for his personal use, but writes all his letters by hand. His correspondence is large, much larger than he can attend to, along with his other duties at his office. So he takes what is left over home with him to his only luxury, his castle home near Kettwig, and after dinner finishes it if it takes until the wee small hours of the morning.

Despite his enormous wealth, he has never personally owned an automobile, nor will he ride in one to save his own time. He goes and comes from his home to his office on foot or in a street car. He wears a modest, dark-colored business suit instead of the formal "morning suit" so generally affected in Germany, and looks less like a multimillionaire than the average clerk.

From the very outset of his climb from comparative poverty to great riches, and, above all, to very great renown as an industrial leader, Herr T[illegible] has steadfastly refused titles of all kinds.

What Can We Do?

The Work of School Children and Youths.

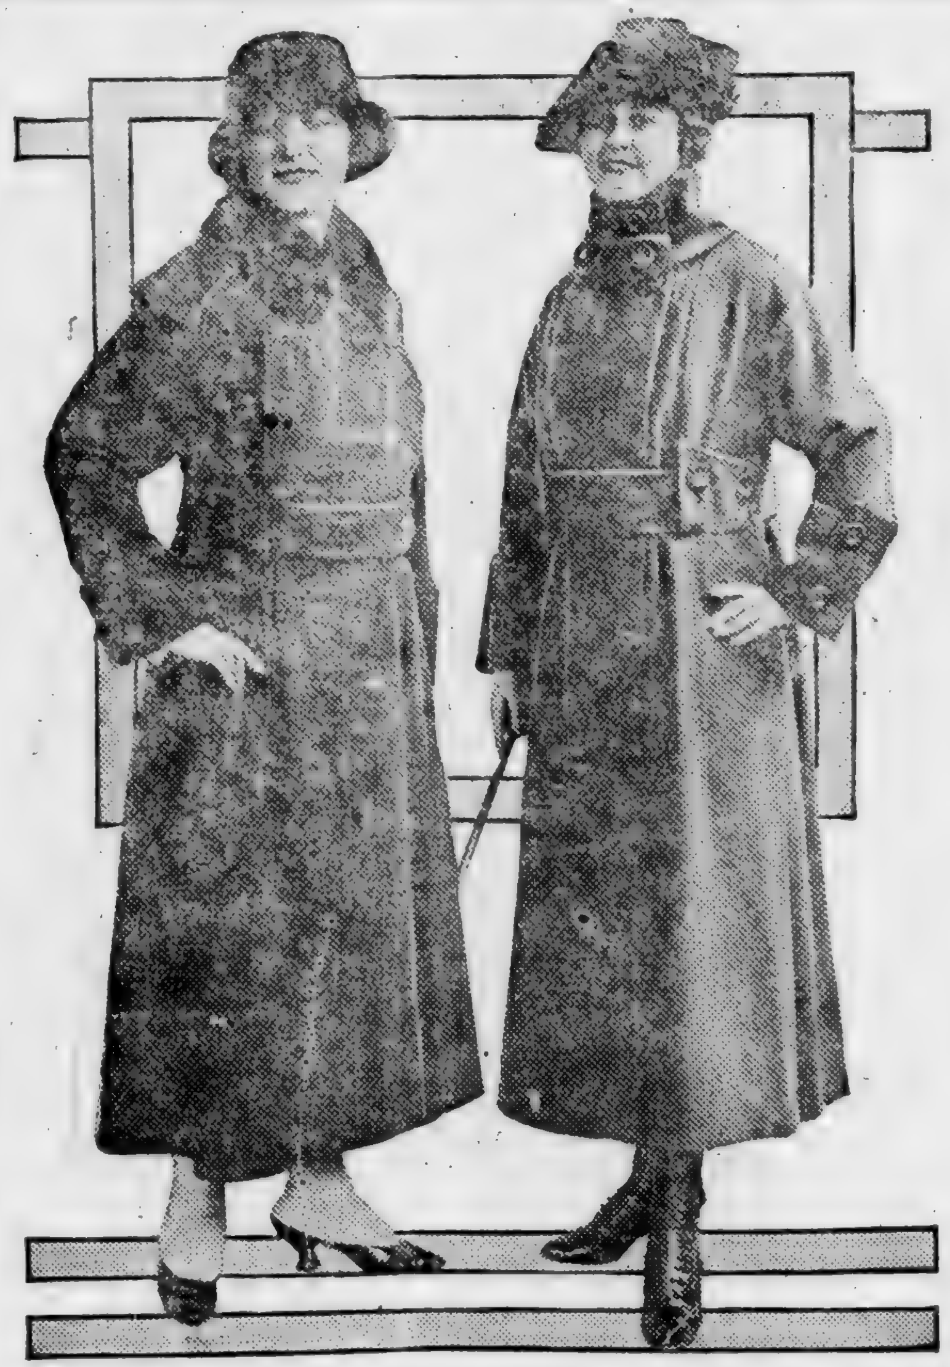
Above is the picture of a lad wearing a knitted sweater, helmet and long-wristed mits of the regulation sort made for the soldiers. He has joined the ranks of knitters for the Red Cross and will occupy himself, during his spare time from school duties, with this and other work that he is able to do for the benefit of our fighting men. When the spring comes it is planned to give thousands of youths from fifteen to twenty-one, work in the fields and gardens. In the meantime boys big and little are knitting, making trench torches, canvassing for yearly members of the Red Cross and proving themselves "men among men" in war work.

Helmets, mitts and scarfs are usually knitted, but women who are unfamiliar with knitting and accustomed to the crochet hook, may make equally good ones. A clever method of joining the knitted sweater (when it is finished) along the sides has been introduced by some resourceful mind lately. Yarn in a contrasting color is used for sewing the straight edges together so that these stitches and no others may be cut, in case it is necessary to open the seams to take the sweater off, when its wearer is wounded. This saves the sweater for future use. But however carefully all these garments are made they will wear out and we must all stick to our knitting for some time to come.

Another item of comfort for the soldiers, that disappears like snow under the sun, is the needed trench torch. Millions of these have already been made by school children and millions more must be made. Then there are the caps, bootees and other garments school girls are making successfully. In planning the work of the school children for 1918 it must be given variety.

Boys and girls did some efficient work in selling bonds for the second Liberty loan and not many of them will return quite empty handed if they take up work in the campaign for new members to the Red Cross. Some of them seem to have such an especial aptitude for this work, grown-ups hate to turn down the young enthusiasts.

Trench Coats Occupy Fashion's Salient.



Just as we came to the conclusion that there would be no new departure in styles for the midwinter coat, the "trench coat" breezed in and made an instantaneous success with the younger set. Its name bespoke an interest in it and the coat repays this interest. It is only in details of finishing that it differs from many other of the winter's successful models. It is the sort of comfortable, practical affair that commends itself for general wear, to the active young woman who goes everywhere. But it has a style of its own with a snappy military flavor.

Even though it reaches to the shoetops, the trench coat contrives to be trim looking with its wide flat box plait down the front. The belt, of the material, slips through upturned flaps at each side, which are fastened down with big bone buttons. The deep cuffs, that are of uneven width, overlap at the edges and an important button stands guard on each of these. The collar is of the snuggling variety that has won the devotion of the fashionable. It is immensely becoming and comfortable. This garment may be developed in any of the plain, soft coatings that have made this a most successful coat season.

Content to bear comparison with the trench coat, another popular model presents itself in the picture. It also has several interesting points to be considered with yoke and sleeves cut in one, double collar and huge buttons. The collar of cloth amounts to a small cape and the collar of fur is planned so that it may be brought up about the throat and chin in the approved manner when its wearer decides to cuddle down into it. The deep cuffs and belt are of cloth like the coat, the latter fastened with two of the large buttons, making assurance doubly sure. These two very sensible models probably finish the story of coats for this winter—in a season of excellent styles they play a creditable part.

A Unique Camisole.

White or light-colored Italian silk stockings, worn at the heels or toes, may be used for a "dainty camisole" by removing the feet and cutting the upper parts along the back seam. Use lace three inches wide for the top of the camisole, also to join the two pieces of silk together in the back. Ribbon for shoulder straps, adds to make it very attractive.

Changeable Velvet.

Lovely handbags are now made of dark changeable velvet—purple and black, blue and green and other combinations of dark shades. The velvet is mounted on silver frames.

Scarfs Pinned to Coiffures.

Evening scarfs of printed net are also spangled with tiny dots and worn as are the plain maline scarfs, pinned to the coiffure.

DRINKING AMONG SCHOOLBOYS.

Some time ago a schoolmaster of Cologne, astonished at the poor work done on Mondays by the 54 boys in his class, questioned them as to the manner in which Sunday had been spent. He learned that 19 had spent the evening before in some cafe or beer garden, that 20 had taken wine, 24 beer and 19 brandy; 17 had had both wine and beer, 14 had had wine, beer and brandy, ten had been very tipsy and eight had been nauseated.

Doctor Boyer of Vienna requested a certain number of school directors to divide their 591 pupils into three categories: Good, adequate and inadequate. Then, with their aid, he divided these into five classes: (1) Those to whom alcoholic drinks were unknown; (2) those who drank occasionally; (3) those who drank beer once a day; (4) those who drank it twice daily; (5) those who drank it thrice. The results were as follows:

	Good Pct.	Adequate Pct.	Inadequate Pct.
1.	41.8	49.2	9.0
2.	34.1	56.6	9.5
3.	27.8	58.4	13.7
4.	24.9	57.7	18.3
5.	24.9	33.3	66.6

Whence the conclusion that the water-drinker is almost always at least among the adequate, if not among the good, scholars.

THE NATIONAL AMENDMENT.

"If the proposed amendment should be adopted by three-fourths of the states," says United States Senator Sheppard, speaking of national prohibition, "the traffic in intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes would be forbidden anywhere within the American republic. Prohibition would be imbedded in the organic law of the nation. Is it not time that the federal government, the largest social unit we have, should take a hand when the traffic in a poisonous drug is taking from the earnings of the American people six times as much as they expend for bread, ten times as much as they expend for furniture, and twice as much as they expend for clothing? As I view the matter," concluded Senator Sheppard, "the member of either branch of the American congress who denies the power of amendment to the states, especially an amendment which vast numbers of the people desire the states to consider, violates [illegible] principles both of the constitution and of popular government, repudiates the fundamental rights of the states and overturns the two most sacred privileges the people possess, the privileges of referendum and of petition."

The man who is not willing that the question of national prohibition be submitted to a poll of the states is not traveling the path of safe democracy.

SUPREME MILITARY NECESSITY.

"If we are to pour out our money and blood we must insist that we shall have a fair return for the price we pay. How can it be done? Only in one way that is big enough to be named in the same breath with Europe's gain—the abolition of the liquor traffic! By nation-wide, bone-dry, rock-ribbed, bomb-proof, never-leak prohibition as the largest possible military preparation and the only adequate compensation for the price we pay. . . . Immediate prohibition is a supreme military necessity, and would mean victory against any nation that remains in partnership with rum. I do not tremble for my country. I do not fear the ultimate result, however long drawn out the conflict; but national prohibition would make assurance doubly sure, accelerate the victory, work blessings upon all, hardships upon none, and pay dividends for eternity when peace shall come. National constitutional prohibition is our one salvation."—Clinton N. Howard.

IN THE NATION'S CAPITAL.

The first Monday after the dry law went into effect in the District of Columbia, Judge Mullowny remarked from the bench: "Just think of it! Monday morning docket usually contained the names of from 40 to 50 persons who had been arrested for intoxication. Today we have two or three persons charged with that offense. It is hard to conceive that such a great change could be brought about in so short a time."

BRANDY BRANDS.

Brandy brands a man as the property of a ranch where everything is red hot. As the cowboy on the ranges knows his master's brand on every steer and rounds them up, so at the final roundup the owner of each branded beast will know and claim his own.

SOBER FIGHTERS.

If we cannot afford to let the liquor trade make drunkards of our soldiers, neither can we afford to let the liquor trade make drunkards of the men who are to raise food for the soldiers.—William J. Bryan.

DRY ZONE AROUND COAL MINES.

Coal operators in the Pittsburgh district, meeting to discuss the fuel situation, declared that liquor selling within five miles of a mine should be prohibited by the president of the United States.

PATHOS IN CHILDISH WISH

Hard That Her Modest Request of Santa Claus Was Not Likely to Be Granted.

A little miss of five, who had been separated from her mother, sisters and brother since the death of her father, was permitted to spend a few days with them a short time ago.

This little girl has everything a childish heart could wish for and more love bestowed on her than most children who are blessed with both parents. She was very happy during her brief visit, but now and then her brave little heart would fail her, and she would cry at the thought of being separated again.

One outburst came after a talk on St. Nicholas and the yuletide. "Mother, does Santa Claus bring everything we ask for?"

"Well, dear, Santa [illegible] to little boys and girls those [illegible] which are most necessary for their happiness. Why, what would you like to have him bring to you this year?"

"Well, mother, all I want this year is you."

Evidently the pained expression on the mother's face caused the child to fear that her wish could not be granted.

"Well, mother, I don't see why he couldn't. He brings babies to some people on Christmas when they ask him to and don't you remember all of the toys he left for us last year?"—Indianapolis News.

Old Newfoundland.

Newfoundland this year celebrates the four hundred and twentieth anniversary of her discovery. In 1497 John Cabot sailed from Bristol on a voyage which was made famous by the finding of Newfoundland. It was not until 1582 that it was formally taken possession of in the name of Queen Elizabeth. Many of the fishing boats from that ancient colony took part in the defeat of the Spanish armada. In the present war Newfoundland has given 10,000 men to the service of Britain.

OLD TYPE OF FARM BARN STILL GOOD

Here is Design That Embodies Many Features Approved by Long Usage.

SHELTER FOR LIVE STOCK

Some of the More Advanced Ideas Relative to Lighting and Sanitation Are Incorporated in the Plans.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building work on the farm, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose three-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

There are a few types of barns which have survived the changes which have taken place during recent years in the farm building field. An advancement in the methods of barn design may affect some of the "old favorites" in that their arrangement is made to conform with the more advanced principles of sanitation, ventilation and lighting, these three subjects being among the most important of those which have been so thoroughly investigated in recent efforts at farm building betterment. However, the tried and proven qualities of some of these barns are always maintained and they are built year after year for the purpose to which service has shown them so well adapted.

The barn shown in the accompanying perspective view is of a type which is familiar to almost every farming district. It may be arranged in a number of ways to serve a variety of purposes. The plan which is illustrated here establishes it as a general barn for wintering beef cattle and to stable several horses. It is 70 by 40 feet in size on the ground with a big storage mow overhead, the same size as the foundation including the stock shed.

This barn was built for a farmer who raised Herefords and also kept a number of mares to raise colts. He wanted a barn to store feed in and to furnish shelter for his Herefords and stabling for the farm bronchos in winter. He wanted an open shed fronting to the south, where the cattle could enjoy the sunshine on warm days and he wanted a stock stable with a feed rack for stormy days and a few stanchions in a separate stable for the cows and calves, where he could feed them according to their special requirements. The arrangement shown fitted into his stock-raising plans so he could keep the breeding stock separate and feed accordingly.

The stable part is built with a solid concrete foundation wall and floor and both the horse and cow stalls are arranged and built according to the best farm building practice. It will be noticed that there are a good many windows placed to light the stables from every direction. Light in a modern stable is one of the most noticeable improvements. Old-fashioned dark, dingy stables were dirty and loaded down with foul air. Purebred, valuable farm animals have caused the change. Building barns to stable animals worth from $100 up is a different proposition from the old buildings that were considered good enough to stable animals worth from $50 down.

The high opening through the shed is the entrance to the barn. This arrangement gives a convenient threshing floor for oats when the crops are heavy and overflow the other barns. Hay settles considerably in a big mow like this before oat harvest and the space may be used to advantage in such emergencies. The oat straw is blown by the stacker back into the far end of the mow to be kept bright and clean for winter feed and bedding.

There is as much money in raising beef cattle as there is in keeping dairy cows. Profits depend upon the man. One farmer knows how to make money by doing a dairy business. Another farmer knows how to breed and feed beef cattle to get big prices. It is not often that one man makes a conspicuous success with both. He is prone to give his best attention to the kind of live stock that he likes best.

A good farm is worth good buildings. Any farm is good that provides a living for the family. Comfortable buildings help to make a poor farm good and a good farm better. Even the land that has been ruined may be brought back to life by the aid of live stock; but first there must be buildings to make the live stock comfortable. Nearly every farm is shy a building or two and most farms need more fencing—fences for range, health and pasture; barns and stables for storage and winter feeding.

Economy in business often means spending money for necessary improvements. If animals require all their feed to keep them alive and warm, then the grain is being burned for fuel while the animals are not bettering their condition. Time may not be much of an object to the animal, but it is to the owner.

We don't really own our land until we have it well fenced. We don't really own our own live stock until we have proper buildings in which to house them. Saving the waste makes the profit. A farm barn is a farm factory. Waste material is a by-product in disguise. What was formerly waste is now worked into saleable merchandise in the manufacturing industries. Farm buildings are farm factories. The soil produces the raw materials which are taken to the farm shops and made into high-priced butter, beef, mutton and pork.

Formerly beef cattle were raised on the open range. It required three or four years to produce a beef steer, because they were left out in the cold to hustle for themselves all winter. The grass was partly covered with snow and occasionally the water was frozen so that animals could neither eat nor drink for days at a time. Mortality among range cattle often reached such figures as 50 per cent and the ones to survive the winter were lighter in the spring than they were in the fall. In a warm stable we can coax a baby beef to weigh a thousand pounds before it is a year old.

Before the time of good farm buildings, grain sold for little money and a great deal of it was wasted between the field and the cash returns. Increase in the value of live stock has changed the whole farming business. When corn is cheap, instead of feeding it into a heating stove, farmers feed it to cattle and hogs.

Factories of all kinds must throw out good machinery that is little the worse for wear, because new processes have been invented and the manufacturer is obliged to keep up with the times. The farmer is effected by similar conditions and must be ready to meet them just as quickly as the manufacturer adjusts himself to changes in his field.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE STORM PARADE.

"Are you ready?" asked old Mr. North Wind.

"We are ready," said all the little breezes.

"How about you, hail drops?"

"We're ready," they said.

"And Prince Sleet, how about you?"

"All ready, Mr. North Wind."

"Then set— Go!" said the north wind. And such a storm as there was. But it was quite the funniest kind of a storm for it seemed to be clear in one place and then all of a sudden the storm continued.

"We'll start," said old Mr. North Wind, "at one end of the city, and we'll give a parade."

The others did not know at first what a storm parade meant, but old Mr. North Wind explained.

"You see," he said, "we'll start to blow and roar and storm at one end of the city. The other end will be perfectly free from the storm, but gradually, little by little, we will work our way right through the city. Ah, won't we have a joke on the earth people! They will say:

"'See the storm! Isn't it strange? It's hailing here, and down the street there is no sign of a storm, not even a snowflake is flying.' And then we'll move on down there."

Mr. North Wind Marched Ahead.

"It's a splendid idea," said Prince Sleet. "I can hardly wait to begin marching."

"Oh," said old King Snow, "must we march? I don't know that I'm very good at marching. I fall most beautifully and I dance about very often before I fall. But as for marching—well, I'm not quite so sure." And he looked rather sad.

"Cheer up, cheer up," said the Storm King. "Old North Wind doesn't care if we don't keep step."

"I should say not," laughed the North Wind, and his laugh was so cold that they all wanted to start right away. They felt like exercising and blowing and snowing.

Prince Sleet was talking with the King of the Clouds and the Hail King. "We'll give them a good time," they all said. "Yes, we'll come down together, rain and hail and sleet. Oh, it will be a gorgeous storm!"

"We're all ready, then, eh?" asked old Mr. North Wind once more.

"We're all ready," they said. And the earth people shivered, sat closer to the fires, and the ones who were outside drew their collars and furs tighter.

"Then—Go!" said old Mr. North Wind. And the storm parade began. In it were the Storm King, King Hail, old King Snow, Prince Sleet, the King of the Clouds, his army of Raindrops the Snowflake children, the Winter Breezes and old Mr. North Wind marched ahead carrying a big stick made out of icicles which he threw up in the air and looked exactly like a drum-major.

Of course the people on the earth could not see him, but they could feel him! Oh, how cold it was! And what a terrific storm!

The city people said that they would not be able to get about and that cars and traffic of all sorts would be delayed.

But the strangest thing of all was the way the storm acted. It began at one end and went straight through the city but only a section at a time. When it had finished storming in one section it went on down a little further to another, while all the parts around were fine and clear.

The evening newspapers in the city said that the storm was "freakish," and one little girl who was riding in a motorcar with her mother said that they seemed to keep pace with the storm straight down through the city. But they managed to escape the very end of it which was the worst of all.

"Now for a good wind-up," said old King Snow as he blew.

"That's a good expression," said old Mr. North Wind. For even though he was the drum-major of the storm the others made suggestions as to how the storm could be made worse.

And they all ended up by blowing, snowing, sleeting, hailing, raining and freezing harder than ever.

"Oh, it was a gorgeous parade," said old Mr. North Wind. "We moved right along just like a regular parade but we had the streets almost to ourselves which is quite different from a regular parade, and extremely superior!"

Success and Failure.

Success is generally due to holding on, and failure to letting go. It depends upon how much pluck and perseverence that word "Decide" contains. "With time and patience the mulberry leaf becomes satin."—Babcock.

War Use of Cattails.

High explosives require so much cotton in their manufacture that experimenters have been casting about for a substance to replace it.

It remained for Charles Goard, a Denver inventor, to discover that the floss of cattails can be substituted for guncotton in the making of ammunition.

Germany, it is reported, has for some time relied upon cattails to take the place of cotton in the manufacture of explosives.

ALL MEN AT HOME SHOULD PREPARE FOR WAR

The first test a man is put thru for either war or life insurance is an examination of his water. This is most essential because the kidneys play a most important part in causing premature old age and death. The more injurious the poisons passing thru the kidneys the sooner comes decay—so says Dr. Pierce of Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., who further advises all people who are past thirty to preserve the vitality of the kidneys and free the blood from poisonous elements, such as uric acid—drink plenty of water—sweat some daily and take Anuric, double strength, before meals.

This An-u-ric is a late discovery of Dr. Pierce and is put up in tablet form, and can be obtained for 60c at almost any drug store. For that backache, lumbago, rheumatism, "rusty" joints, swollen feet or hands, due to uric acid in the blood; Anuric quickly dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. Take a little Anuric before meals and live to be a hundred. Send 10 cents to Dr. Pierce for trial package of Anuric.

First Patriotic Christmas.

A woman's club at South Bend hired a professional story-teller to entertain the children at a Christmas party. The Christmas story of the birth of Christ was told, and the narrator began to quiz the children about the story.

"What did the three wise men see?" she asked.

"They saw the shepherds and the star in the east," said a little girl.

"Very good; and what did they hear?"

"They heard the angels singing," was the answer.

"What did the angels sing?" Nobody seemed to know. Finally a little boy's face brightened and he sprang to his feet and almost shouted: "They sang 'The Star-Spangled Banner'!"—Indianapolis News.

Red Cross Department

About Surgical Dressings

We are still of the opinion that this is one of the most important parts of Red Cross work and calls are still coming for more bandages and dressings. We are glad that we are not going to have a monopoly on the enthusiasm for several ladies have shown concern about this work. Among them is Mrs. Buckingham, who has shown her patriotism by offering the use of her living room, heat furnished free, for a Surgical Dressing Class—when we say offered, we mean offered; for this came to us unsolicited and as unexpected as it was welcome. Mrs. Buckingham does not feel well enough to go to the sewing room and desires to do her part in this way. She and her husband have the hearty thanks of all Red Cross workers. Their home is well situated for this work and they desire to have everybody feel welcome to come. Mrs. Price has completed this course and has samples of all the bandages and dressings that we are asked to make—She asks everyone, who is at all interested, to come to Mrs Buckingham's this Friday evening at 7 o'clock, at which time the work will be fully explained. Remember we said—Everyone.

Our membership is now 390.

DeKalb County Inspector Acknowledge Shipment.

Mrs. Dunkle,
St. Joe, Ind.

Your shipment of Jan. 4th., received. Everything is most satisfactory, including your system of packing which is a great help in checking the contents of boxes. Your chapter is to be congratulated on their work.

Yours Sincerely,
Mrs. John W. Thomson.
Garrett, Ind., Jan. 7.

We have this week received a donation of $8 35 from the Fairview Ladies Aid. We are very glad to receive this nice sum and the ladies have the sincere thanks of all our workers.

It is very gratifying to note the interest concerning the baby layettes. Many individuals have expressed their intentions of helping and the Ladies Aids of the Christian and Lutheran Churches will take up the work. We have not heard the arrangements of the former Society but the latter expects to have their sewing headquarters at the home of Mrs. Mary Bowman. All ladies not affiliating with any other organization are urged to work with them. The Methodist Ladies Aid has not held their meeting yet. We hope the women all over our territory will be able to help.

Knitting for Red Cross.

We have been asked if anyone can take yarn from our Chapter, knit it, and send to any soldier they may desire to supply. No, this is against the rules of the Nat'nl Red Cross and there has been no yarn taken from us under these conditions. The ladies who knit for boys from our territory buy their own yarn, receive thanks and credit directly from the recipients and the transaction is entirely seperate from our organization. No stretch of the imagination can term it "working for the Red Cross". We have no desire whatever to discourage this work for we have such interest and regard for the boys from our Township, as to wish they might each have a complete knitted outfit. But let it be known as private knitting for it is an injustice to our local R. C., to furthur an impression that we are disregarding the rules of the Nat'nl. Red Cross, which are very strict along this line. Whoever contributes to and works for the Red Cross serves humanity in the broadest sense of the term for we leave the distribution to the wisdom and discretion of our Government and the Red Cross, who by their cooperation are able to place the garments where they are most needed—And this method is considered patriotic for in this way, by individual work, we do what we can to make our country safe for this generation and the generations to come. If all efforts terminated in private work only, there would be no Red Cross.

In Society

The second section of the Ladies Literary Club, delightfully entertained the rest of the members at the home of Mrs. J. C Hull, Wednesday evening, January 9. They carried out the idea of "Smiles" throughout the evening. The house being decorated with funny quotations, pictures, etc.

The hostess met the ladies at the door and immediately introduced them to Mr. and Mrs. Grinn, Little Grinn and Miss Giggles. These characters were members of the section dressed in costumes of our grandmothers and grandfathers, which of course made the guests smile. A contest of "Half Smiles" was then conducted, which was won by Mrs. Wm. Stamen. The party was then divided into sections, grin, smile and giggle, each section then did a "funny stunt." The ladies were then conducted into an "Art Gallery of Noted People." The gallery contained old pictures of each member of the club. This was of course amusing for some didn't know their own pictures.

The section then served dainty refreshments.

The guests were Mrs. Jennie Sechler, Mrs. Alice Warner, Miss Shordon and Miss Brown.

They then departed, taking with them the thought:

"Smile a Smile,
While you Smile another Smiles
And soon there's miles and miles
Of Smiles and life's worth while
If you but Smile."

WAR TALKS

By UNCLE DAN

Number Three

How War Methods Have Changed Everybody Must Help.

"Hello, Uncle Dan, Jimmie and I have been waiting for you."

"Sorry if I have kept you long," said Uncle Dan. "Your mother has been telling me how bashful I used to be. She said if a girl spoke to me I would blush to my hair roots. Well, I reminded her of the time your father first came to see her and the joke we played on them, so I guess that will hold her for a while."

Continuing, Uncle Dan said: "You want to talk more about the war, do you? Well, war methods have undergone many changes and they are still changing. No two wars are fought alike. In early times, the weapons were stones, clubs, spears, bows and arrows, swords, etc. In this kind of warfare, victory was with the strong right arm. Men of enormous size and strength were the great warriors. The invention of gunpowder, however, has changed all this. It has enabled men to kill one another at a considerable distance, and do it wholesale. The war, as we know it now, is a combination of chemicals, machinery, mathematical calculations and highly trained men. Just think of it! Airplanes, submarines, armored tanks, or caterpillars, poison gases, and curtains of fire are all used for the first time in this war; and they are destructive beyond anything heretofore known.

"The methods followed by the kaiser and his allies are simply devilish. He must answer in history to the killing of thousands of innocent women and children. He has broken every international law and every rule of warfare; he has bombarded hospitals and undefended cities, sunk Red Cross ships on errands of mercy; he has destroyed cathedrals and priceless treasures of art that can never be replaced; he has made slaves of his prisoners; he has tried to get us into war with Japan; his emmissaries have blown up our ships, burned our factories and fired our forests. He knows no mercy or honor. The most charitable view to take of this blood-thirsty tyrant is that he is crazy.

"One thing is certain," continued Uncle Dan, with great emphasis, "Our liberty, the safety of our homes and our country, and the security of the world demand the speedy and absolute overthrow of the kaiser and crushing out once and forever the reign of Prussian brutality."

"How about the German people," said Billie.

Uncle Dan replied: "The splendid German people were happy, thrifty, prosperous and contented. They have been tricked into war and made to suffer the tortures of the damned; they have been cruelly and systematically deceived. God grant that the real facts may get to them, and if they do, Lord help the kaiser!"

"Of course the allies will win," said Mrs. Graham.

"Probably so," said Uncle Dan. "But if we are to win, we must go the limit. We must check the awful destruction to shipping by the German submarines, or we may not be able to get food and supplies to our own men and to our allies; we must also put hundreds of thousands, and perhaps millions, of first-class soldiers in the battle line.

"Food is the first consideration," Uncle Dan continued. "No army can hold out against hunger. It has been said that food will win the war, and this is largely true. Hence the importance of the farm in the war plans of our country."

Mrs. Graham interrupted by saying: "In view of the importance of farming, don't you think, Daniel, that the farmers ought to be exempted from war service?"

"No, a thousand times no," said Uncle Dan, striking the table so hard to emphasize his protest that he tipped over a vase of flowers. "We must have no class legislation. The duty to serve is the common duty of all, and no class must be relieved of this obligation. The question of exemption must be a personal one and decided by the facts surrounding each case. In no other way can we have a square deal, and to insure this, it is the duty of congress to pass immediately the Chamberlain bill, or some such measure, which is fair to all classes. It would settle all these questions and do it fairly. Safety now and safety hereafter demands such legislation, and let me suggest that you and your friends get busy with your congressman and senators and urge them to prompt action.

"It is time for us to realize that we are not living in a fools' paradise; that this great country of ours cost oceans of blood and treasure and it is only due to the loyalty, sacrifice and service of our forefathers that we have a country, and it is our highest duty to preserve it unimpaired and pass it on to posterity, no matter what the cost may be. Our citizenship and their ancestors came from all parts of the world to make this country a home and enjoy its blessings and opportunities; hence, in the crisis before us, it is the duty of everyone to stand squarely back of our country and be prepared to defend the flag. Everyone in this crisis is either pro-American or pro-German. Great as the country is, there is not room enough for two flags."

Military Training Necessary for Safety and Defense.

"Say, Uncle Dan," said Billie, "Jimmie and I have been looking up about war in the encyclopedia at school. We found that in the war between Germany and France in 1870-71, Germany lost in killed and wounded 28,000 soldiers while France lost about six times as many, and besides that, she lost every battle. We asked Professor Slocum why this was. He said that the German army was highly trained and ably commanded, while the French soldiers were poorly trained; and that their war department was honeycombed with jealousy and politics; that the officers were not much good, and that's why France lost the war and so many men. What do you think about it, Uncle Dan?"

"Well," said Uncle Dan, "Professor Slocum is right. By inefficiency France lost that war, together with two of her best provinces—Alsace and Lorraine—and had to pay a billion dollars indemnity money. France today learned her lesson by that sad experience, so she put in universal military training, and as a result, her soldiers now know how to fight and how to protect themselves. They are losing less men in the war than the Germans. France also put politics out of her war department, so that expert authority, instead of bureaucratic stupidity, now directs the army. The result is, France has one of the best and most efficient armies every assembled, and this shows what thorough training and good leadership means in warfare. This saved France in this crisis, as well as the liberties of the world."

"As war is now conducted, there is no place for an untrained man. A body of 10,000 well trained soldiers properly handled could defeat five times their number of raw recruits and do it every time with comparatively small loss to themselves. Proper training alone will reduce the death and casualty rate one-third of what it otherwise would be, and right here is an unanswerable argument for universal military training.

"Our government has no moral right to force her men into war service without properly training them for it. To do so is simply murder, hence the frantic effort that is now being made to give her soldiers some training before they are sent to the front. If we are to win this war, it will take trained men to do it, and it will take trained men to win any other war that may come upon us in the future. If we must fight, let us fight to win and not to lose."

"That's the stuff," said Billie.

Continuing, Uncle Dan said: "Our government has expended about $300,000,000 to put up cantonments and training stations in order to train the men called by the selective draft. When these men are trained the training stations should be immediately filled with younger men, say those in their nineteenth year, to receive six months of intensive military training along the lines of the Chamberlain bill. This will be of immeasurable benefit to them individually. It will do them more good than any other two years of their whole life; it will make them strong, manly, self-reliant, quick to see and quick to act; it will equip them for a successful life. In short, it will rebuild American manhood and will also give the government a body of trained men to draw from in case it is necessary to defend our flag and country. We must settle this question of universal military training immediately, otherwise these training camps may be demolished. The adoption of universal military training will be notice to the world that from then on we will be prepared to defend ourselves promptly and efficiently, and this will do more to keep us out of war in the future than anything else we could do."

"Do you think, brother," said Mrs. Graham, "that there will ever be another war?"

"I have no doubt about it," said Uncle Dan. "So long as men are selfish, so long as nations are ambitious to acquire territory, so long as population presses and demands more room, so long as there remains a scramble for world trade—so long wars will be. When the time comes that we reach the high plane for which we hope and dream, when all will recognize the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man, then, and then only, will wars cease. When that day comes doors will need no locks, banks will need no vaults to protect their treasures, but that day is a long way off.

"The only safe and sane plan is to be able to defend ourselves at all times. Therefore, every citizen should insist that senators and congressmen shall provide for universal military training, so that never again shall the country be caught so completely unready as this war found us. Fortunately, in this case, our enemy has been held back, so we have had a few months in which to prepare. This advantage probably will never come again. It is however our salvation today.

"Because she was ready, Switzerland is an island of peace in a sea of war. Safety first is good, but safety always is better. In strength there is safety. You never saw a tin can tied to the tail of a bulldog. There is a reason."

Dear Folks:—

This is Sunday morning and I will drop you a line to let you know I am feeling fine as can be. This is sure a fine day. Here the sun does'nt shine every day. We sure soak it up when it does. Hasn't been very cold here yet and they say it doesn't until in Jan, and Feb., but has sure been fine so far.

We had turkey and goose for Thanksgiving. Some were a little late and will probably have them for dinner today. Run across a fellow here who knows Dale McNabb and corresponds with Fern Tarney. Guess you can't get so far but you can run on some acquaintance.

We have a new Y. M., and it sure is find. We make it a general loafing place. Tell the folks not to be afraid to write as we are only allowed a letter each day and can't write to all. With best regards and best wishes to all.

Dear Bros.:—

Having some time this evening after serving supper to three hundred and sixty men, will try and speak a word to all. I received the card of remembrance that the Lodge sent me, but have just found the time to answer it.

I am feeling fine, and I guess army life or the south agrees with me for I have gained 14 pounds since I have been here. Five men, including myself, were chosen by Gen. Treat out of the Thirty-seventh Division to go on detached service to the Base Hospital to instruct the hospital cooks how to save on the rations that are given them.

We have been here just one month and have saved the Hospital $500, but they are still $700 in debt. I do not know how long we will be here, but expect to stay at the Hospital till my regiment leaves for some Eastern port. There is talk in camp now that this Division will be on their way to France by the middle of February.

This Division has had intensive training in bayonet work and how to go "over-the-top" and they are in very good shape.

With Best Wishes,

Dear Father and Mother:—

At last I am in France. As I said, many times I would like to come over, now I am here and am glad of it. Can't tell much about the trip but think of it, I didn't get sea-sick at all. Smooth sailing all the time.

We, the 17th., are going to make a good name for ourselves and the good old U. S. A. while we are here.

Where were you Christmas? We had Christmas service on the boat. Eight months ago today I joined the army. Then or when I transferred to the F. A., I thought I would be here before this time. Never felt better in my life. Write often but don't look for many from me.

Why United States Is Fighting

Evidence of German Duplicity and Aggression That Has Grown Ever Stronger as the Great World Conflict Has Progressed

By BOOTH TARKINGTON

EVERY ordinary man can remember that during his boyhood there was one vital point upon which he always insisted whenever he was threatened with discipline for getting into a fight: "He began it!"

Boys realize that justice rests upon the question, Who was the assailant? And almost every boy has more than once suffered under the sting of an adult injustice which, declining to investigate, punished him for "fighting" when he had been merely defending himself. Of course, self-defense does not consist entirely of warding gestures; for if it did it could not defend. A person attacked must either be beaten or take his choice of running away or of striking back; and if the assailant is the speedier, running away is a mere postponement of being beaten. But spectators of a conflict (especially if they have not noted or comprehended its beginning) almost always take a superior position of disgusted impartiality. "Brutes!" they say. "Fighting! They ought to be ashamed of themselves!"

I remember such a case. A boy friend of mine, an awkward but spirited ten-year-old, was returning alone from an afternoon's skating when a sturdier, shorter boy the same age, opposed his progress, and addressed to him the provocative formula, "Who you lookin' at, you dern fool you?" My friend replied placatively that he wasn't looking at anything, whereupon the stranger demanded hotly: "You call me nothin', do you?" and, striking him suddenly upon the mouth, snatched his skates and turned to make away with them.

Enter the Peacemaker.

My friend managed to trip the little thief, however, and the latter, rising, struck out fiercely, whereupon a fight of some duration took place. It was interrupted by an elderly pedestrian, shocked and indignant. "You scoundrels!" he said. "Fighting! Stop it!" Then for emphasis he struck my friend a sharp blow across the face with an umbrella, and forced his way between the combatants. "But he's got my skates!" my friend cried. "Shame!" was the response. "If I knew your fathers and mothers I'd see that you were both whipped for fighting. Shame!"

My friend tried desperately to dodge around the peacemaker, hoping to recover his skates from the other boy, but he failed, for the elderly man seized him by the collar. "You would, would you? Trying to get at him again, you little beast! No, you don't! I'd teach you to stop fighting when I tell you to!" Thereupon my friend got the shaking of his life, and, though he tried throughout this martyrdom to convince his shaker that he "didn't begin it" and that the other boy had his skates, and was now running away with them, he was unsuccessful in removing the impression that all belligerents are wicked. "There!" said the elderly man, releasing him at last; "let me catch you fighting again and I'll give you a worse one! Go on home! Get out of this neighborhood! I don't want to listen to you!"

So, bloody and dizzy, my friend went on his way, and the elderly man proceeded, convinced that he had conducted himself in a manner beneficial to public morals.

What Every Boy Understands.

Now, as any boy understands that the most important question about any fight is "Who started it?" so any boy also understands that the question next in order and next in importance is "Why did he start it?" Any boy understands that a just peace cannot be made unless it takes these two questions into vital accounts, and that disciplinary measures not founded upon them are arbitrary and unjust and vicious. Any boy understands that a peacemaker or disciplinarian who places both belligerents upon the same plane is not only unjust but, in effect, stupidly partial to the cause of the guilty belligerent—for one belligerent is guilty.

When the war began in August, 1914, all those neutrals who wished to understand the right and wrong of the matter, that their opinions might not be unjust, began to seek every source of information which might help them to learn who started it and why. At first—as the sources of information were not immediately at hand—there seemed room for argument, though on the face of things it was apparent that Austria first declared a war upon Serbia and Germany then declared war upon Russia and France. We saw plainly that Serbia had been begging and squirming to avoid war and that Russia had been working for peace. Austria and Germany were the countries that declared war, and, of course, until somebody did actually declare war or actually make war there was a chance of peace.

What Documents Disclosed.

As soon as the diplomatic documents were published we all saw—any person who could read was able to see—that Austria had been bent upon war with Serbia and that Germany had wanted Austria to make such a war, and, under a rather careless pretext of wishing to preserve the peace, had actually prevented peacemaking on the part of other governments. It was clear, too, that Russia had been bound to protect Serbia from Austria, and that Germany understood this and knew that Austria's attack on Serbia meant war between Austria and Russia, which also meant, of course, war between Germany and Russia and between Germany and France, since the latter was Russia's ally.

Nothing could have been more significant than this, that Germany, being herself already prepared—down to the last buckle—for immediate war, declared war on Russia for the alleged reason that Russia was getting prepared for war. We know this sort of talk of old in a thousand trials for cold-blooded murder in our own country. "Self-defense!" shouts the murderer's attorney. "The deceased made a motion toward his hip pocket." Germany stood with a bright new automatic revolver in hand, and Russia made a motion toward the hip pocket—where there was later found a penknife with two blades broken. "Self-defense," Germany claimed loudly through her attorneys. "He made a motion toward his hip pocket; so I had to shoot him."

The German chancellor declared in the reichstag that Russia made this fatal motion toward the hip pocket in spite of England's effort to keep peace. Russia "began it," said the chancellor—and then a few days later all Germany began shouting that England "began it!" This was when England fulfilled her oath to Belgium, and Germany broke her own.

Evidence Grows Stronger.

The evidence went more and more against Germany, and there were some vicious sidelights which made the case stronger against her. The German army was sent into the peaceful little country of Belgium, which it turned into a slaughterhouse, with the owners for victims, and the German government said that the German army did this because it would help Germany to conquer France. At the same time the Germans in authority told a great number of lies to excuse themselves. They said that they knew they were doing a wrong thing, and that they were breaking the law and violating their oath; and nevertheless they claimed that they were justified because the Belgians were a wicked people and France intended soon to behave (in respect to Belgium) as Germany was behaving. Altogether, the trickiness and cruelty of Germany in the Belgian matter caused our opinions of the German government (concerning who began it) to become much darker. So far as Belgium went, the Germans were finally and absolutely convicted in the plain sight of all men; convicted of lies as odious as they were stupid; convicted of the most abominable, cold-blooded plotting; convicted of a selfishness not seen on earth since the seventeenth century and of a cruelty not known since the sixteenth.

Booth Tarkington.

Of course, men who were capable of these things in regard to Belgium were of a character distinctly capable of having plotted the great war; and, as they lied about Belgium, they would lie about the rest of it.

Evidence Leaves No Doubt.

Since then evidence has piled up—evidence not circumstantial but so direct that it leaves no doubt. This evidence is colossal and conclusive, and is almost all German. It is no longer possible to debate the question, and the court has decided—the court consisting of the nations of the world. That court found that Germans plotted to dominate the world and decided and attempted to kill the men and women and children of certain other nations, and to continue the killing until these nations submitted to German domination, after which all remaining nations would be compelled to submit.

It seemed incredible that there were such ideas left over in the twentieth century world, but there is no longer any doubt of it. It is the preposterous but undeniable truth that there exists a large and powerful group of Germans—prosperous people and of high attainment in certain specialties—who decided to have great numbers of simple-minded men under their orders go out and kill their fellow men, and continue to kill them in order to increase the power of the plotters. The great majority of the men who did the actual killing would obtain no benefit whatever for themselves, and many of these German soldiers might have brought little enthusiasm to their task if they had understood it, so they were told that they were fighting for the "existence" of the "Fatherland" and that "Russia began it" and "England began it."

Of course, a government which believes in violating oaths—that is, violating the honor of the nation which it represents or controls—such a government would lie to its own people. (It made Germany a perjurer, for the German government stands before the world as Germany and acts as and for Germany—until the German people remove it, and only by removing it can Germans regain for Germany something of lost honor.) This government deceived its own people first about the immediate causes of the war, then about the historical causes of the war, and then most vehemently about the character and intentions of the allies opposed to Germany.

Germany's Lies.

Is there a doubt anywhere that the German rulers will lie, in any manner whatsoever, if they believe the lie will result to their own advantage? Then take one lie with which they have filled Germany: That the president of the United States and the American congress, with the American people behind them, declared the United States to be in a state of war with the German empire because the American munition makers wanted to make more money, and Mr. J. P. Morgan was afraid of the depreciation of his loans to England!

There are two significant things about this lie. One is the state of mind of the German politician who puts it forth, and the other is the state of mind of the unfortunate German subject who believes it. The politician must necessarily count on an abysmal ignorance as well as a loyal credulity in the subject; and the politician who uses such lies is of a type we know in our own country, in certain lower forms of slum-precinct manipulation. But in Germany this type—better educated, incomparably more powerful, but nevertheless the moral twin of one of our corrupt precinct committeemen of the slums—is in actual high control of the German destiny and has as its obedient machine, not ward heelers from the barrel houses, but the most terrible army known in history. And if the German spirit truly manifests itself through such an agency, it is a spirit so sinister and of such mighty ill omen to us that we must either exorcise it by high explosives or be its slaves.

Voice From Germany.

For this is the voice that we hear from Germany:

"We Germans," it trumpets, "we are God's chosen people. His special favorites, and God is German himself. God rules over us in the person of our kaiser, whom he appointed for that purpose. We are better than all other people of the earth; we are wiser and purer and nobler and more industrious and more learned and stronger and cleverer and kinder and braver and more spiritual and more warlike than all others.

"We are so much greater than they that whatever we do to advance our own interests, at the cost of theirs, is right and praiseworthy. If we kill a great many of them, those who survive will in the end be improved, because they will work for us and learn something by observing us. Any deceit is proper and morally correct if it benefits us; and when we practice a policy of terror upon those who oppose us it is really philanthropy and shows how gentle we are, because the survivors learn through our cruelty that it is useless to oppose us, therefore they the sooner submit their wills to ours. We cannot do wrong, no matter what we do, so long as all that we do is for our own benefit. And, since our nature is warlike, war is beautiful and necessary. We study in peace times how to use every man of us in time of war, and that is our great glory. By our bright swords we will take possession of the earth, which ought to belong to us, because we are Germans. We believe in the heaviest possible breeding of babies, that they may grow up and be trained to carry liquid fire and poison against any opposition to us. And, all the same, we are the only real peace lovers in this malign and prejudiced world, which, except for us and the Austrians and the Bulgarians and the Turks, is composed exclusively of stupid ruffians who were so jealous and envious of us that they forced this war upon us, hoping to make some money out of us by annihilating us. We love peace, and are fighting for our mere existence—that is, the right to adjust our frontiers so that they will include the countries which we have conquered by the sword. For instance, we must never again be threatened by an invasion through Belgium. We prepared for this war as no country ever before prepared—not even in 1870, when we made war on France—and we were forced to begin it because we had to begin it before somebody else did."

Protests Are Weak.

That is the German voice as we hear it clamoring with the hundred and hundred thousand tongues of books, of pamphlets, of editorials, of sermons, of "diplomatic documen erly and crown princely and governmental and legislative speeches and writings—a voice whose import is a thousand times confirmed, day after day and year after year, throughout this age of slaughter by the actions of the Germans and their government. Here and there a German cry of protest is heard; there is a sound as of something human wailing for humanity on the vast wind of Germanism. Sometimes for a moment a name is heard out of the fatuous hurricane—a name like Haase or Liebknecht or Harden—and there seems to come the murmur as of a troubled multitude who do not ride the wind; but the sounds are uncertain and come to us but weakly. We can only hope "that there is some one there." Woodrow Wilson has called to them in a loud voice, but they have not known how to answer if they would—or could.

Would Divide United States.

The German kaiser has really thought persistently of all non-Teutonic countries in terms of destruction, and when he has spoken his private thoughts, his speech has always been: "Let us find the best way to weaken and injure them." Those real thoughts of his came out characteristically when, on his yacht at Kiel, he said that Europe had made a great mistake in not strongly favoring the South during our Civil war, for thus two weak countries might have been created to take the place of the powerful Union. Something might be hoped for even yet, he went on, if the East and West could be sufficiently stirred up against each other. There is the kaiser's foreign policy and the order of his mind and of his heart. What he meant was that it would be a good and beneficial thing if the people of our Eastern and Western states could be brought to kill one another in great numbers and thus the Union yet be divided.

The kaiser twice played wantonly and without the slightest provocation on the verge of war with the United States—once on the coast of Venezuela and once in Manila bay. While Germany was in a state of friendship with England, he proposed to Russia that Russia and Germany attack England; and while Germany was in a state of friendship with the United States he proposed to England that England and Germany seize Mexico and destroy the Monroe doctrine. His agent Zimmerman, asked Mexico to propose treachery to Japan, that the two together might dismember and plunder the United States. His diplomatic agent, resident in Buenos Aires by courtesy of the Argentine government, makes treacherous use of the Swedish legation to send word to Germans how to destroy Argentine ships and "leave no trace." This phrase, with which we are familiar mainly through the impossible "villains" of the "movies" and of old-time dime novels and melodramas—"leave no trace," meaning "sink the ships and murder every soul on board"—this message is not that of a "stage or movie villain." Not at all! It is a German governmental message regarding ships belonging to citizens of a friendly power, and is sent by a German nobleman in the German diplomatic service to other officials of the German government. More, it is a characteristic work of the German governmental kind. And it is an actual snapshot of the personality of the German government.

The government of the United States and the governments of the world are literally unable to make peace with the people thus revealed.

Why We Entered War.

The people of the United States would have borne almost anything from Germany if they could have believed that the German's cause was originally a good one or that the war was "forced upon Germany." But, knowing what we did, when the Germans, after murdering great numbers of our fellow citizens and quibbling for many, many months about these murders—when they told us to keep our ships in port or they would sink them; we found that Germany's conduct toward us was not to be distinguished from making war upon us, and we decided that our citizens should not be killed continuously by a country which was "at peace" with us, and we would not take orders from Germany to remain in port and away from the high seas. Germany does not make and enforce the laws of and for the United States—not without encountering some resistance from Americans. So we disobeyed Germany, and would not paint the commanded yellow stripes upon the hulls of the one ship a week which was to be permitted upon the Atlantic ocean.

We found ourselves in a state of war because the German government, having forced a war upon Europe with the object of dominating that continent and subsequently the world, including the United States, and having carried on the war with unnecessary cruelty and the employment of treachery whenever it considered treachery useful, we found ourselves in a state of war because the German government was killing our citizens as a means of enforcing its will upon us. That would seem to be war—killing us to make us obey—no? American citizens have their own government and prefer to live under their own laws. That is why we began to fight.

We continue our beginning because the German government is the same government that it was a few months ago when we found that it was making war upon us—and we have no choice but to fight it until either it is thoroughly whipped or some better kind of Germans—Germans of good sense, good feeling, and of an honorable reliability—get control of Germany.

Peace will come as soon as they do.

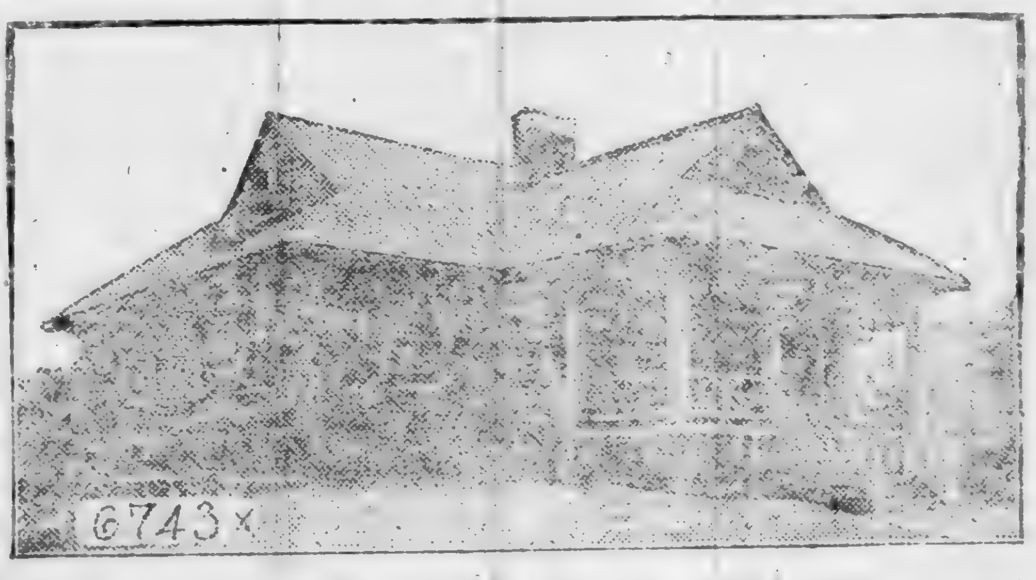
Can Be Made Ideal Family Center by Aid of the Built-In Features Which Are Part of Interior Plan.

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all subjects pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on all these subjects. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only enclose three-cent stamp for reply.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD.

The true enjoyment of life is securely anchored to the existence of a group of sentiments which are wrapped around every event in life. One of the finest—one of the most powerful—of these groups is that which is paramount in the establishment of a home. A home which is not built upon the foundation of such a group of sentiments is no home at all. It is unfortunate that very often the establishment of a home involves the consideration of conditions other than those of comfort in wholesome surroundings. The man of the house must be near to his work or the cost of land is prohibitive where the surroundings are best. These things must, of course, be given precedence in some cases.

No matter what enters into the selection of the place of building, too much care cannot be exercised in planning the home for comfort. Fine sentiments are not ordinarily associated with uncomfortable surroundings. The money which is spent purely for the purpose of increasing the comfort of the home is sure to bring returns which are inestimable in terms of cash. Let the wife have a free hand in making suggestions pertaining to the arrangement and details of the interior and exterior of the house. Encourage her to "go the limit" in saying what she thinks "would be nice." Put more features down on the list than you could possibly crowd into a house and when there is nothing left to be desired, take plenty of time in eliminating what is unnecessary and bring the dream down to the plane of reality. The result will be far better than if everyone concerned hesitates to mention their pet desire "because it would cost too much."

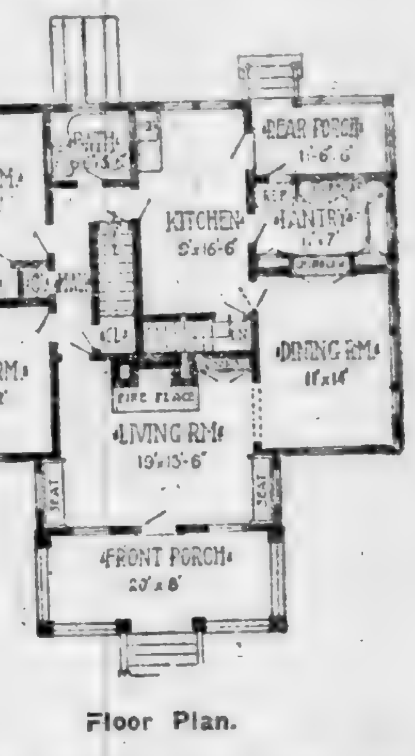


The structural features of the house should be worked out on the basis that it is easy to build too large, but it is hard to build too well. The small house is more easily made comfortable than the large house. Money saved by reducing the size of the house, when wisely invested in using a little better type of construction or in providing a few additional features of comfort for the interior, will give the owner vastly more satisfaction than the pride of owning a "big house."

As an illustration of what can be done to make the house comfortable the design shown in the accompanying perspective view and the plan has been selected. The size of this house is 40 feet by 34 feet 6 inches. The exterior is designed to present a homelike appearance, a little of the old fashioned idea of "home" being cleverly worked into the design in the shuttered windows and the sharply outlined gables. The main body of the house is rigidly rectangular, with the long dimension across the front. A central projection provides the living room extension and the front porch is built as an extension of this part of the house. The house is a one-story structure, but the type of roof which has been selected for the design makes it possible to obtain a large and well lighted attic. A modern idea which is finding quite rapid acceptance is to finish such an attic as this with wall board partitions and ceilings, this scheme providing additional rooms at very moderate expense. The lumber item for such an improvement consists in a few light framing members to provide a basis on which to apply the wall board and a frame-work in which the doors may be hung.

The exterior appearance of the house is rustic. The walls are finished with stained shingles and all windows are provided with shutters. The roof cornice entirely around the house is given rather a wide overhang, but the edges of the roof above the gables is held quite closely to the walls. A large brick chimney projects through the roof near the peak of the intersecting gables. This roof is very effective, its appeal probably resting in the slight suggestion of the colonial style of architecture which has become so popular during recent years. This suggestion is carried through the entire design and is one of its strongest recommendations. The perspective view shows awnings installed on the porch and front windows. These awnings are very desirable in summer since they serve to make a little summer parlor of the porch, shaded from the direct sunlight yet bright, cheerful and cozy. There are a large number of windows in the walls of this house, placed in such a manner that their effect upon the appearance is pleasantly noticeable.

The most important part of the house, in the light of the introductory remarks pertaining to the necessity of home-building sentiment, is the plan; the most important part of the plan is the living room. This room should be made the most attractive in the house. With the features which are built in as a basis to work on, it would not be a hard task to make this room an ideal family center. The fireplace is located directly in front of the entrance from the porch. A built-in bookcase fills the space between the fireplace and the wall between the living room and the dining room. There is a door leading into the hall on the opposite side of the fireplace. An interesting detail of comfort is found in the arrangement of the part of the living room which extends out from the main part of the house. A seat is built in against the wall of this extension on either side of the front door. Because of the proportions of this room, these seats are close enough to the fireplace to make this a very cozy arrangement.



Floor Plan.

There is a cased opening into the dining room. In the same wall, near the rear end of the room, a double door leads back to the kitchen. Adjoining the kitchen is an exceptionally complete pantry, which is another of the special features of this house design. One side of the pantry is occupied by an outside-iced refrigerator and a wide cupboard with two seats of double doors. The central part of the opposite wall is the back of a china case which opens into the dining room. On either side of this case is a narrow cupboard opening into the pantry.

The bedrooms open from the hall at the rear end of which is the bath. The hall, turning to the bath, terminates in a door opening into the kitchen. The attic stair is also reached from this hall. The basement stair is reached from the kitchen. There is a rear porch 11 feet 6 inches by 6 feet built into the corner of the house at the rear of the pantry.

Dividing the house into three parts, the first including the living room, the second including the kitchen, dining room and pantry and the third including the two bedrooms and the bath, the following characteristics are easily observed: The first part has been designed with the predominating effort to provide every possible feature which might add to the comfort of the room. The second part has been designed to provide the housewife with every convenience which might assist her in reducing housework to a minimum. The third part has been designed to follow the best practice in lighting and ventilation for bedrooms, with the independence of these rooms with respect to one another and the bath as a necessary assumed quantity.

Value of Book Increases.

A volume written by Samuel de Champlain in 1603 on his explorations in Canada, entitled "Des Sauvages" which was bought several years ago in a book store in Paris, France, for 30 cents, was sold for $3,600 at a book sale in New York recently. A few years after it was published, the explorer discovered Lake Champlain.

PRUDENCE SAYS SO

By Ethel Hueston

AUTHOR of PRUDENCE OF THE PARSONAGE — © BOBBS-MERRILL CO.

THE STARR FAMILY IS SETTING MUCH STORE BY JERRY JUNIOR, TO BE, BUT MOTHER NATURE DOESN'T TELL ALL HER SECRETS

Synopsis.—The story concerns the household of Rev. Mr. Starr, a Methodist minister at Mount Mark, Ia., and the affairs of his five lovable daughters—Prudence, the eldest; Fairy, the next; Carol and Lark, twins; and Connie, the "baby." Prudence marries and goes away. Her place as "mother" in the home is taken by Aunt Grace. Fairy is engaged to wed. The twins and the "baby," just coming into womanhood, have the usual boy-and-girl love affairs, and the usual amazing adventures of adolescence. Carol discovers love.

"Yes, he wanted to. But Prudence has set her heart on coming home. She says she'll never feel that Jerry Junior got the proper start if it happens any place else. They'll have a trained nurse."

"Jerry—what?" gasped the twins, after a short silence due to amazement.

"Jerry Junior—that's what they call it."

"But how on earth do they know?"

"They don't know. But they have to call it something, haven't they? And they want a Jerry Junior. So of course they'll get it. For Prudence is good enough to get whatever she wants."

"Hum, that's no sign," sniffed Carol. "I don't get everything I want, do I?"

The girls laughed, from habit, not from genuine interest, at Carol's subtle insinuation.

"Well, shall we have her come?"

"Yes," said Carol, "but you tell Prue she needn't expect me to hold it until it gets too big to wiggle. I call them nasty, treacherous little things. Mrs. Miller made me hold hers, and it squirmed right off my knee. I wanted to spank it."

"And tell Prudence to uphold the parsonage and have a white one," added Lark. "These little Indian effects don't make a hit with me."

"Are you going to tell Connie?"

"I don't think so—yet. Connie's only fourteen."

"You tell her." Carol's voice was emphatic. "There's nothing mysterious about it. Everybody does it. And Connie may have a few suggestions of her own to offer. You tell Prue I'm thinking out a lot of good advice for her, and—"

"You must write her yourselves. She wanted us to tell you long before." Fairy picked up the little embroidered dress and kissed it, but her fond eyes were anxious.

So, a few weeks later, weeks crowded full of tumult and anxiety, yes, and laughter, too, Prudence and Jerry came to Mount Mark and settled down to quiet life in the parsonage. The girls kissed Prudence very often, leaped quickly to do her errands, and touched her with nervous fingers. But mostly they sat across the room and regarded her curiously, shyly, quite maternally.

"Carol and Lark Starr," Prudence cried crossly one day, when she intercepted one of these surreptitious glances, "you march right upstairs and shut yourselves up for thirty minutes. And if you ever sit around and stare at me like a stranger again, I'll spank you both. I'm no outsider. I belong here just as much as ever I did. And I'm still the head of things around here, too!"

The twins obediently marched, and after that Prudence was more like Prudence, and the twins were much more twinnish, so that life was very nearly normal in the old parsonage. Prudence said she couldn't feel quite satisfied because the twins were too old to be punished, but she often scolded them in her gentle, teasing way, and the twins enjoyed it more than anything else that happened during those days of quiet.

Then came a night when the four sisters huddled breathlessly in the kitchen, and Aunt Grace and the trained nurse stayed behind with Prudence behind the closed door of the front room upstairs. And the doctor went in, too, after he had inflicted a few light-hearted remarks upon the two men in the little library.

After that—silence, an immense hushing silence—settled down over the parsonage. Jerry and Mr. Starr, alone in the library, where a faint odor of drugs, anesthetics, something that smelled like hospitals lingered, stared away from each other with persistent determination.

"Where are the girls?" Jerry asked, picking up a roll of cotton which had been left on the library table, and flinging it from him as though it scorched his fingers.

"I—think I'll go and see," said Mr. Starr, turning heavily.

Jerry hesitated a minute. "I—think I'll go along," he said.

For an instant their eyes met, sympathetically, and did not smile though their lips curved.

Down in the kitchen, meanwhile, Fairy sat somberly beside the table with a pile of darning which she jabbed at viciously with the needle. Lark was perched on the ice chest, but Carol true to her childish instincts, hunched on the floor with her feet curled beneath her. Connie leaned against the table within reach of Fairy's hand.

"They're awfully slow," she complained once.

Nobody answered. The deadly silence clutched them.

"Oh, talk," Carol blurted out desperately. "You make me sick! It isn't anything to be so awfully scared about. Everybody does it."

A little mumble greeted this, and then, silence again. Whenever it grew too painful, Carol said reproachfully, "Everybody does it." And no one ever answered.

They looked up expectantly when the men entered. It seemed cozier somehow when they were all together in the little kitchen.

"Is she all right?"

"Sure, she's all right," came the bright response from their father, And then silence.

"Oh, you make me sick," cried Carol. "Everybody does it."

"Carol Starr, if you say 'everybody does it' again I'll send you to bed," snapped Fairy. "Don't we know everybody does it? But Prudence isn't everybody."

"Maybe we'd better have a lunch," suggested their father hopefully, knowing the thought of food often aroused his family when all other means had failed. But his suggestion met with dark reproach.

"Father, if you're hungry, take a piece of bread out into the woodshed," begged Connie. "If anybody eats anything before me I shall jump up and down and scream."

After that the silence was unbroken save once when Carol began encouragingly:

"Every—"

"Sure they do," interrupted Fairy uncompromisingly.

And then—the hush.

Long, long after that, when the girls' eyes were heavy, not with want of sleep, but just with unspeakable weariness of spirit—they heard a step on the stair.

"Come on up, Harmer," the doctor called. And then, "Sure, she's all right. She's fine and dandy—both of them are."

Jerry was gone in an instant, and Mr. Starr looked after him with inscrutable eyes. "Fathers are—only fathers," he said enigmatically.

"Yes," agreed Carol.

"Yes. In a crisis, the other man goes first."

His daughters turned to him then, tenderly, sympathetically.

"You had your turn, father," Connie consoled him. And felt repaid for the effort when he smiled at her.

"Jerry Junior," Lark mused. "He's here.—'Aunt Lark, may I have a cooky?'"

A few minutes later the door was carefully shoved open by means of a cautious foot, and Jerry stood before them, holding in his arms a big bundle of delicately tinted flannel.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he began, beaming at them, his face flushed, his eyes bright, embarrassed, but thoroughly satisfied. Of course Prudence was the dearest girl in the world, and he adored her, and—but this was different, this was fatherhood!

"Ladies and gentlemen," he said again in the tender, half-laughing voice that Prudence loved, "let me introduce to you my little daughter, Fairy Harmer."

"Not—not Fairy!" cried Fairy, Senior, tearfully. "Oh, Jerry, I don't believe it. Not Fairy! You are joking."

"Of course it is Fairy," he said. "Look out, Connie, do you want to break part of my daughter off the first thing? Oh, I see. It was just the flannel, was it? Well, you must be careful of the flannel, for when ladies are the size of this one, you can't tell which is flannel and which is foot. Fairy Harmer! Here, grandpa, what do you think of this? And Prudence said to send you right upstairs, and hurry. And the girls must go to bed immediately or they'll be sick tomorrow. Prudence says so."

"Oh, that's enough. That's Prudence all over! You needn't tell us any more. Here, Fairy Harmer, let us look at you. Hold her down, Jerry. Mercy! Mercy!"

"Isn't she a beauty?" boasted the young father proudly.

"A beauty? A beauty! That!" Carol rubbed her slender fingers over her own velvety cheek. "They talk about the matchless skin of a new-born infant. Thanks. I'd just as lief have my own."

"Oh, she isn't acclimated yet, that's all. Do you think she looks like me?"

"No, Jerry, I don't," said Lark candidly. "I never considered you a dream of loveliness, by any means, but in due honesty I must admit that you don't look like that."

"Why, it hasn't any hair!" Connie protested.

"Well, give it time," urged the baby's father. "Be reasonable, Connie. What can you expect in fifteen minutes."

"But they always have a little hair," she insisted.

"No, indeed, they don't, Miss Connie," he said flatly. "For if they always did, ours would have.

"Now don't try to let on there's anything the matter with her, for there isn't.—Look at her nose, if you don't like her hair.—What do you think of a nose like that now? Just look at it."

"Yes, we're looking at it," was the grim reply.

"And—and chin—look at her chin. See here, do you mean to say you are making fun of Fairy Harmer? Come on, tootsie, we'll go back upstairs. They're crazy about us up there."

"Oh, see the cunning little footies," crowed Connie.

"Here, cover 'em up,' said Jerry anxiously. "You mustn't let their feet stick out. Prudence says so. It's considered very—er, bad form, I believe."

"Fairy! Honestly, Jerry, is it Fairy? When did you decide?"

"Oh, a long time ago," he said, "years ago, I guess. You see, we always wanted a girl. Prue didn't think she had enough experience with the stronger sex yet, and of course I'm strong for the ladies. But it seems that what you want is what you don't get. So we decided to call her Fairy when she came, and then we wanted a boy, and talked boy, and got the girl! Let go, Connie, it is my daughter's bedtime. There now, there now, baby, was she her daddy's little girl?"

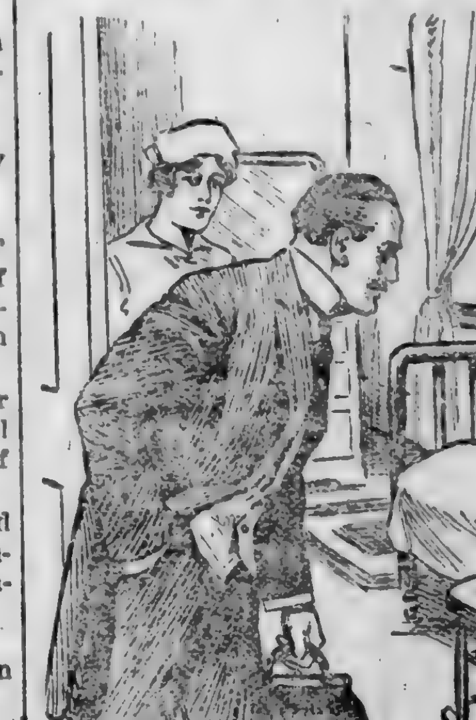
Flushed and laughing, Jerry broke away from the admiring, giggling, nearly tearful girls, and hurried upstairs with Jerry Junior.

But Fairy stood motionless by the door. "Prudence's baby," she whispered. "Little Fairy Harmer! — Mmmmmmm!"

CHAPTER X.

The End of Fairy.

Now that the twins had attained to the dignity of eighteen years, and were respectable students at the thoroughly respectable Presbyterian college, they had dates very frequently. And it was along about this time that Mr. Starr developed a sudden interest in the evening callers at his home. He bobbed up unannounced in most unexpected places and at most unexpected hours. He walked about the house with a sharp, sly look in his eyes, in a way that could only be described as Carol said, by "downright noisiness."



And the Doctor Went In, Too.

The girls discussed this new phase of his character when they were alone, but decided not to mention it to him, for fear of hurting his feelings. "Maybe he's got a new kind of a sermon up his brain," said Carol. "Maybe he's beginning to realize that his clothes are wearing out again," suggested Lark. "He's too young for second childhood," Connie thought. So they watched him curiously.

Aunt Grace, too, observed this queer devotion on the part of the minister, and finally her curiosity overcame her habit of keeping silent.

"William," she said gently, "what's the matter with you lately? Is there anything on your mind?"

Mr. Starr started nervously. "My mind? Of course not. Why?"

"You seem to be looking for something. You watch the girls so closely, you're always hanging around, and—"

He smiled broadly. "Thanks for that. 'Hanging around,' in my own parsonage. That is the gratitude of a loving family!"

Aunt Grace smiled. "Well, I see there's nothing much the matter with you. I was seriously worried. I thought there was something wrong, and—"

"Sort of mentally unbalanced, is that it? Oh, no, I'm just watching my family."

She looked up quickly. "Watching the family! You mean—"

"Carol," he said briefly.

"Carol! You're watching—"

"Oh, only in the most honorable way, of course. You see," he gave his explanation with an air of relief, "Prudence always says I must keep an eye on Carol. She's so pretty, and the boys get stuck on her, and—that's what Prudence says. I forgot all about it for a while. But lately I have begun to notice that the boys are older, and—we don't want Carol falling in love with the wrong man. I got uneasy. I decided to watch out. I'm the head of this family, you know."

"Such an idea!" scoffed Aunt Grace, who was not at all of a scoffing nature.

"Carol was born for lovers, Prudence says so. And these men's girls have to be watched, or the wrong fellow will get ahead, and—"

"Carol doesn't need watching—not any more at least."

"I'm not really watching her, you know. I'm just keeping my eyes open."

"But Carol's all right. That's one time Prudence was away off." She smiled as she recognized a bit of Carol's slang upon his lips. Don't worry about her. You needn't keep an eye on her any more. She's coming, all right."

"You don't think there's any danger of her falling in love with the wrong man?"

"No."

"There aren't many worth-having fellows in Mount Mark, you know."

"Carol won't fall in love with a Mount Mark fellow."

"You seem very positive,"

"Yes, I'm positive."

He looked thoughtful for a while. "Well, Prudence always told me to watch Carol, so I could help her if she needed it."

"Girls always need their fathers," came the quick reply. "But Carol does not need you particularly. There's only one of them who will require especial attention."

"That's what Prudence says."

"Yes, just one—not Carol."

"Not Carol!" He looked at her in astonishment. "Why, Fairy and Lark are—different. They're all right. They don't need attention."

"No. It's the other one."

"The other one! That's all."

"There's Connie."

"Connie?"

"Yes."

"Connie?"

"Yes."

"You don't mean Connie."

Aunt Grace smiled.

"Why, Grace, you're—you're off. Excuse me for saying it, but—you're crazy. Connie—why, Connie has never been any trouble in her life. Connie!"

"You've never had any friction with Connie, she's always been right so far. One of these days she's pretty likely to be wrong, and Connie doesn't yield very easily."

"But Connie's so sober and straight and—"

"That's the kind."

"She's so conscientious."

"Yes, conscientious."

"She's—look here, Grace, there's nothing the matter with Connie."

"Of course not, William. That isn't what I mean. But you ought to be getting very, very close to Connie right now, for one of these days she's going to need a lot of that extra companionship Prudence told you about. Connie wants to know everything. She wants to see everything. None of the other girls ever yearned for city life. Connie does. She says when she is through school she's going [illegible]."

"What city?"

"Any city."

"What for?"

"For experience."

Mr. Starr looked about him helplessly. "There's experience right here," he protested feebly. "Lots of it. Entirely too much of it."

"Well, that't Connie. She wants to know, to see, to feel. She wants to live. Get close to her, get chummy. She may not need it, and then again she may. She's very young yet."

"All right, I will. It is well I have some one to steer me along the proper road." He looked regretfully out of the window. "I ought to be able to see these things for myself, but the girls seem perfectly all right to me. They always have. I suppose it's because they're mine."

Aunt Grace looked at him affectionately. "It's because they're the finest girls on earth," she declared. "That's why. But we want to be ready to help them if they need it, just because they are so fine. They will every one be splendid, if we give them the right kind of a chance."

He sat silent a moment. "I've always wanted one of them to marry a preacher," he said, laughing apologetically. "It is very narrow-minded, of course, but a man does make a hobby of his own profession. I always hoped Prudence would. I thought she was born for it. Then I looked to Fairy, and she turned me down. I guess I'll have to give up the notion now."

Carol's awakening to life's seriousness reveals the career for which she was destined.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Her Expensive Hat.

A woman in London entered a car rather out of breath and presented a singular appearance, for instead of a hat she was balancing a huge basket on her head with as much grace and ease as if it had been her Sunday bonnet. She could just manage to get through the doorway, but she sat down with the basket gracefully poised on her head.

"All fares, please," said the conductor. "And I shall want twopence for that there basket, mum."

"Get away with yer," she said. "D'ye charge anything for ladies' hats?"

"No, mum."

"Thin get on with yer work. This 'er basket is a-going to be my hat."

FIRST HALL MARKS

Hieroglyphics Stamped on Gold and Silver in 1300.

Guild Formed in Early Days to Protect the Buyer in the Matter of Purity of Metal.

What are the strange hieroglyphics stamped on the back of silver articles in England, and what do these marks signify? This is a question which has often puzzled the inquisitive. A tedious and technical subject, you say. On the contrary, a most absorbing and appealing one. Read here what an expert in the matter of these markings has to say, and be convinced.

"The first hall mark was used in Paris in 1300. It was employed for both gold and silver, principally the former. Some goldsmiths had been underselling others and as there was no difference in labor or perfection of detail, it was obvious that much inferior metal was being used. So a guild was founded to protect the buyer in the matter of purity of metal. The guild specified the 'Paris touch,' which meant that a certain standard of metal was to be maintained.

"About 1327 a stir took place in England for a slightly different reason. Privateering off the coast was frequent, the result being that silver vessels were brought back and made either into coins or other vessels. As the product was of a lower grade than the English standard, a goldsmiths' guild was established there also, with the rather awe-inspiring title of 'Origin and Mystery of the Fellowship of Goldsmiths.' The guild specified that standard metal must contain 925 parts of silver and 75 parts of copper. Its members had authority to travel through the provinces of the United Kingdom assaying silver vessels, and if any specimen was not up to standard it was confiscated or a fine of double its value was imposed on the maker.

"When a piece was made it was the custom to send it to the guildhall. There it was assayed and if found to be of the proper proportion it was stamped with the English hall mark, or as it was then called, the 'guildhall mark,' commonly referred to as 'the king's touch.'

"A leopard's head was the first mark employed in England and the maker also was privileged to place his own stamp upon it, which generally consisted of the first two letters of his surname. As so few people were able to read, most of the tradesmen had signs which they placed on their productions, hence the modern trade mark. In 1459 the guildhall added a letter marking the year that a piece was made, but as the full alphabet was not used, the date is very difficult to determine. Later the leopard's head was changed to a lion passant, which in turn gave way to a lion's head erased with a figure of Brittania.

"The collector of old silver must look out for the method of 'glorifying' used by unscrupulous dealers who cut the hall marks out of old spoons or forks and fit them into a big piece to mislead the unwary. It is extraordinary that so much good old English silver has survived, considering the vicissitudes through which it has passed. In the Wars of the Roses, for instance, much plate was confiscated and melted into coins for carrying on the strife."

Stones in Form of Cross.

Staurolite is a curious mineral, or stone, found only in Virginia and North Carolina, not very valuable but interesting on account of a legend that attaches to it. The name is from the Greek stauros, a cross. The stone is found in the form of a cross, or sometimes a double cross. Another name for the stone is the "fairy stone," and this also relates to the lenged that the fairies living in the caves of the mountains, on hearing the sad tidings of the death of Christ fashioned these crosses as mementos of him. There has always been some commercial demand for the stones as curious and they are worn as watch charms or on chains with lockets.

Wouldn't Be Slighted.

The principal of a school once had occasion to lick a very refractory pupil. It was very meager punishment, but the child complained to his father when he went home that day. The next day the father paid the principal a visit.

"I understand," said the irate parent, "that you licked my boy yesterday."

"I did," was the reply, "but not severely."

"Well," said the father, "I want you to know that I am one of the largest taxpayers in this place and my boy is entitled to as good a licking as any other boy gets. If you slight him again, you'll hear from me in no uncertain terms."

Rope Making.

The rope industry is largely dependent upon Russian, Italian, American and Manila hemp, the latter being far more used than any other. With the exception of Manila, all these hemps are of the best fiber—that is, they are obtained from the bark of the plant. The hemp is cut, dried, and then stacked in bundles. Later, it is again spread out and exposed to dew, frost and sun, a process that rots the gums binding the filaments. The dry inner woody part of the stem then falls off and leaves the fibrous strips in condition to be cleaned and baled for transportation.

Body Terribly Swollen

Mr. Madara's Condition Was Critical Until Doan's Were Used. Health Was Restored.

"For six months I couldn't walk, I was so swollen as the result of kidney trouble," says Geo. T. Madara, 15 Mt. Vernon Ave., Pitman Grove, Camden, N. J.: "Backache drove me nearly wild and big lumps formed over each kidney. I bloated until I weighed 407 pounds, and I was a sight to behold. The water in my system pressed around my heart and I sometimes felt as if I was being strangled. The kidney secretions were scanty and contained a thick sediment.

Mr. Madara

"No one can imagine how I suffered. I finally went to the hospital, but when an operation was suggested I would not consent and came home.

"I heard how Doan's Kidney Pills had helped others, so I discarded all the other medicines and started using them. The second day I began to improve and as I continued, my back stopped paining and the swelling went down. The other kidney troubles left, too, and I was soon as well as ever."

Camouflage.

"I didn't much care about the way Josh's clothes looked down to camp," commented Farmer Corntossel.

"Hasn't he his regular uniform?"

"Not yet. If they're going to keep him dressed that way in hopes of deceiving the enemy into thinking he's just an obscure peasant or something, what I say is that it's carrying this new kermoofling idea too far."

Diamond Cut Diamond.

Mr. Henry Fielding Dickens, the newly appointed common sergeant, is responsible for an amusing story concerning an eminent king's counsel who, in the course of a learned argument, rested his case entirely on one reported decision, which he claimed to be of paramount importance.

But when he had finished, his opponent, being asked by the judge what he had to say, replied:

"I will not trouble your lordship with any further argument. I only wish to say that my friend has forgotten to tell your lordship that the case on which he relies has been taken on appeal to the house of lords and the decision absolutely reversed."

Upon this the eminent K. C. turned to his colleagues round about and whispered:

"Good heavens, what a liar that man must be! Why, there never was such a case. I made it all up out of my own head as I went along!"—Pearson's Weekly.

Who Would Not?

Bacon—Which do you enjoy the most, the day or the night time?

Egbert—Well, you see, on one side of my house is a shop where they test boilers all day, and on the other side lives a man who is testing his violin nearly all night. Come to think of it I think I enjoy the day time more.

Different Tastes.

"I'd rather put down a pony of brandy."

FACE the FACTS

LET us face the facts. The war situation is critical. Unless the Allies fight as they never yet have fought, defeat threatens. Hungry men cannot fight at their best; nor hungry nations. France, England, and Italy are going hungry unless we feed them.

Wheat Savings—They must have wheat. It is the best food to fight on. It is the easiest to ship. We alone can spare it to them. By saving just a little—less than a quarter of what we ate last year—we can support those who are fighting our battles. And we can do it without stinting ourselves. We have only to substitute another food just as good.

The Corn of Plenty—Corn is that food. There's a surplus of it. Providence has been generous in the hour of our need. It has given us corn in such bounty as was never known before. Tons of corn. Trainloads of corn. Five hundred million bushels over and above our regular needs. All we have to do is to learn to appreciate it. Was ever patriotic duty made so easy? And so clear?

America's Own Food—Corn! It is the true American food. The Indians, hardiest of races, lived on it. Our forefathers adopted the diet and conquered a continent. For a great section of our country it has blong een the staff of life. How well the South fought on it, history tells. Now it can help America win a world war.

Learn Something—Corn! It isn't one food. It's a dozen. It's a cereal. It's a vegetable. It's a bread. It's a dessert. It's nutritious; more food value in it, dollar for dollar, than meat or eggs or most other vegetables. It's good to eat; how good you don't know until you've had corn-bread properly cooked. Best of all, it's plentiful and it's patriotic.

Corn's Infinite Variety—How much do you know about corn? About how good it is? About the many delicious ways of cooking it? And what you miss by not knowing more about it? Here are a few of its uses:

There are at least fifty ways to use corn meal to make good dishes for dinner, supper, lunch or breakfast. Here are some suggestions:

During the big storm Saturday night, Jan. 12, the stork got a very industrious spell and left a 6 lb. daughter at the home of Orla Woodring and wife. Miss Fern Tarney is the nurse.

School opened again Monday after a vacation since Friday before Christmas prolonged on account of having the scarlet fever in the Tarney family. The oldest son has partly recovered, and Marshall, the youngest son, has it now. Dr. Brunson is the attending physician.

Yant Patterson, who has been man of the house in the Lizzie Friend home for a number of years, was given orders to vacate his pleasant abode on the complaint of the 12-year old daughter of Mrs. Friend. The girl states that he cursed her and used obscene language. Some people seem to think that Mr. Patterson has been very ill used. We think he better go and join the army.

Mrs. J. C Emme was hostess to the J. A. G. Club, Saturday afternoon.

The Lutheran Sunday School will be held in the basement of the church to conserve the coal.

The Epworth League of the M. E. Church met Tuesday evening at the home of the president, Miss Fanny Vallieu, and elected new officers.

The cutting committee of the Red Cross met at the home of Mrs. W. G. Erick, Monday, and cut garments ready for the sewers on Tuesday afternoon.

The Spelling Bee which was held at the Lutheran Church, Saturday night, created quite a little interest and the cafeteria supper netted the Ladies Aid a nice sum.

Mrs. R. U. Bowser, who was improving from her recent illness, is not so well at this writing. Roy Bowser, who was also sick, was able to again attend school, Monday.

Gray Erick, north of town, moved 8 head of his Belgium horses, Monday, to the Huntertown Fair Ground, where they will be put in the big Auction Sale of Jan. 28.

The year opened auspiciously for the Lucheran Aid Society with a long to be remembered meeting at the parsonage on Wednesday afternoon. The program was in charge of Mrs. Georgia Jenkins, Mrs. Mable Erick and Pearl Goldsmith, who announced it would be a surprise meeting, and so it proved. The ladies responded to roll call by giving the date of their birth. The treasurer, Mrs. Claude Hafner, gave her annual report. The first surprise was the sales manager Harry Gerhardt of Philadelphia, was present with a fine exhibit of Lutheran Publications. He gave a short address on the literature of the house and on request sang a couple of songs which was very much appreciated. After a short program, surprise No. 2 occurred when the ladies stood Mrs. Mumma on the floor, blind-folded her and proceeded each to pin on her a dainty handkerchief to remind her of her birthday which occurred the day before. The president, Mrs. Flossie Rhoades, called attention to the new program for the year, and the meeting closed with a social hour. Lunch was served by the caterer, Fred High. The final surprise came when George Jenkins took the ladies in his bob-sled to see the big snow drifts, west of town.

Obituary

Milus Rhodes, son of Daniel and Mary Rhodes was born in DeKalb County, Indiana, on the farm which he now owns February 22, 1838 and departed this life January 26, 1918 aged 79 years, 10 months and 24 days.

His father, Daniel Rhodes, was a native of the state of Virginia, and his mother, Mary Crabill nee Rhodes, a native of the state of Ohio, having married and moved to DeKalb County, Indiana, entering the land on the 2nd. day of September 1834, on which the deceased lived and owned at the time of his death.

His father died when he was but 14 years old. Mr. Rhodes continued living on this farm clearing and improving it until he made it one of the best in DeKalb County. He was united in marriage to Elizabeth Bean s. daughter of John and Barbara Beams, March 8, 1866, to this union was born two children, Franklin E. and Raymond R. Rhodes, both of this place. He leaves to mourn his departure two sons, four grandchildren, one brother Daniel Rhodes of Grabill, Indiana, two sisters Minerva Sanders of Mason, Michigan, and Sarah Reaser of Fort Wayne, besides other relatives and friends.

Mr. Rhodes was a kind and loving father, a good neighbor and an able advisor. His was a life of activity always being busily engaged in the improvement of the physical and moral surroundings. The infirmities of old age with the dread disease of dropsy, gradually weakened the frail body until it became too weak to sustain life and the spirit took its flight. He is now in the hands of the wise Judge of all to be judged according to the deeds done in the body.

The funeral services took place Saturday morning at the Lutheran church, Spencerville. Conducted by Rev. A. K. Mumma and burial in the family lot in the Spencerville cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We thus express our appreciation of the many kindly ministrations from neighbors and friends during our bereavement in the death of our loving father.

F. E. Rhodes.
Raymond R. Rhodes.

6. Public Service Reserve, in G. A. R room.
7. Saving Stamps, in Surveyor's office.
8. Seed Corn and Labor Survey, County Agent's office.

The afternoon session begins at 1:30 and the evening sessions at 7:30.

White Will Probated.

The will of the late Edwin White of St. Joe; has been filed for probate in the office of County Clerk W. W. Mountz.

After providing for the payment of all debts, Mr. White bequeaths to his son, James White, the rents and profits of the house and two lots, Nos. 1 and 2, Hart's addition to the town of St. Joe, until his grandson, Edwin White, son of Jas. White, becomes twenty-one years of age. This property is then to go into the possession of Edwin White.

The balance of the property is to be divided equally among the children, Mary Jane White Silberg, Samuel P. White, Sherman U. White, Martha L. White Bowman and James White.

Mr. White states that the heirs of his daughter, Rose White Fales, shall not receive any part of the estate as he had given her $100 as her share.

The heirs of his son, Jacob E. White, are not to get any part of the property, as he had given him $500.

As his daughter, Clarissa R. White Draggoo, died without issue, Mr. White says he does not leave anything to her heirs.

As his real estate cannot be divided equally, Mr. White wishes that all of it excepting lots 1 and 2, Hart's addition to St. Joe, be sold and the money divided.

Mr. White appoints his son, Samuel P. White, sole executor of the estate; but due to his death last fall it became necessary to have another appointed. Letters of appointment of S. W. Tustison has been filed.

The will was made December 19, 1911, and was witnessed by D. N. Baker and H. D. Poper.

Local Briefs

Tuesday, February 5, is the new date for the Great War Conference to be held in Auburn.

The Moon Printing Co., of Woodburn, is getting a monopoly of the papers of Allen County. Mr. Moon has purchased the Grabill Review and New Haven News besides running the Woodburn News. Each paper was formerly a 6 column quarto but now it has been reduced to a folio. Only two pages for the home news and advertising. Don't see how the people stand for it. The St. Joe people would not stand for a folio, all home-print, let alone two pages foreign and two home news as the above papers.

MADE FAMOUS BY RECIPES

Mrs. G. M. King of East Orange, N. J., whose recipes for pumpkinless pumpkin pie and meatless mincemeat, as distributed by the national emergency food garden commission, made her famous overnight. The recipes were first tried on 500 marines on an army transport. They pronounced the Hooverized fare O. K. and called for more. Mrs. King is spending the winter at Daytona Beach, Fla., and will return home in time to plant a war garden.

True Hospitality.

Entertaining has become a word which we associate with labor. This is a deplorable state of mind, observes a writer, and it is to be hoped that a greater sincerity in hospitality will develop as we feel the need for rigid economy pressing closer and closer. Let us invite only those whom we honestly desire to have as our guests. And let us entertain them unostentatiously and as is fitting to our circumstances and to the times. It is the association and companionship far more than the "spread" that we might give them that the right sort of friends will enjoy.

Horn of Natural Rock.

"King Alfred's Horn" is the name applied to a great shapeless block of stone in the Vale of Berks, England. It is pierced with a number of holes. By applying his mouth to it and blowing as into a horn, the practiced performer can produce a weird, booming sound, said to be audible for a distance of six miles. The story goes that King Alfred used this natural horn to summon his forces for a great battle, fought in the immediate neighborhood.—Popular Science Monthly.

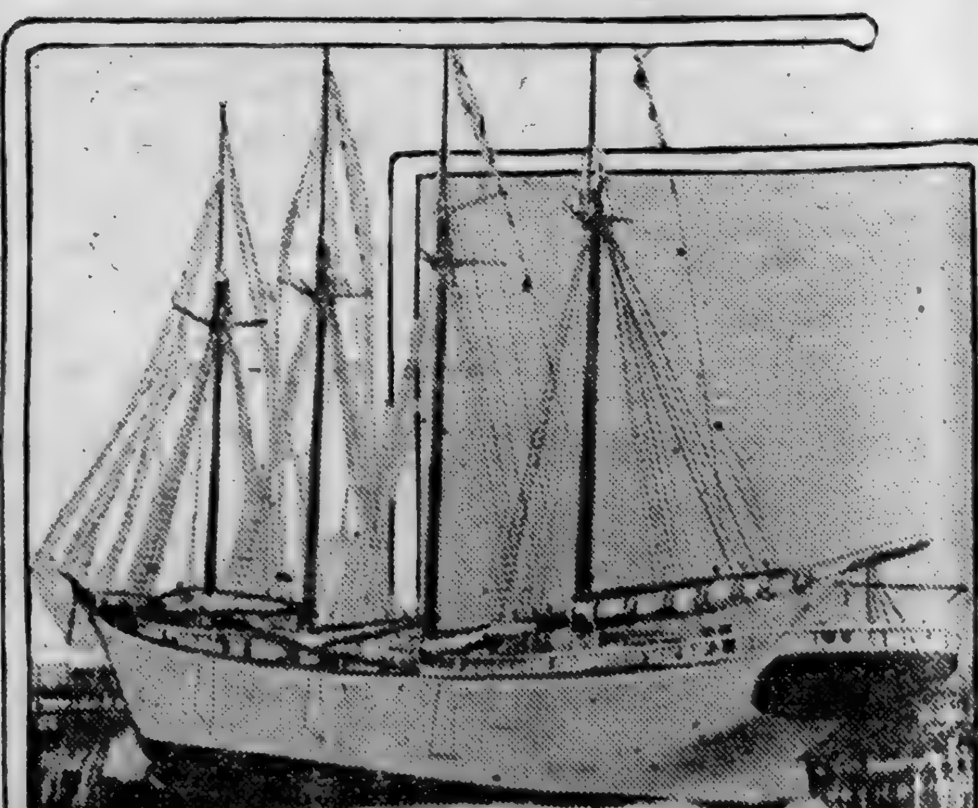
LIKE OLD TIMES AT FALL RIVER



Full rigged and ready for her maiden trip, the Luther Little is shown sliding down the ways at Fall River. Her launching was the first of a craft of her type at that port in 40 years. She will carry a cargo of coal to South America and bring back oil. Shipping rates are so high that it is estimated that she will almost pay for herself on the first trip.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

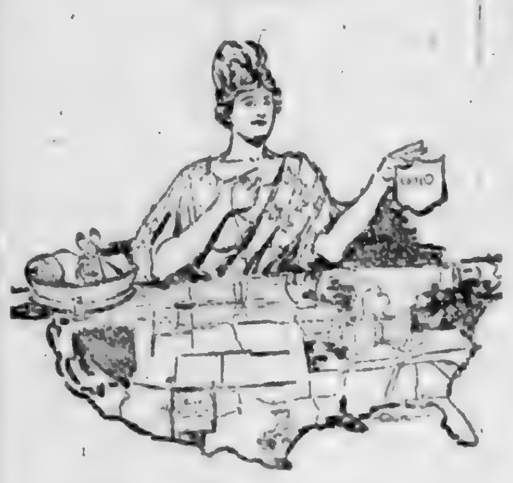
THEY ALL TELL SAME STORY.

A California man writing to the San Francisco Examiner from Denver, Colo., says:

"I am stopping at the Brown Palace, and in discussing this matter with the proprietor, he tells me that this year has been the most profitable year in the history of the hotel, and they are entirely satisfied with their conditions. In fact, I am dictating this letter in what was formerly known as 'The Spa,' a celebrated saloon in the Brown Palace. It has now the unique distinction of being a dry bar where soft drinks exclusively are sold. The bartender told me this morning that it is more than paying its way.

"The reports I get from Colorado Springs, which is exclusively supported by tourists and visitors, are the same. All of their hotels are full and have been all summer.

"I was very much pleased yesterday, driving out to Lookout Mountain to pass in the city of Golden a large, beautifully equipped old brewery building, now used for the manufacture of malted milk. It was such a surprise to me that I made inquiry and found that this business was more profitable than the manufacture of beer."



Columbia: This continual patching of the map is getting on my nerves! It seems to me the time has come for Uncle Sam and me to make the map all white by a prohibition amendment to the Federal constitution! — The Union Signal.

WHAT IT HAS DONE FOR MAINE.

It is impossible to judge of the complete efficiency of prohibition by surface investigations. One has to know what conditions were before prohibition came to pass, and a study of conditions in Maine previous to the adoption of the prohibitory policy—as recorded by those who witnessed the change which came over the state sixty years ago when it outlawed the traffic—leaves no doubt of such a transformation there at that time as has recently been taking place in such states as Oregon, Washington, Arizona and the states of the South. By all the accounts of those times the unmistakable signs of shiftlessness and poverty due to drink were everywhere prevalent in Maine. But the one thing that impresses visitors to the state more than anything else today is the thrift—the spic-and-spanness of buildings and grounds, even to the white paling fences which testify to the effect that the prohibition of drink has had upon the population. The savings habit possesses Maine to a startling degree. Street urchins carry pennies to storekeepers and deposit them there until the amount reaches $1, then the dollar is proudly carried to the savings bank. And the comparative paucity of crimes, the smallness of the state penitentiary, the safety with which women and children visiting the state in the summer roam the woods and hills of Maine, all point the same prohibition moral.

THE SIGNS IN OHIO.

In 1914 the wet majority in Ohio was 88,142; in 1915, 55,408; in 1917, 1,137.

It is significant that not only was the wet majority of the state reduced in remarkable degree, but the large cities made great dry gains. Even Cincinnati gained. Cleveland, Toledo, Youngstown, Akron, Canton, all gave prohibition majorities, and the drys carried Columbus, the capital city. City dwellers as well as rural citizens are beginning to realize that the license policy means economic waste. It is easy to predict the result of Ohio's "next time!"

SOME HIGH BAWLS.

The bawl of the distiller when his soul-destroying trade is stopped.

The bawl of the brewer who sees that his day is coming.

The bawl of the tippler as the price of the highball soars higher and higher. It makes him sore, too.

These three bawls lead to three other balls which hang over the pawnbroker's door. As Hamlet says: "Oh, my prophetic soul, mine uncle."—Temperance.

THE HIGH COST OF LIQUOR.

Speaking of the advanced price of whisky, Henry J. Kattenbach, president of the wholesalers' association, makes this statement, says the New York World:

"The wholesalers will pass the new tax on the retailers, and the retailers will pass it on to the consumers. They must do this or go out of business."

But the consumer, many of him, is refusing to pay, and saloon patronage is falling off in marked degree. Thousands of saloons are going out of business.

NEW YEAR'S GREETINGS

The Heads of Canada's Western Provinces, and Their Message.

The United States having been in the great world's war for about nine months, the touch of war's spirit has permeated the great commonwealth, and in every hamlet and district is felt and shown the interest that was to be expected from a people whose love of liberty and justice rises supreme to all else. Day by day their appreciation of what it means to give up now for the future happiness of themselves and the generations that follow grows greater and greater. There will be losses of loved ones, but there will be no badge of mourning to indicate the great sorrow that will be felt. It is realized that the sacrifice is the toll that is demanded for making the whole world better, and, sensing this, there is preparation and willingness to sacrifice until the goal—the defeat and downfall of despotism—is assured. When the people look back, and see what Canada has done, and learn that Canada today is bigger and better than ever, they will take heart, and with increasingly growing vigor carry on with a greater courage. Canada has been in the war for three and a half years. She has sent 400,000 out of a population of eight million, she has subscribed to Victory Bonds over and over again and there is no sound of a whimper. At each demand that is made upon her resources, she meets it, and gets ready for the next. Recently her people were asked to subscribe $300,000,000. She handed over $400,000,000.

Having already contributed 400,000 soldiers, Canada was recently asked to approve of sending another 100,000. With a sweeping majority, consent was given.

How the war affects Canada is best shown by the willingness of the people to contribute. They, too, realize the great and noble part they are taking in this great conflict. They are a unit on making the world better. Canada's wealth was never shown to better advantage than in the present struggle. It possesses great wealth in the soil in its mines, its other natural resources, and wonderful riches in the tenacity and courage of its men and its women. The soil and the climate, and the hardihood and determination of the farming class to win, by cultivating and cultivating, growing wheat and raising cattle to build up the resources so necessary to carry on the war, are factors that will count.

Probably the best word of encouragement comes from the Premiers of the three great provinces where the bulk of the food products will come from. When one reads what these men, prominent in their country say, it gives inspiration. If there are any who may be pessimistic of the future, the message that these gentlemen send forward should remove all doubt. Three and a half years in the war, able to speak as they do, the future should look bright to those who may have their seasons of doubt!

Hon. T. C. Norris, Premier of Manitoba, says:

"Manitoba has prospered exceedingly during the year 1917, and the new year finds us not only still ready and willing, but unceasingly able to bear whatever burdens the fourth year of the war may bring.

"Manitoba farmers, generally speaking, have never been in better condition to carry on. Out of her prosperity Manitoba is giving lavishly toward the winning of the war. Every appeal for funds has met with quick and generous response. The people of the Province are well settled into the collar in all war efforts. There's a spirit of determination, of willingness to make sacrifices, of confidence in the certain outcome; of which there is no room for pessimism. Manitoba will carry on."

Saskatchewan had a prosperous and successful year in 1917, and when Premier Martin sent out his New Year message it was filled with an optimism that was fully warranted.

"There is no doubt that the province today is in a better condition financially than ever before. True, the effects of the town and city real estate boom have not altogether passed away, but speaking generally, the farmers on the plains and the merchants in the towns are in a better financial position today than at any previous time. Our people are industrious and progressive.

"While we have in some portions of the Province a mixed population, education and scientific methods are making rapid strides and we are looking forward with every confidence to a glorious future and the development of a people on the central plains of Canada, of which the whole Dominion and the British Empire will have every reason to be proud."

While Alberta has given over to the war thousands of her virile manhood, thus taking from the farmer a large percentage of its producers, it still stands up big and buoyant. The farm help thus temporarily removed means a demand for farm help and increased farm effort to till its highly productive acres. Hon. Chas. Stewart, Premier of Alberta, in a message to the people on the 1st of January, speaks with such buoyancy and hope of the future and so highly of the work of the past year, that his statement is reproduced. He says:

"The prosperity of the farming communities is reflected in the towns and cities by increased wholesale business and bank clearances. Wholesalers report increases from 20 per cent to 25 per cent and their collections the best in the history of the Province. Alberta being essentially an agricultural Province at the present time, these conditions are a source of great gratification to our people, and no doubt will be to Canada as a whole—taking into consideration the fact that Alberta forms no small part of the granary to which the Empire at present looks as the source of its food supply."—Advertisement.

SAILOR EASILY FOUND CHUM

Knew There Was One Bugle Call to Which He Was Certain to Get Quick Response.

A man-o'-warsman on a visit to his native city gave an amusing instance of the readiness and resource of naval seamen. He had made an arrangement at New York to meet a chum from his own ship, but he had forgotten the number of the house, and he did not care to knock at every door until he came to the right one.

A rag-and-bone man with a bugle passed along. Jack seized his bugle.

"I'm looking for a chum," he explained.

Then he blew the grog call of the navy. As the last note died away a window was hastily flung up and a sailor's head was thrust out.

"Ah," said Jack, as he handed back the bugle. "I knew I'd find him."—Chicago Herald.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Relieve After 20 Years' Suffering

Mrs. James Dotz, of Zanesville, O., is one of thousands of people who in the past 40 years have been relieved of the agonies of kidney trouble by using Dodd's Kidney Pills. Only recently we received an unsolicited letter from Mrs. Dotz, which reads as follows:

"For twenty long years I suffered with heart disease and bladder inflammation. I had frequent chills, cramps in the muscles and suffered from headache and backache. I was often dizzy and had flashes of heat and floating specks before my eyes. I could get no help until I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Then I began to improve right away and six boxes of these Pills completed the cure.

"My little boy also had kidney trouble and was cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I hope thousands of others, suffering as I have, hear of your wonderful remedy."

Mighty few people realize in time that Kidney Trouble is making its advances upon their health. They put off treatment—they say, "Oh, I'll be all right in a day or two." And the malady tightens its grip. Result: Bright's Disease, lengthy treatment, doctor's bills—often death.

Over-Camouflaged.

Dorothy not only liked her tea and coffee to have the appearance of being "reel and truly," but she also liked to taste the flavor of each. One afternoon her mother took her to a friend's home, where tea was served at five o'clock. The hostess gave Dorothy what she usually gave her own children—hot water, sugar and milk. Dorothy tasted hers politely and ate her little cakes.

"Why, Dorothy, you aren't drinking your tea! Isn't it sweet enough?" asked the hostess.

"Yes, it's sweet enough," replied the child.

"Then why aren't you taking it?"

"It's too thin," she replied.

A WONDERFUL LETTER FROM A SOLDIER

Old Veteran Suffers From Stomach Trouble for 30 Years—Then Finds Relief in PEPS-AID.

Mr. Bivins of Decatur, Illinois, writes: "I have always thought I would never allow my name to be used in connection with the many advertised medicines but, since I have received such wonderful benefit from the use of PEPS-AID for stomach trouble, I believe it would be wrong for me to withhold my name from the public. I was a sufferer from stomach trouble for more than thirty years and tried very many doctors and patent medicines with only temporary relief. Since I finished taking the last of two boxes of PEPS-AID, I have been entirely free from any stomach trouble."

WILL ASSIST SECRETARY BAKER

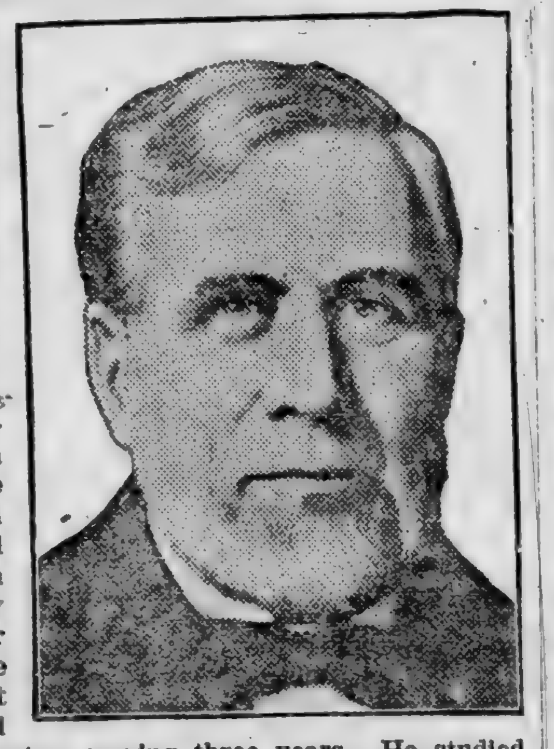
When it became necessary to confer with Secretary of War Baker, Maj. Benedict Crowell was obliged to put on his overcoat and cap and step across the street in Washington to the state, war and navy building. But now he has taken his typewriter from the Mills building to the office of assistant secretary of war.

President Wilson has appointed Major Crowell to help the secretary of war as assistant secretary with some of the difficulties and intricate problems connected with carrying on and winning the war. Major Crowell is an engineer by profession and first showed his merit by his expert advice to the general munitions board, especially concerning steel production immediately after the formation of the national council of defense in Washington. It was in the engineer corps that he was given his commission, and later he was placed in charge of the Washington office of the Panama canal. Major Crowell is a man thoroughly trained in the technical matters pertaining to the munitions situation, and as he, too, came from Cleveland, O., it is believed that the secretary and his assistant will work in closest harmony.

SPRECKELS, THE SUGAR MAN

Claus A. Spreckels, president of the Federal Sugar Refining company, who, in the recent investigation into the sugar and coal shortage made startling accusations against the government's food administration, and who in turn was accused by Mr. Hoover as being a foe to the food rule, is one of the best-known sugar men in the country. He was born in San Francisco in 1858, of German ancestry. His father, known as the "Sugar King," had established the California Sugar refinery in San Francisco, and it was here, where he went to work at seventeen, that the young Spreckels had his opportunity to study all phases of the sugar business. In 1892, after he had served as secretary of all the Spreckels companies, he was transferred to Philadelphia as vice president and general manager of the Spreckels Sugar Refining company, which had been established two years previously in order to compete with the trust in the Eastern market. In 1895 the plant was sold to the American Sugar Refining company at a large profit. Mr. Spreckels then decided to retire from business, and, severing all connections with the family companies, he departed for a year's travel in Europe. The next year, however, found him in Hawaii, in charge of the enormous sugar plantations of the Hawaii Commercial and Sugar company. Five years later he again retired from business and traveled in Europe for three years. Back in New York again, he soon became active as an organizer of the Federal Sugar Refining company, which was capitalized at $10,000,000. He became its first president, and has held that office ever since.

WON FAME AS STATESMAN



One of the most picturesque figures in the senate is that of Senator Knute Nelson, whose decision to retire from the senate has met with insistent protest on the part of his friends. But inasmuch as he has the reputation of being "the hardest-headed individual in the senate" it is not thought likely that even President Wilson's letter urging him to return will induce any change of mind. He has been Minnesota's senator for four successive terms, since 1895.

Born in Voss, Norway, in 1843, descended, as he says himself, from a long line of Norwegian pirates, Knute Nelson came to the United States with his mother when six years old, and they made their first American home in Chicago. Knute helped his mother by selling papers in the streets. Later they moved to Wisconsin, and for three years he attended the academy at Albion. In the Civil war he entered the Fourth Wisconsin Volunteer infantry, serving three years. He studied law after the war, and was admitted to the bar in 1867. He was elected to the house of representatives in 1883, after having served terms in the legislatures of both Minnesota and Wisconsin. After six years in the lower house of congress he tired and resumed his law practice. He was elected governor of Minnesota in 1892 and was re-elected two years later, but resigned in 1895 to become United States senator.

Senator Nelson is described as "short of stature, big boned, well set up."

IS HONORED BY SCIENTISTS

Theodore William Richards, president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science, was born in Germantown, Pa., on January 31, 1868, and is the son of William T. Richards, a famous American painter of marine and landscapes, and Anna Matlack Richards, well known for her poetical writings.

Scientific societies at home and abroad have honored him with elections. In the United States he is a member of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences (1891), the American Philosophical society (1903) and since 1899 of the National Academy of Sciences. In 1914 he served the American Chemical society as its president, also he is an honorary member of the Chemists club of New York city. Among his honors abroad are foreign membership in the London Chemical society (1908) and honorary or corresponding membership in the Royal Institute of Great Britain (1906), the Royal Academy of Sweden (1907), and the Royal Berlin Academy of Sciences (1909). His membership in the American association is of comparatively recent date; for he joined it only at its Boston meeting in 1898, and a year later was made a fellow. At the New York meeting last year his eminence in the domain of chemistry easily made him a worthy candidate for recognition and the association gladly conferred on him the greatest honor in its gift.—From the Scientific American.

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

BABY BEARS.

"In the winter, at the start of the new year," said Daddy, "when Mother Bear was sleeping and dozing and dreaming in her home back in the hole of a big rock, the little bears arrived.

"There were three babies and how beautiful they were! They were not able to see the world for their eyes were closed. They were black, like their mother and so soft and furry and round.

"They nestled up to their mother and seemed to say, 'Oh, mother, what would we do without you?' And the mother loved them for their very helplessness.

"Five weeks went by before they opened their eyes, and then what a wonderful world they saw. They were still in their cave home, for the cold weather had not passed and Mother Black Bear was going to take no chances with her babies.

"They could not really walk at all. Every time they tried to walk a little, they fell down. They did not know how to balance themselves and their legs didn't seem to be able to hold them up.

"But each day they tried a little more, and Mother Bear helped them, for she had no intention of taking them out of the cave until they could walk.

"And in the cave she told them in sleepy tones, for she was so very sleepy, of all the things they must guard against when they went out into the world.

"The babies too were very sleepy and they only had these lessons now and again, for the sleep was making them strong, and their mother had eaten enough in the fall to do for the winter for herself and for her babies as well.

"Baby bears," the mother grunted, and now they looked at her out of their baby eyes and seemed to say,

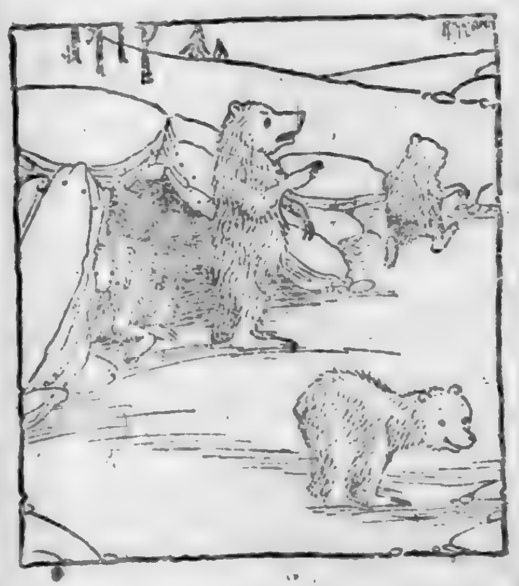
"'Would anyone ever hurt you? And would we ever hurt anyone? Oh no, we love to romp and sleep and eat. We could never be wild and hunt.'

"But of course the mother knew better so she told them stories of adventures she had had.

"She taught them of the berries they must eat and of the things which would make them feel well and strong. She also told them of the bad things they must not touch—the things which would make their little tummies feel very miserable indeed and which would make them quite, quite sick.

"And when, at last, they went out of the cave, and saw the real world, the trees and the forest paths, they wanted to start off at once for adventures, for the world looked so mysterious and wondrous.

"But Mother Bear would not let them start out alone, though suddenly they seemed to feel they were quite able to look after themselves.



They Wanted to Start Off for Adventures.

"'We won't get hurt, mother,' they begged.

"'Do you want to leave your old mother?' the black bear asked.

"'We love you, mother, but we want to see the world,' they said.

"And they would have escaped that moment and gone off, but Mother Bear saved them from the big man's gun. 'Bang,' went the gun, and Mother Bear received a slight wound.

"The baby bears were around her in a flash, but mother bear was safe for the man with the gun had hurriedly gone when he had seen how near the old bear was. And he had seen her teeth and had almost been able to feel them!

"And the babies knew their teeth would never have done. They, too, had had a glimpse of their mother's anger and their mother's strength.

"And as they licked the wound they said,

"'We won't leave you, mother bear. We don't know the world as yet.'

"And Mother Black Bear groaned with the hurt from the slight wound in her shoulder, but still more she grunted with pleasure for her babies had seen that they still needed their mother.

"And oh, Mother Black Bear did love her little mischievous black babies, and she was even glad of her wound for it showed the cubs their teeth would never have frightened anyone away, and that they still needed their mother in this big world where all creatures struggled so to live!"

OUR BOYS IN FRANCE AND HOME PROTECTION

The men on the firing line represent the pick of our American youth. One in four of our boys at home was sick, rejected because of physical deficiency. Many times the kidneys were to blame.

If we wish to prevent old age coming on too soon, or if we want to increase our chances for a long life, Dr. Pierce of the Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., says that you should drink plenty of water daily before meals. Then procure at your nearest drug store Anuric (double strength). This An-u-ric drives the uric acid out and cures backache and rheumatism.

If we wish to keep our kidneys in the best condition a diet of milk and vegetables, with only little meat once a day, is the most suitable. Drink plenty of pure water, take Anuric three times a day for a month. It sells for 60c.

Step into the drug store and ask for a sixty-cent package of Anuric, or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. Anuric, many times more potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar. A short trial will convince you.

O, saviours we have never seen,
Forgive us that we are so slow!
God--if that blood should cry in vain,
And we have let our moment go!

We wish that every woman in r Branch would read the above rse, think if YOU have any spare ime and then read it again.

A Surgical Dressing class has en formed and will meet Friday ernoon of each week at the me of Mrs. Buckingham. Anyone with patience and willing fin s can do this work for it is not ficult. The only requisition is at you provide yourself with a g-sleeved white or light apron d a 30-in. square of thin white wn for a head covering. This is National Red Cross rule.

To work with the class you need t be present every week, neither you obliged to put in a whole ternoon. You can come when you please and work a few minutes an hour, or a whole afternoon, just as it is most convenient for you.

Muslin bandages will be made for a beginning, until we have a sufficient number for shipment. Later on we expect to make gauze dressings.

Twenty-four ladies were busy in the sewing room last Wednesday. Let the good work speed on.

If possible we would like to have all of the knitting brought in for shipment by February 1st.

We have the material on hand for the layettes but have not yet received the patterns. This delay is very annoying but it is unavoidable so let us have patience and we hope the matter will be adjusted some time this week. We are obliged to use Red Cross patterns when we use Red Cross funds to buy material and since Ft. Wayne could not supply us we have had to send to the Supply House at Cleveland. Hence the delay.

To people interested in Red Cross work and in the territory our Branch includes, it may also be of interest to know that the St. Joe Branch is providing opportunities for doing more different kinds of Red Cross work than any other Branch in DeKalb county. The loyal support of the men and women of our township and the north half of Newville township has made this possible. We are doing good work and no one is breaking under the strain, for the work has been well divided and we are proving the old adage that "many hands make light work."

Oil Supply Is Low.

The oil situation is also alarming the local tanks being empty. R. A. Fry states that he will be able to supply his patrons a few days longer by getting some from Grabill, but just when a car would arrive here was not known definitely. The report is that over 40 per cent. of the stations in the South Bend district are without oil. A situation never known to the Standard Oil Co., before. While they have plenty of oil, they are unable to get the railroads to move it.

MADE-IN-GERMANY LIES CIRCULATED IN CANADA

Canada is also having trouble with Made-in-Germany lies calculated to hinder Canadian food conservation according to an official statement received from the Canadian food controller by the United States food administration.

The stories bothering Canada are of the same general character as those the United States food administrator recently denounced in this country, such as the ridiculous salt and blueing famine fakes and the report that the government would seize housewives' stocks of home canned goods.

The Canadian food controller estimates that when the people listen to and pass on such stories, each one has the power of destruction that lies in a battalion of soldiers.

"Stories without even a vestige of foundation have been scattered broadcast," said the Canadian statement. "Nor have they come to life casually. They have started simultaneously in different parts of the country and in each instance have been calculated to arouse public indignation.

"They are insidious, subtle, persistent. Bit by bit they dissipate public trust, the great essential in the work of food control.

"It lies with every individual to forbear from criticism; to refrain from passing on the vagrant and harmful story, and thus the more effectively to co-operate in work which is going to mean more than the majority of people yet realize."

THE UNITED STATES FOOD ADMINISTRATION SAYS:

There is no royal road to food conservation. We can only accomplish this by the voluntary action of our whole people, each element in proportion to its means. It is a matter of equality of burden; a matter of minute saving and substitution at every point in the 20,000,000 kitchens, on the 20,000,000 dinner tables, and in the 2,000,000 manufacturing, wholesale and retail establishments of the country.

This Is Our Winter of Test

SERVING food is a local problem for each community. Prices and definite rules for every one cannot be formulated. It is a duty for each one to eat only so much as is necessary to maintain the human body healthy and strong. This winter of 1918 is the period when is to be tested here in America whether our people are capable of voluntary individual sacrifice to save the world. That is the purpose of the organization of the United States Food Administration—by voluntary effort to provide the food that the world needs.

U. S. FOOD ADMINISTRATION

NEED BIG HERDS

Europe's Meat Supply Must Come From America.

Warring Nations Have Depleted Live Stock at Enormous Rate, Even Killing Dairy Cattle For Food.

American stock breeders are being asked to conserve their flocks and herds in order to meet Europe's tremendous demands for meats during the war and probably for many years afterward.

The United States food administration reports that American stock raisers have shown a disposition to co-operate with the government in increasing the nation's supply of live stock.

Germany today is probably better supplied with live stock than any other European nation. When the German armies made their big advance into France and then retreated virtually all the cattle in the invaded territory — approximately 1,800,000 head—were driven behind the German lines.

But in England—where 2,400,000 acres of pasture lands have been turned into grain fields—the cattle herds are decreasing rapidly. One of the reasons apparently is the declining maximum price scale adopted by the English as follows: For September, $17.76 per 100 pounds; October, $17.28; November and December, $16.08; January, $14.40. The effect of these prices was to drive beef animals on the market as soon as possible.

In France the number of cattle as well as the quality have shown an enormous decline during the war. Where France had 14,807,000 head of cattle in 1913, she now has only 12,841,900, a decrease of 16.6 per cent. And France is today producing only one gallon of milk compared to two and one-half gallons before the war.

Denmark and Holland have been forced to sacrifice dairy herds for beef because of the lack of necessary feed.

Close study of the European meat situation has convinced the Food Administration that the future problem of America lies largely in the production of meat producing animals and dairy products rather than in the production of cereals for export when the war will have ceased.

BRITISH GOVERNMENT HELPS PAY FOR BREAD

There has been much misunderstanding about the bread program in England. It is true that the Englishman buys a loaf of bread for less than an American can, but it is poorer bread, and the British government is paying $200,000,000 a year toward the cost of it.

All the grain grown in Great Britain is taken over by the government at an arbitrary price and the imported wheat purchased on the markets at the prevailing market price. This is turned over to the mills by the government at a price that allows the adulterated war bread loaf of four pounds to sell at 18 cents, the two pound loaf at 9 cents and the one pound loaf at 5 cents.

In France, under conditions somewhat similar, but with a larger extraction, the four pound loaf sells for 16 cents.

MAKING MEATLESS DAYS PERMANENT.

In the meatless menu there is a fertile field for developing new and nourishing dishes, according to E. H. Niles, writing in the Hotel Gazette, who believes that the present shortage of meat and fats will not end with the coming of peace, but may grow more acute and continue for five or six years, thus making it worth while to develop menus of grain, vegetables and fish on a more or less permanent basis. Meat can be replaced by cereals and other protein foods, or may be served in very small portions as a flavoring for other food. In making up meatless menus this author finds our American Creole and southern cuisine a broad field for investigation.

Two Grand Fizzles

The DeKalb county Grand Jury returned indictments against Mrs. Ray C. Stewart and Chastine Johnston at their December Term, 1917.

Mrs. Stewart was charged with embezzling eighty odd dollars from certain funds of the Auburn branch of the Red Cross Society. It is understood that certain officers of the local Auburn branch were back of the indictment and prosecution.

Mrs. Stewart staged a play in Auburn some weeks ago for the benefit of the Red Cross. The Red Cross was to receive seventy per cent of the net proceeds from the play and Mrs. Stewart thirty per cent. Certain officers of the Red Cross asserted that no true accounting had been made by Mrs. Stewart and that the local branch were defrauded out of eighty odd dollars and that Mrs. Stewart embezzled the amount.

The evidence introduced revealed the lamentable fact that no business methods were employed by the officers of the Auburn branch of the Society and that they had not carried out their compact in the enterprise, but that on the contrary had thrown all the work of preparing the children for the play and in addition thereto also the sale of the tickets. No crookedness was revealed on the part of Mrs. Stewart and her work, and with the heavy work that she had to do, it was simply impossible to keep tab on all the sales of the tickets, and that no definite data could be had at the time of final settlement.

Mrs. Mary Beidler, one of the local officers, claimed that Mrs. Stewart had in her possession certain funds in amount as named and that they had been embezzled by Mrs. Stewart. Mrs. Beidler seemed to be back of the prosecution but absolutely failed in producing evidence to establish her claim, and on Saturday when court closed, all evidence being in and the arguments of counsel having been made it was practically a foregone conclusion that Mrs. Stewart would be proclaimed "Not guilty" by the jury.

Court convened on Monday afternoon to finally dispose of the case. The Judge, C. A. Yotter of Angola, charged the Jury. They went to the Jury room and in just seventeen minutes returned to the court room with the verdict, "Not guilty."

Friday and Saturday were consumed in hearing of the evidence and arguments of counsel. The court room was crowded each day. As the case advanced from stage to stage in the hearing the conviction and sympathy of those present were plainly manifest for Mrs. Stewart. On Monday the court room was again well filled, and when the Judge read the verdict, those present gave Mrs. Stewart a great ovation by clapping of hands.

With a cost of nearly one hundred and fifty dollars to DeKalb county, vain imaginations have been exploded. And "Jones" pays the freight, but who can measure the injury done the Red Cross Society in Auburn and the hurt inflicted upon Mrs Stewart. Long and weary days in jail, deep humiliation and mental suffering, and while there are intimations of damage suits, yet money cannot right a wrong. Ketchem and Nyce were for the State and Willis Rhoads and Hans Meland were for the defense.

Chastine Johnston, man of Ring Buster fame, a thorn in the flesh to delicate constitutions, well known in St. Joe and vicinity, was indicted by the same Grand Jury which indicted Mrs Stewart, for perjury. Briefly the case seems to be this: Reports were current that certain parties, two in number, had been exempted by the Exemption Board on the claim of dependant families. It was known that the wife of one of these men had been, in a goodly measure, the support of the family. Johnston informed Conscription Agent Jesse Eschbach of Indianapolis of the current reports. Mr. Willis visited Auburn, had an interview with Mr. Johnston, Johnston telling Willis of the current reports Some time later Willis returned with an aaffidavit ready made and after some persuasion induced Johnston to sign the affidavit. This occurred some months ago, September 11, 1917. In some strange and mysterious way, for the good of his country, got the matter before the Grand Jury and Johnston was indicted.

It seems that one of the men named in the affidavit was beyond conscription age. There may possibly be an interrogation point over against Mr. Willis' purpose in securing that affidavit.

Johnston at once employed J. E. Pomeroy and J. M. Life as his attorney. Pomeroy and Life filed a motion to quash affidavit on several grounds. The State employed Mr. Atkinson to assist Messrs. Nyce and Ketchem in the prosecution. The motion to quash was argued on Friday afternoon, and the attorneys for Johnston contending that the so-called affidavit was not an affidavit as Mr. Willis was only empowered to take affidavits or other legal evidence in case where an appeal was pending. Congress has so named that fact. Then further, had Willis been acting with the scope of his autority, the offense would not be within the jurisdiction of the State Courts, but a matter for the Federal Courts alone. The prosecution argued that the state had concurrent jurisdiction with the Federal Courts. Judge Link took the matter under advisement and then on Saturday rendered his decision, sustaining the motion to quash the indictment, declaring that only the Federal Court could possibly have any jurisdiction.

By the Court's decision DeKalb County was saved the highly exciting occasion of another great trial.

Once before has Johnston had the attention of the Grand Jury in the matter of certain things published in his Ring Buster, but that investigation was not to investigate Johnston but to investigate the assertions contained in his Ring Buster. And strangely the Grand Jury's report of finding nothing at all worth notice, save one short weight case, was duly published in the Auburn papers. But of names turned over to the Grand Jury upon that occasion, but few were called to appear before the Grand Jury.

To one outside who has known Johnston well it would appear that to burst the Ring Buster is the one desireable quantity. What next?

Herman L. Brown, DeKalb county food administrator, announces that the United States food administration has prepared a new program, effective at once, for the conservation of foods. This is a change from the old program and will be the means of sending much needed supplies to our allies in the war. Patriotic citizens will govern themselves accordingly.

The program:

1. Wheatless Monday.
2. Wheatless Wednesday.
3. One wheatless meal each day.
4. Meatless Tuesday.
5. Porkless Saturday.
6. One meatless meal each day.
7. Save sugar every day.
8. Save fats every day.

New pledge cards will be out soon, setting forth these regulations in detail.

Deputy food administrators have been appointed in each township as follows in the townships surrounding this community.

Newville—Neff Culler.
Wilmington—Roy Oberlin.
Concord--G. M. Barney.
Spencer--J. W. Henderson.

These deputies are expected to promote food saving in their territories and to handle the smaller problems that require attention, thus relieving the county administrator. The closing of the stores on Mondays still holds and the same precaution is necessary in the selling of certain food stuffs. Mr. Barney will be responsibile for the situation in Concord township.

Three More Deaths

Occurred in St. Joe and Vicinity Within the Past Week-Making 8 Deaths During the Past Month.

Rebecca Ann Melten, daughter of Andrew and Mary Melton, was born in Knox County, Ohio, July 13, 1838. Died at her home in St. Joe, Indiana, January 23, 1918, at the age of 79 years, 6 months, 10 days.

When she was but two years old she was brought to DeKalb County Indiana, by her parents who settled on a farm about two miles northwest of the present site of the town of St. Joe. Here she spent her child-hood days and having grown to woman-hood, 1856 she was married to Ebenezer Smith.

After her marriage she returned to Ohio with her husband and first-born child about the time of the beginning of the Civil War. Here two more children came to bless their home. Her husband enlisted in the army and died at Richmond, Virginia, in 1865 while in the service of his country.

Like Naomi of old, Mrs. Smith, widowed and sorrowful, returned with her three children to this place where her conscious childhood years were spent and happy married life began and here with the exception of these five years in Ohio she has continuously resided.

Providence seemed to smile upon her fatherless family and she had the happy privilege of bringing her children up to the years of maturity and all remained to bless the declining years of life and to close her eyes in death. They are Andrew Frank Smith, of Chicago Junction; James R. Smith, who always remained at home and was a constant companion and comfort to his mother during the many years of her lonely widowhood, and Mary Josephine VanFleit, of Garrett, Indiana.

She has also one living brother, F. E. Melton, who is the only living one of a family of eight children. She also is survived by seven grand-children, two great grand-children and other relatives and many friends.

In early life Sister Smith professed a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ, and soon after her marriage became a member of the Concord Methodist Protestant Church. January 16, 1885, after the Methodist Protestant Church was organized in St. Joe, she transferred her name to this class and has given many years of faithful service to the church with which she was identified. She was always liberal and conscientious in giving of her means for the support of the gospel and as long as she was able was very regular in attendance at Divine Worship.

In later years she was to a great extent deprived of that privilege but still manifested a deep interest in the affairs of the church, enquiring after and concerned about the welfare of the local congregation and informing herself of the general work of the church by constantly reading the Methodist Recorder.

She was faithful to her duties to the last moment and with a simple faith and abiding trust in her Heavenly Father she fell asleep. Her life was of the kind that it was worth while to have lived.

Funeral services were held from the house, Friday afternoon at 1 o'clock. Rev. Coons, officiating. E. R. Kinsey assisted by Mr. Clark, of Auburn, funeral directors. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

We wish to express our appreciation of the assistance rendered during the continued illness and death of our mother. Also for the expressions of sympathy.

Libbie Arehart, daughter of Adam and Mariah Arehart, was born on the farm now owned by her husband, six miles east of Auburn, in DeKalb County, Indiana, February 17, 1862.

She was married to William H. Pepple, September 30, 1883. To them were born two children, Earl Pepple, of Auburn, and Mayola Kinsey, of St. Joe. Besides these she leaves two brothers, John Arehart, of Swanton, Ohio, and Daniel Arehart, of Steel City, Nebraska, and one sister, Mrs. Ella St. Claire, of Auburn. One sister, Mrs. Jennie Henning, died last November.

After their marriage, Mr. and Mrs. Pepple moved to near Waterloo where they resided for four years and then returned to their farm where they continued to live till seven years ago when they moved to St. Joe.

Sister Pepple was converted when but a girl under the ministry of Rev. William Meese. About twenty-five years ago she with her husband united with the Union Chapel United Brethren in Christ and remained faithful in that connection till death. She was endowed with a charming, attractive personality and a kind and thoughtful heart which expressed itself in kindness and service to others.

Since coming to St. Joe she has been actively connected with the social life and was a member of the Culture Literary Club of which she was president last year.

Her sickness and suffering was of several months duration but in it all she was patient and no words of murmur were heard from her lips. Trusting in her Savior she peacefully fell asleep on January 25, 1918, at the age of 55 years, 11 months and 8 days.

May those who mourn be given grace to suffer and be strong and may the words of assurance through our Lord Jesus Christ give solace to their troubled hearts.

Funeral services were held from the Lutheran Church, Monday at 1 o'clock, in charge of Rev. J. C. Coons and Rev. S. M. Hill, Pastor of U. B. Church, of Atwood, Ind. E R. Kinsey, director. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

Among the out of town people who attended the funeral of Mrs. Pepple were: Mr. and Mrs. Henry St. Clair, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Pepple, Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Ross St. Clair, Mrs. Jane Pepple and Mrs. Bertha Plumm of Auburn, Mr. Geo. Pepple, wife and son of Waterloo, Mrs. William Rennecker and three children, Mr. and Mrs. Abram Sherck, Ivan Hutton and mother of near the former home of Mrs. Pepple and Rev. S. M. Hill of Atwood.

Martha M. Draggoo, daughter of William and Louisa, was born in Ashland county, Ohio, April 24, 1851 and died at her home, three miles west of Hicksville, January 27, 1918, at the age of 66 years, 9 months and 3 days.

When she was but two years old she came with her parents to Concord township, DeKalb county, Indiana, and spent her entire life here until four years ago when they moved to their present place of residence. She was married to Waynfield Scott July 20, 1867. To this union were born two children, William Scott who lives on the home place and Frank Scott, of Deshler, Ohio. Besides her companion and sons she leaves behind three brothers, James Draggoo of Auburn, Jake Draggoo, of Omaha, Nebraska and Dave Draggoo of LaGrange, Indiana, two sisters, Mrs. Louisa Link and Mrs. Frances Long both of Beulah, Michigan, two half sisters, Mrs. Minnie Johnson, of Fort Wayne and Mrs. Avilla Baker, of Auburn. Besides these she leaves a host of friends who feel keenly their loss and extend their deepest sympathy to the bereaved family.

Although she had never united with any church, about eight years ago she professed a saving faith in the Lord Jesus Christ and was baptized in Crystal Lake at Beulah, Michigan.

On the eight day of last March she was stricken with paralysis since which time she had been a constant sufferer. All was done that loving hands could do and her companion watched constantly by her side but death was stronger than love and in the silent watch of the night her spirit took its flight.

She met death bravely and calmly. The end was anticipated and she gave ample assurance to her loved ones that she was ready for the great change and the end came peacefully.

Funeral services were held from the Lutheran Church at St. Joe on Wednesday at 11 o'clock. J. C. Coons, officiating. Interment in Riverside Cemetery.

Our Political Announcements

For Auditor

Editor St. Joe News:
Please announce through your paper that I will be a candidate before the May primaries for the nomination of county auditor, subject to the decision of the Democratic voters.

A Man's Reflection.

The day's work done, I slip home, read of the potato, think of the egg, remember the grits, retire and dream of meat, arise very much refreshed, slip on my leatherette shoes with oneeda soles; read a chapter in the book of Hoover, partake of a slice of toasted semi-bread slightly greased with oleo; sip gently and lightly a cup of stewed water darkened to an army brown by the shadow of a grain of coffee.

Sometimes a rice is eaten as a cereal. These snstaining rations devoured, it's back to the daily grind. We have been told that the way to the man's heart is through his stomach, and this being the case mine should be easily reached now —no obstruction lying in the right-of-way.

But I have seen a new light—in reading the paper today. I see where some rash merchant advertises that he will sell 3 peanuts, 1 Irish potato, 2 string beans, 1 thin slice of cheese, 1 tomato, 2 drams of mixed sugar and 1 gill of flour for the ridiculous low price of $9.90 for the entire smear.

Mrs. Dr. Kramer Divorced

A divorce was granted Mrs. Dora Kramer, of Butler, wife of Dr. A. A. Kramer. She was granted alimony of $2,200 in cash, the custody of the nine-year-old son, Hal Kramer, who is the only child, and $35 a month for the boy's support, excepting during one month of the year, when the father can have him. Mr. Kramer did not put up any defense.

A Word in Regard to the Coal Situation.

We have strict orders from the Fuel Administrator that we are not allowed to sell coal to people outside of St. Joe, Ind., unless they are unable to get wood, either from their own farms, or to buy same. Before we can then sell them we must have a written order from the Town Fuel Administrator which will only be given in severe needy cases. The coal situation in St. Joe is not good, and at present we have none on hand but we are trying very hard as are also the County and Town Fuel Administrators to get more coal for St. Joe. In times like these we must all work together, co-operation in all things will help us win the fight we are fighting for, remember co-operation by all, that is the way to do your bit. One more word to you all. Where-ever you can possibly get a load of wood to burn, do so. Every load of wood that comes to St. Joe. HELPS UNCLE SAM JUST THAT MUCH MORE.

IN CHARGE OF TRANSPORTATION

In giving an appointment as brigadier general to William Wallace Atterbury and placing him in charge of transportation with the American expeditionary force in France, the administration has followed its excellent scheme of selecting some man who has made a conspicuous success of a large-sized job in civil life and asking him to assume the same work in a military capacity. For over eight years Mr. Atterbury has been the vice president of the Pennsylvania railroad specifically in charge of transportation. Born at New Albany, Ind., in 1866, grandson of Catherine Boudinot whose uncle, Elias Boudinot, had been at one time president of the Continental congress, he was reared in Detroit, and graduated from Yale, to enter the Altoona shops of the Pennsylvania railroad as an apprentice in 1886. From 1889 to 1892 he was assistant road foreman of engines on various divisions of the Pennsylvania railroad. In 1892 he became assistant engineer of motive power and the following year he was made master mechanic for the Pennsylvania company at Fort Wayne, Ind.

His first important step was when he became superintendent of motive power for the Pennsylvania system east of Pittsburgh in 1896. Five years later he became general superintendent of motive power. Thence to the position of general manager of the Pennsylvania, eastern division, followed in 1903. Six years later, in 1909, he became fifth vice president in charge of transportation. Two years later he became fourth vice president and a director of the Pennsylvania Railroad company.—Country Life.

WANTS NEW CABINET POSITION

A department of munitions under a cabinet head, known as the secretary of munitions, is proposed in a bill introduced by Senator Chamberlain, chairman of the senate military committee, as a result of its investigations of war operations.

The new department would operate for the duration of the war and one year thereafter. The bill has the backing of the senate committee and will be strongly pressed. The new secretary of munitions would have the power under the president's direction to control arms, ammunition, food, clothing, equipment, tentage, transportation and any other materials the president shall designate as munitions of war.

Government bureaus, agencies and funds necessary to a munitions administration would be transferred to the new department, which contemplates control of naval as well as army supplies.

"I believe if congress can see its way to the enactment of this measure," says Mr. Chamberlain, "and the proper man is placed at the head of the department of munitions, America will soon be occupying its proper place at the battle front.

"It will be noted that the measure is only in force for the continuance of the war which brings it into existence."

BRITAIN SENDS FAMOUS MAN

Earl Reading, lord chief justice, has been appointed British high commissioner in the United States. Besides taking over the work of the British embassy in Washington he will have charge of the work of the British war mission and its establishment in New York and Washington.

The official announcement of Earl Reading's appointment says that Lord Northcliffe will remain head of the British mission to the United States in London.

Earl Reading will retain his position of lord chief justice, but as his appointment to Washington is for an indefinite period it is presumed that it will be necessary to appoint a deputy to perform the duties of chief justice during his absence.

It is probable that Earl Reading will concentrate his efforts on the war work and that the purely diplomatic matters will be in the hands of a charge d'affaires. Col. E. D. Swinton, assistant secretary of the war cabinet and one of the originators of the British tank, will accompany the lord chief justice as an attache.

Earl Reading was attorney general of England as Sir Rufus Isaacs. In October, 1913, he was appointed lord chief justice to succeed Lord Alverstone and was elevated to the peerage in December of that year.

WILL SUPERVISE WOMEN'S WORK

Significant of the importance of women in industry is the appointment of Miss Hilda Muhlhauser as assistant manager of the newly organized United States employment service of the department of labor. She not only will have the supervision of all women's work in the department of labor, but will assist in carrying out the general plan for the extension of the employment service of the government to meet the emergency.

For the last ten years Miss Muhlhauser has devoted her time and energy to all the phases of the employment problem, making intensive studies as well as practical investigations. She has written many articles upon her surveys of the unemployed.

After eight years of service as associate head worker in a Cleveland settlement, she became director of the women's and girls' bureau in Cleveland, O., said to be the first bureau of its kind in the country. Under her leadership the bureau made a specialty of every type of worker, whether college graduate, industrial worker or domestic, thus making it possible for an employer to secure a trained worker, a stenographer for his office or a maid for his home.

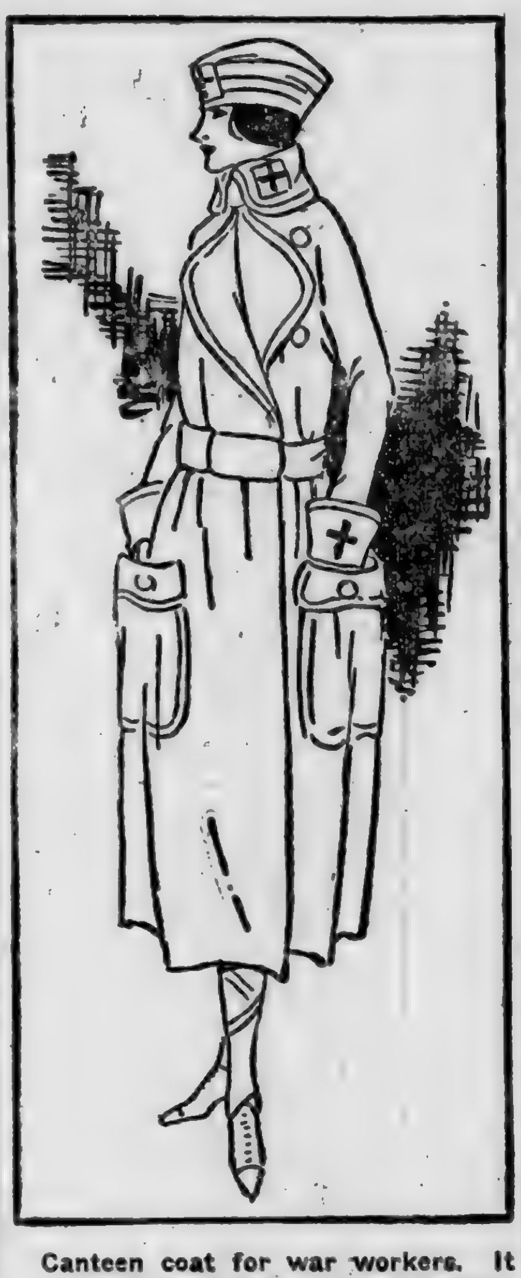
She had long advocated that to obtain the best results an employment bureau should be maintained, not by private capital, but by city and state funds, and it was partly through her efforts that the state legislature of Ohio passed the first state legislation providing for vocational guidance.

NO WOOL IS USED IN NEW CLOTHES

New York.—It looks as though the wool conservation will be up to the men. The good offices of the French ambassador, M. Jusserand, were asked by the wool men here in order that the French designers would gladly cooperate with the American movement for the slim silhouette and the least possible use of wool.

However, it was not necessary for the French ambassador to lay much stress upon his request to Paris.

The French government had made the same request to its designers as the American government, and it was compliance with that request that created the narrow silhouette and the short, scant skirt which came out in French models last autumn.



Canteen coat for war workers. It was created by a Fifth avenue designer and is made of dark blue cloth with wide lap-over in front that allows the use of bloomers instead of a skirt beneath it, if desired. The red cross is made of cloth and placed on a square of horizon blue. The cap is of the material.

At any rate, the request for the gowns that are made of less than 4½ yards of wool has been met in Paris by an almost total elimination of wool in the new spring models.

Mme. Paquin, who is the head of the association of designers over there, says that America need have nothing to fear in regard to extravagance with material in the new clothes.

The silhouette is to be as slim as it was in the directoire. Every material that can possibly be woven will be used as a substitute for wool. Twine will be used for embroidery whenever available, instead of worsted.

Therefore, with the joining of hands across the sea and no drastic excuse for using wool, it is possible to predict that the early season will be filled with gowns and suits of tussah, silk, crepe de chine and artificial silk jersey.

What Men Can Do.

We women can wear thin materials in spring and summer, but men can't, or won't. Enormous quantities of worsteds are consumed for their suits throughout the year.

The army overcoats which were supplied by the thousands and took up a great mass of wool, were the first to come under the ban of extravagance as soon as the soldiers in France found that they were too long for the mud of Flanders and Picardy.

Other bits of extravagance which are unnecessary are included in a long list published by the manufacturers of men's clothing. A reduction in yardage will result if these certain features are eliminated.

From this list it would appear that the manufacturers of men's costumes have really gone into the conservation with determination. It is quite astonishing how many small things they have found that can be eliminated without detriment to the appearance or serviceability of the garment.

Their list is a lesson in thrift. Think of taking flaps from the pockets of vests, piping from seams, collars from vests, outside cash pockets from coats, tunnel loops from trousers and tabs from overcoat sleeves and finding that the conservation of material in these small features is enough to outfit a great number of soldiers.

It is a relief to have the burden of extravagance in clothes put over on the men. Women's shoulders have borne it for two centuries.

Now, let the men do the work of economy. Let every woman have her answer ready when she is accused of extravagance and waste in the changing of fashions and the buying of new clothes.

Season of Clinging Clothes.

Of one thing we are all certain: that our clothes will cling to the figure. Of another thing we are not quite certain: that the silhouette will be straight.

The tendency toward wrapped gowns and toward the oriental movement of fabric around the body is too strong and important to be overlooked. It is quite probable that the designers will offer it as a means of making the straight silhouette look out of fashion.

The extraordinary success of the Spanish movement in clothes in New York, which has come about from the stage and the new dances, accentuates the draping of the figure on the bias.

It will be interesting to see whether one silhouette has a marked victory over the other, or whether the battle between the two becomes a stalemate throughout the spring and summer. Today the draped figure is on the offensive. The straight silhouette is making a good defensive. All of which is excellent for the people who sell clothes.

There is little possibility that our clothes will flare, but there is no probability that they will be attenuated. A scarcity of wool does not mean a scarcity of other fabrics.

There is no evidence of a shortage in the common weaves of silk, satin, crepe and jersey, and the early spring models shown by the New York shops for the southern season, embody these materials in clothes that cling to the figure, but are scanty.

The materials chosen for the new spring gowns are admirable adjuncts of the new movement. Crepe de chine and tussah are in the lead, whereas satin is somewhat shelved for everything but evening gowns.

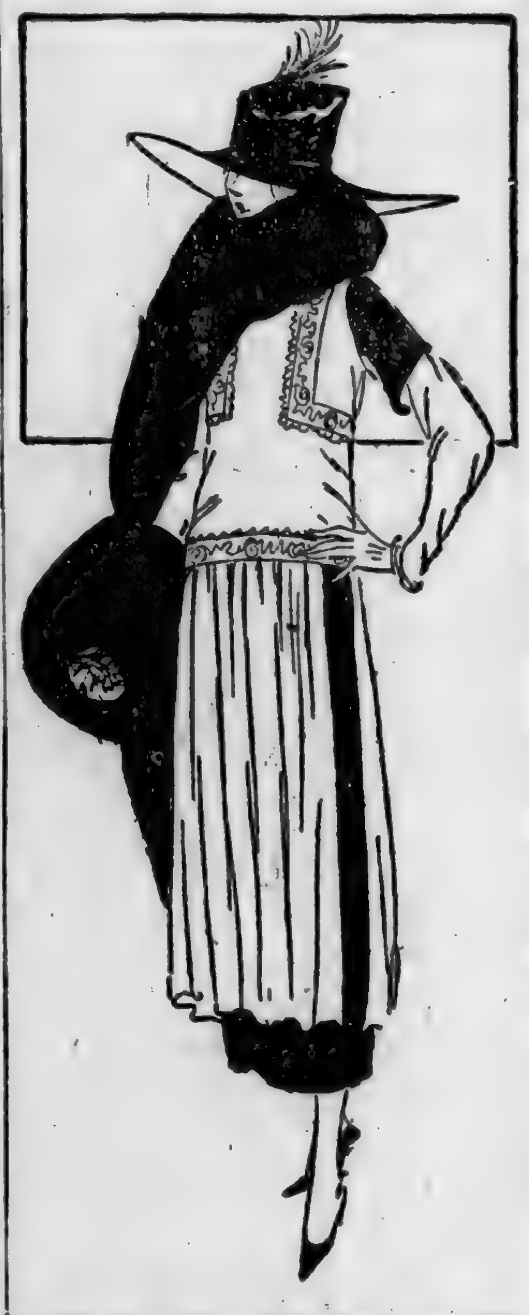
The Canteen Coat.

It was not possible for American fashions to avoid the military influence, although there was pressure against it here as in France. Old and half-forgotten wars gave the designers inspiration, but the present war was too vital to influence dress at this hour.

However, there are certain garments that have been taken up by women and put into high fashion, which are distinctly drawn from the battlefront in France.

One is the swinging cape and wrapped turban of horizon blue cloth. Another is the high boot or puttee that reaches nearly to the knees and is worn on the street; and a third—and this is the most dominant fashion—is the new canteen coat.

This can only be worn by members of the Red Cross, but who is there in this country today who hasn't the right to place a small or large Croix Rouge somewhere on the costume? The last drive caught almost everyone in its mesh.



This smart frock of blue jersey silk is made like a medieval tunic dropped over a narrow skirt of seal brown velvet. The tunic opens on one side to show skirt. The embroidery is blue, gold and brown. The upper portion of the sleeves is of the seal velvet.

This coat has been designed by a Fifth avenue dressmaker. It is of dark blue cloth. It laps over so broadly in front that one has a strong suspicion that there are bloomers beneath instead of a skirt.

The immense pockets are well below the hips. The revers fall back or lap over and fasten for warmth. On the cuff, and on the high turnover collar, is the red symbol placed on a square of horizon blue cloth. The cap, which is shaped somewhat like that of the Belgian officers, has the symbolic emblem in front.

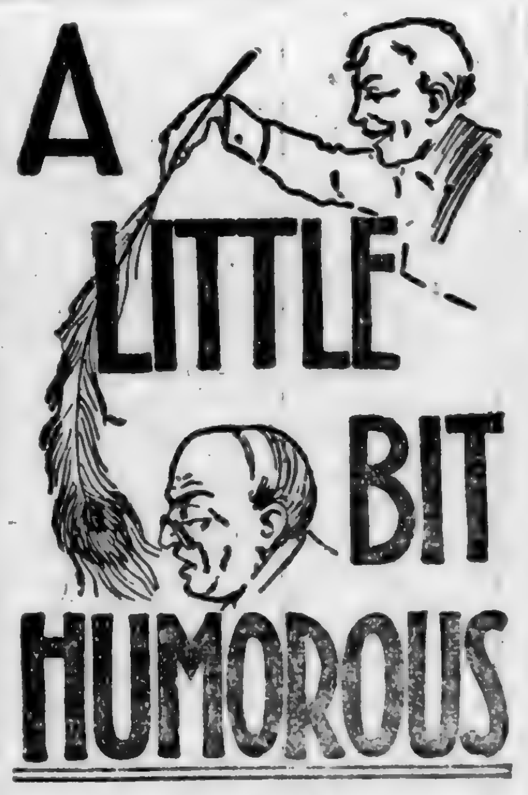
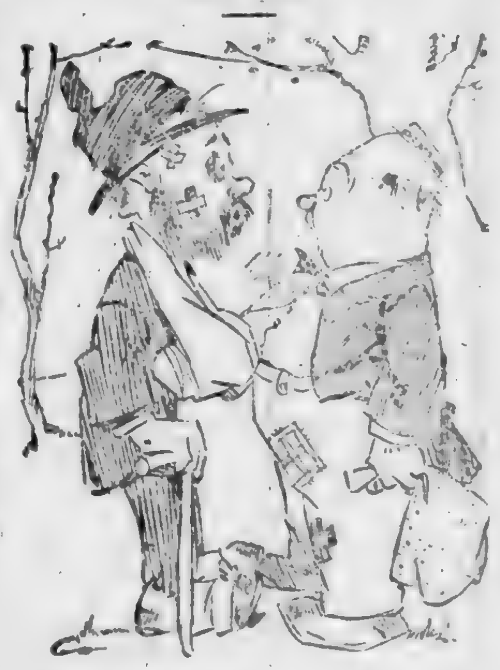
Figured Chiffon.

Frocks of figured chiffon are much worn for afternoon and for informal evening occasions. The material of these frocks is so decorative that they stand the simplest sort of treatment, and aside from a few gatherings and a little shirring are practically unadorned.

A LITTLE BIT HUMOROUS



HIS IDEA



"Hard luck again."

"Why so?"

"Just got hit with a horse and cart; when it might have been an automobile."

Is It Not!

It's easy to say what another should do
In the struggle for glory or pelf;
But when the same problems are put up to you
Ain't it hard to decide for yourself?

Of Course.

"There's one thing I'd like to know," said Mrs. Dubwaite.

"Well, my dear?" replied Mr. Dubwaite.

"Why is it that when you leave the house for your office in the morning you get there in about twenty minutes, but when you leave the office at night to come home it takes you anywhere from forty-five minutes to three hours to get here?"

"Why—er—that's easily explained. Toward the close of day obstacles accumulate."

Time to Concentrate.

"Why, I fell in love with first one girl and then another before I got married," said the susceptible young man. "I scattered my affections all over the map."

"That is all right, son," replied the elderly philosopher. "Nobody will object to what you did then, just so you broke yourself of the scattering habit on your wedding day."

Superb Strategy.

"Have you any geniuses in this town?"

"I don't recall but one just now."

"Poet, painter or musician?"

"No. He's a chap who contrives to stay illuminated week in and week out, despite the fact that this town is dry."

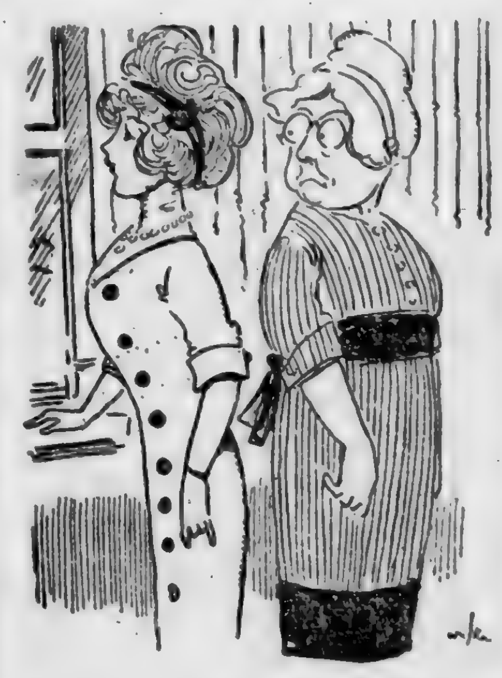
The Right Advice.

"What do you suppose Miss Pert said when I asked her if I was in the market for matrimonial consideration?"

"What did she say?"

"That I must go to Par before she could take any stock in my proposition."

MORE CLASSY



"Lovely sunset tonight, Mrs. De Swell?"

"Mercy, I never look at an American sunset! They're so much more classy over in Italy, don't you know."

Long Winded.

"Let's go."

"No. Let's wait a while longer. I believe the orator is reaching his peroration."

"You're mistaken. That's his handkerchief he's reaching for. He'll mop his brow with it and start all over again."

Not That Kind.

"Sir, your son made an asseveration—"

"Bless the boy! He's always making some kind of an invention."

WESTERN CANADA'S CEREAL CROP

One of the Best Ever Harvested.

The cereal crop of Western Canada for 1917 was the most valuable one ever harvested; the returns from all classes of live stock have been equally satisfactory. The wool clip was not only greater than in any previous year, but the price obtained was double that of 1916, which in turn was almost double that of the year before.

As was the case in 1915 and 1916 many farmers were able to pay for their land outright with the proceeds of their first year's crop. Further evidence of the prosperity of Western Canada is shown by the fact that one in every twenty of the population is now the owner of an automobile. If the farming community alone is taken, it will be found that the proportion of automobile owners is still greater. The bank clearings of the leading cities of Western Canada were considerably higher than they were in the corresponding period of 1916, and these were higher than the year before. In Winnipeg $300,000,000 more was cleared in the 11 months ending November 30 than in the same months a year ago.

The entry of the United States into the war has strengthened the bonds between that country and Canada. We are now working together for the same ends. Those who are not fighting are promoting a greater production of foodstuffs. In this connection Western Canada offers a wonderful opportunity. Not only can larger quantities of staple foodstuffs be produced, but the cost of production is lower and the remuneration greater than where land is more expensive. Notwithstanding the fact that the price of farm products has doubled during the past three years, there are millions of acres of arable land in Western Canada which can still be bought at a low price.

Western Canada has an enormous acreage prepared for seeding to wheat in 1918. It is larger than in 1917, and will probably surpass the record area put into crop in the year 1915, when the largest crop ever known in the West was harvested. The year 1918 should also see a further increase in live stock activity.

Farmers have been investing considerable sums in cattle; the high prices secured for wool and mutton have opened the eyes of Western farmers to the possibilities of sheep, and such was the demand for breeding animals last fall that it was impossible to meet it adequately; the campaign for greater hog production is expected to yield an increase of between 25 and 50 per cent in 1918.

Those who are contemplating coming to Western Canada cannot do better than come early in the spring when they can put in a crop and harvest it in the fall. In this way they will be able to achieve something that will not only be of great benefit to themselves, but also to the great cause for which the Allies, including the United States, are now fighting.—Advertisement.

Thought Cakes Fainted.

Virginia loved to help her mother. One day her mother was making a special effort to bake a prize cake for the church fair and Virginia was all interest. The cake rose beautifully and appeared to be thoroughly done, but when removed from the stove it fell flat and had a sad streak through the center. Another cake was immediately mixed in haste and then little Virginia's eyes grew large as she listened to her mother lamenting over the first sad cake that had fallen. The second baking proved the same as the first, but the third attempt resulted in a veritable triumph. Virginia, however, could not rally from the morning's tragedy, and when her aunt came over she exclaimed in great excitement: "Oh, auntie, mother made three cakes and two of 'em fainted."

Power of Money.

Money may be misused. The power it represents may be abused, says a noted writer, just as the power of the press or any other physical or social force may be abused. And the desire for money may be perverted, just as may be any other normal or healthy desire. But that is not the way to look at money any more than it is the way to look at any other power or quality of human nature that may be used either for good or evil.

"There's a Reason"

The Poisoned Dove

By Richard Washburn Child

I came back from China and Japan a few months ago. A reporter on the pier in San Francisco said, "What do they think in the far East about when the war will end?"

That was the first expression about the war heard by an American returning to his native country and aching to know what Americans at home had been thinking, planning, doing, how we were expressing our manhood and womanhood, whether we would soon find a way to mobilize America and throw the giant force of her against the menace of men.

I heard this query with a sickened spirit. The reporter would never have asked the question unless in behalf of the readers of his paper. Could this represent the spirit of the people—the spirit of America?

I had heard the same question in England back in the days when the Zeppelins had just begun to come over London with the slogan "Women and children first."

"Over there," however, they learned long ago of the folly of living daily life with the sound of this question in their ears. They have learned that insidiously, quietly, imperceptibly, the persistent tap, tap, tap of this little question weakens the cause, turns the edge of determination, enters the subconscious mind like a slow disease draining off fighting spirit, manhood, and the dash and power of the one purpose, and beats upon that which should be the unbreakable will of people who must win.

More Dangerous Here.

For America, this question haunting the minds of its citizens is more dangerous than it was "over there." Our soft prosperity, our distance from the struggle, tempts weak men to cling to the comforts of peace. We have not felt the gaff of war. Not yet have we learned the pain of that full deep thrust of regret that when democracy called for us, we, the pioneers of liberty, asked why and how and when—but, at first, did not come. We have not learned even the prelude of that day when the war will have seized upon and wrung our hearts, when the ghosts of our men come back to sit in the farmhouse kitchen or in the leather chairs of the club, to click the latches of village gates, and march in invisible brigades up the asphalted avenues.

So the flabby men and women among us still go on asking in that voice of childish eagerness, "How long will the war last?"

And the selfish retailer, trader, or financier, fat with gain and ease or lean with avarice, thinking of the effect of peace upon the market, asks, "What would be your guess about the end of the war?"

And even the thoughtless and the ignorant and empty-headed, who would otherwise say, "Is this hot enough for you?" or "Do you think it's going to snow?" say now, "Well, when will the war end?"

The Two Types.

Test the spirit of these questions by the two types—those who ask them and those who do not. Which is the type of person whom you would trust for character, courage, and sense, for unflinching determination when something has been begun, to "see it through?"

I remember leaving Kitchener's office in London to visit the recruiting at Scotland Yard. Six feet four inches and 250 pounds of retired British army veteran, hardened, reddened, grizzled, was my escort. That was in 1915.

"There's too much wondering when the war will end," said he. "My three boys have gone."

"To France?" said I, misunderstanding.

"To rest," he said, straightening. "Killed in action. Perhaps 'tis that which makes me squirm when I hear any Britisher guessing about the end of the war. My good sense would tell me anyway. If you see two men fighting, would you put a bet on him who was wondering when it would be over?"

"No."

"Nor I. When they ask me when the war will end, I say, 'Something like a year or two after the Prussians think it time to stop.'"

For a contest between two men, two football teams, two nations, or two great alliances struggling in the greatest war of all, over the greatest issue of all, there can be no other doctrine. When John Paul Jones' antagonists asked him if he was ready to stop fighting and he answered that he had not begun to fight, it was not John Paul Jones but his enemy who was wondering "when it would be over."

No man, no woman who contributes even by innocent, thoughtless mouthing to a mental attitude expressed in wondering when the war will be over is fulfilling the obligation of Americans to go straight and hard and together for the one united, persistent purpose to which the United States has dedicated our strength. A job is to be done. A job is to be finished.

Dangling Peace as Bait.

Germany will be glad at any moment to divert us from the idea that the job is to be finished, when in our judgment it is finished, and attract us as much as possible to the idea that our job will be finished some place short of that by dangling peace as bait for cowards and fools.

Here in Washington this policy of Germany is understood. It is the primer lesson in an analysis of Germany's policies.'

The state department knows well enough that Germany has tried unsuccessfully endless moves to make peace a decoy—to create a morbid appetite among the peoples who have been trying to make democracy safe—an appetite for rest, for an end of deprivation, loss, suffering, for relief from stress, for a temporary comfort bought at the price of principle—the principle of finishing the job.

The secret service of the allied countries know well enough that millions of German money has been spent to make Americans talk and think not of the job to be finished but of peace.

Some day there will be exposed, in all its extent, the systematic, elaborate methods which Germany has used in an endeavor to poison the opinion of neutral countries and plant among the weaker and more gullible citizens of those countries fighting to rid the world forever of war and the tyranny of militarism the weed of premature peace. It has been Germany's purpose to choke the crop of courage and steal the nourishment away from determination.

Trail Is Found Everywhere.

The trail of this well-organized attempt can be found everywhere.

In Russia, back in the days of the czar, industrial leaders of Petrograd and Moscow who came in contact with workmen, bureaucrats in the offices of government, and officers at the staff headquarters of the Russian army at Mohileff, who came in contact with soldiers recruited from various parts of the empire, told me that one of the well-defined purposes and special efforts of German agents was to stimulate among the industrial and laboring classes in Russia thoughts of peace, of the comforts, the relief, and the hope of peace, all of which would serve to eat like a rot into the hearts of the people, tolling them away from the will to fight and the will to make a final peace upon sound principle only, and only when the job had been finished.

"Men will not fight hard when there is peace talk behind the trenches," General Alexieff said. And he expressed also almost the identical idea expressed to me by the retired British petty officer who took me to Scotland Yard, when the latter said, "If you see two men fighting, would you bet on the one who was wondering when it would be over?"

Should Learn From Experience.

The experience of other countries and our own experience with the desire of Germany that her enemies shall think, talk, and wonder about the coming of peace, ought to be enough for us.

Any contribution made by any American citizen to aid this purpose of Germany is an act which compares with a soldier at the front who turns his face to the rear.

Such a contribution may be actually traitorous. There are still constant instances of treason among those persons who stimulate peace talk with full knowledge that they are aiding and abetting the enemy.

Such a contribution may be morally rotten. There are those who talk peace because peace to their warped souls is dearer than the end for which we have entered the war.

Such a contribution may come from flabby sentimentality. There are still men and women who can only think of the horrors of this war instead of the greater horrors of other wars which are sure to come if we do not now make the menace of Prussian plotting and militarism impossible for the ages and generations of the future.

Such a contribution may be the result of a love of the sensational. There are still individuals and even newspapers who seek to attract attention by pretending that they have advance information of the coming of peace.

Such a contribution may be ignorant. There are still individuals so benighted that the cause of America is not clear and real in their minds. They fail to understand that America has entered this war to make democracy safe; to guarantee small nations the right of freedom from ruthless conquest; to crush the doctrine that the choice of development of each human being must be wrested away from him or from her and put in a dominant and autocratic machine of government. Failing to understand the nobility of our purpose, they endure the war passively and prick up their ears at any word of rumor which concerns the end of the war.

Such a contribution may be merely sloppy. There are those who forget, who do not think, who lapse into lazy nothingness, and as yet far away from the bite of war, ask each other, "Well, when will the war end?"

Comforters of Enemy.

Consciously and unconsciously these are all comforters of the enemy.

Upon them and upon their traitorous or lax attitude of mind, Germany depends. She leans upon all "peace gossipers."

Germany has no need to fear a nation interested in peace and always talking and wondering about peace.

She may well fear when every last man and woman of us has no interest higher, more constant, and more single of purpose than that of finishing the job.

While she believes she can hoodwink Americans, she will release over and over again, by petty secret agencies, and by great diplomatic plays for the galleries, her peace poisons.

Only when the job is finished, however, can we be interested in peace or peace talk.

The dove of peace that anyone sees flying before that time is German-stuffed and loaded with Prussian poison.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE BUFFALOES.

"I think we're pretty fine," said Mr. Buffalo.

"Why so?" asked Mrs. Buffalo.

"Because," Mr. Buffalo said, "we don't mind rain or snow. We never grumble about the weather. We take it as it comes, and that is always the best way to take the weather."

"It certainly is the best way," agreed Mrs. Buffalo. "But that doesn't exactly make us fine, does it?"

"To be sure," said Mr. Buffalo. "It shows we are sensible, and it's fine to be sensible. So there you are!"

"Yes, here I am," said Mrs. Buffalo. "And I'd say you were making things mean what you wanted them to mean."

"Perhaps," said Mr. Buffalo, "but that is also an excellent plan. It's such a nuisance to always be fighting about what things mean. Have them mean what one wants to, I say."

"So I see," said Mrs. Buffalo.

"You may see now, but you don't always! Just think," Mr. Buffalo continued, "of the trouble people have when we are in a stampede. We pay no attention to anyone. We go right on as though we were blind. That's the way we act. Just as though we could not see a single thing."

"Neither can we then," said Mrs. Buffalo.

"That's what I meant when I said you could see now but you couldn't always," said Mr. Buffalo. "And for once I didn't have to change the meaning to suit myself. I was absolutely right with no trouble!"

He seemed to be very happy and much pleased with himself as he stamped about a little.

"We are fine," he went on, "especially we daddy buffaloes."

"Dear me," said Mrs. Buffalo, "that's it, talk about yourselves before you talk about us."

"Glad you urge me to," said Mr. Buffalo, paying no attention to the tone in which Mrs. Buffalo had spoken. "It saves me all the trouble of having to talk about myself without being urged to."

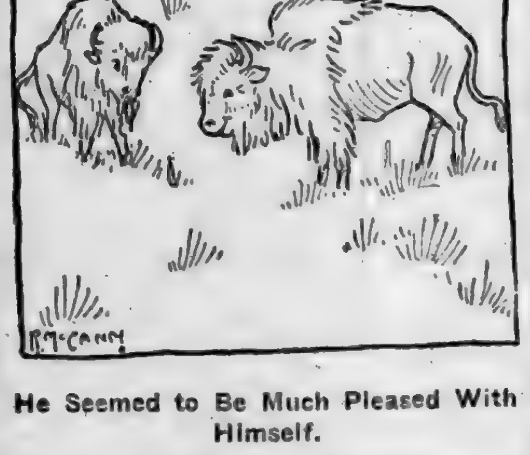
"Go on, go on, and say what you have to say," remarked Mrs. Buffalo impatiently.

"As I was saying a few minutes ago," continued Mr. Buffalo, "we daddies are very nice because we are very good to the children. We are as nice to them as can be."

"And why shouldn't you be nice to the precious ones?" asked Mrs. Buffalo indignantly.

"Many animal daddies aren't," said Mr. Buffalo, "and so it shows our fine natures that we are nice to the young!"

"I only call that decent," said Mrs. Buffalo. "Have you anything else to say about yourself that is really fine, or only make-believe fine? It's make-believe when you call being nice to your children such a fine thing. That is only right."



He Seemed to Be Much Pleased With Himself.

"Right and fine mean the same, my dear," said Mr. Buffalo.

"Well, I never pretended to know much about words," admitted Mrs. Buffalo.

"One more thing," said Mr. Buffalo, "We all go for our own kind when a stranger comes along. And what's better if we are put to a still greater test, all the male buffaloes will stick to the males, and all the females will stick by the females."

"I don't consider that so fine," said Mrs. Buffalo. "You'd protect one of your own kind rather than me! Gracious! I call that very ungentlemanly. Very!"

"It's fine, for the same reason as I said fine before. It's sensible, and to be sensible is fine!"

But just at that moment a strange animal came along and all the buffaloes went together for defense and safety.

"We'll play in a storm or lie in the sun," Mr. Buffalo went on after the danger was past, "and we're a strong, powerful lot when we all get together."

And Mrs. Buffalo agreed to this for she had seen how a big herd of buffaloes could frighten other creatures.

Sweetening the Year.

There are some people whose very nearness brings pleasure. They may not be particularly witty nor very wise. They may never dazzle you with their brilliancy along any line. But just as the summer breezes sometimes bring you a whiff of hidden rose grades and mignonette beds, so you cannot come near certain people without detecting the sweetness of their natures, their unselfishness, their untiring kindness. Roses fall and their sweetness passes, but the blossoming gardens of the heart diffuse their fragrance through every day of the year.—Girl's Companion

Defeat Backache and Kidney Trouble With Anuric

Many people in this section have suffered from rheumatism and kidney trouble and have found that Anuric was the most successful remedy to overcome these painful and dangerous ailments.

The lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they needed nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called "An-u-ric" (double strength). You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as stone in the bladder. If you want quick relief buy Anuric now (60c a package)—or send Dr. Pierce 10c for trial pkg. This will prove that "Anuric" eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

Origin of "Assassin."

The drug hashish or Indian hemp, for which Egyptians will pay such a high price, has given us our word, "assassin." These desperadoes formed originally a secret society in Persia, relates London Chronicle, in the eleventh century, members of which were under a vow of blind obedience to their chief. They were called upon to perpetrate the most atrocious deeds, and before these ruffians were sent out to perform their grewsome tasks they were given hashish, by which they were thrown into a kind of ecstasy or intoxication. Hence they were called "Hashishin," meaning hemp-eaters. The word became part of Western languages, but was changed into "assassins."

Marvelous Herbal Medicine Cures Long-Standing Cough

Goshen, Ind.—"I was down and out with what my doctor pronounced tuberculosis. I had coughed night and day for a whole year and had lost so much flesh I began to look like a walking skeleton. Two of my sisters had died with tuberculosis and I felt certain that my time had come, too. A friend recommended Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery to my husband. The 'Discovery' gave new strength and vitality right from the start, and in a year's time I was just as strong and hardy as ever. I have never suffered with a deep-hacking cough since. It is all of fifteen years since I was at death's door."—MRS. ELIZA TEETER, 610 N. Main St.—Adv.

Where Canes Are Popular.

There is probably no country in the world where the use of walking sticks is so general as in the United Kingdom. Practically every man carries a cane, not only in the towns and cities but also in the country; and, in addition, there is a large demand for walking sticks for women, these being used extensively in the country and at seaside resorts, but not to a great extent in the cities.

The winter months are always rainy and even during the summer the weather is often very unsettled, so that the use of umbrellas is also unusually great. These conditions have made the manufacture of umbrellas and walking sticks an important industry in the British isles.

—that's what thousands of farmers say, who have gone from the U. S. to settle on homesteads or buy land in Western Canada. Canada's invitation to every industrious worker to settle in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta is especially attractive. She wants farmers to make money and happy, prosperous homes for themselves by helping her raise immense wheat crops to feed the world.

You Can Get a Homestead of 160 Acres Free or other lands at very low prices. Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre that will raise 20 to 45 bushels of $2 wheat to the acre—it's easy to become prosperous. Canadian farmers also grow wonderful crops of Oats, Barley and Flax. Mixed Farming is fully as profitable an industry as grain raising. The Winona college will suspend after February 1st., due to the following reasons:—The withdrawal of the support of the state board from the college, the war situation, which has interfered greatly with the progress of school in taking away a great per cent of students, and the war conditions which have made it financially impossible for the further continuance of the school in that those who have made subscriptions find themselves unable to meet them. Classes will continue as usual until February 1. The suspension of college activities is greatly regretted by all but owing to the force of circumstances there was no other course to be taken.

In Society

One of the social events of the season was held Friday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. F. B. Leighty, at which time the ladies of the W. C. T. U. gave their husbands the privilege of meeting with them. After all had sung "America" the president, Mrs. Jennie Sechler, welcomed the guests, assuring them the organization was glad to have them at the meeting.

"How to Promote Peace on Earth" was the topic for the evening. This topic was sub-divided into three subjects discussed by the three ministers. Rev. Spayd gave the first address, "Our Responsibility as a Nation," a few of his remarks are: "We are now in this struggle, we cannot now get out of it and therefore must go on through. We are a christian nation nominally but not in fact. If we would be an ideal nation we must follow the Golden Rule. A nation is what its people are." His remarks were followed by a vocal solo by Mrs Bessie Tustison. Rev. Coons subject was, "Our Responsibility as a Church." He said, "Our responsibility reaches only as we have influence. The life of our nation can rise no higher than its source. It is the business of the church to promote the high ideals of the world. The church,s duty to help in every way for a world democracy. We have not universal peace because we have not universal righteousness." Rev A. K. Mumma followed with his subject, "Our Responsibility as Individuals." "The responsibility of the individual is great because the world is made up of individuals. He spoke of the wonderful influence the Y. M. C. A. was having in army life. He said there was some thing back and under this war in which we as a people need chastening. It is a splendid dicipline for the American people as they have always had plenty but are now beginning to know what it is not to have every thing they want. He thinks that as God chastened his people of old when they wandered away from him that this crisis through which we are passing will also bring the nations nearer to Him. As individuals are right so will the whole nation be right."

The reverend gentlemen gave most excellent talks and we wish it were possible to print each talk in full. Mrs. Bertha Dermott followed with a vocal solo and Mrs. Minnie Bayman gave a reading which all enjoyed. As the committee in charge were preparing the lunch, Mrs. Hathaway and Mrs. Tustison gave each guest a question written on a slip of paper and folded, it was not to be opened until after the guest arose. The questions as well as the answers caused much merriment. Lunch was served to about sixty. A short business session was held also a rising vote of thanks was given the committee in charge.

From The Train'g Camp.

The following letter was written by J. I. Redman, a brother of Mrs. Joe Wyatt, of Rehobeth, who was located in the camp at Fort Riley, Kansas, and was a member of the M. O. T. C. Amb. Co. 16. Since this letter was written in November, he has left the States and is now on his way to France. The letter is of particular interest to our readers, while we do not know the young patriot.

Dear Sister:—

We have been having fine weather here and we are all glad for it for when we go on our two days hike and sleep in tents it would not be very pleasant if it was cold. You spoke of how long we would be here, that is very hard to tell for we are under over-seas orders and have been for over 3 weeks, we may leave in a few days and maybe not for sometime.

Knowing that you are interested in church work I will try and tell you something of our church, it is the Y. M. C. A., we have services there three times a week, just the same as in civilian life, and the main part of it all is the Bible Class which has been a great success here and I know it has helped a great many. Our Sunday School is fine and has a good attendance at all times, as the officers take part as well as the enlisted men now.

We must not forget Thursday evening, it is known at home as Prayer Meeting night but here we call it our camp sing; and I sure enjoy going to the Y. as the men in charge are as nice as anyone could want to meet, always with a smile, so you know it is pleasant to meet them. We have two different kind of song books and plenty of Bibles; one for every man that is willing to ask for it and then read, as our motto is to read at least one chapter every day, and we ought to do that much and let the men around know we are not ashamed of the word of God.

We have lots of amusements at the Y., too. There is a piano there and someone to play it. Sometimes there are people from the nearby towns that comes to entertain us and this happens often; so you see the Y. M. C. A., boys are busy trying to do something for our benefit. The Y. will hold about 2,500 men, and we can go there any time write letters, read books or anything we want to. So you see we would be lost without the Y. M. C. A.

Well, sister, it is almost time for taps, that is 9:30 and our bed time; so will close hoping these few lines finds you folks well, as it leaves me fine and dandy. So good-bye, good luck and God bless you.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

MORE FUEL FROM THE WOODLOTS.

It Is Where Team-Hauled Wood Can Be Used Instead of Railroad-Hauled Coal That Changes of Fuel Should Be Made.

FARMERS ASSIST COAL STRINGENCY

Use of More Wood Would Aid Economy in Commodity.

MANY DOLLARS ARE IDLE

It Is Where Team-Hauled Wood Can Be Used Instead of Railroad-Hauled Coal That Change of Fuel Would Help.

Are you a coal burner when you might be a wood burner? Have you a woodland that isn't working? What can the town man and the surburban dweller do about the coal stringency?

Much would be accomplished toward meeting the present situation arising from the unparalleled demand for coal and from the great burden on the nation's railroads, it is believed, if not only the farmers who have woodlands but city and suburban real estate owners possessing more or less wooded tracts of land would draw on these areas for a part, at least, of their fuel supply. In the neighborhood of small cities as well as larger ones there are many woodlots from which much fuel wood could be obtained without encroachment on the needed shade trees and without detracting from the beauty of the landscape. In fact, proper thinning in many cases will help the development of desirable trees.

Save by Burning Wood.

As an instance of how coal can be saved by the burning of wood, the United States department of agriculture has cited figures for 17 northern and eastern states with a rural population of about 20,000,000 which, it is estimated, uses annually about 18,000,000 tons of coal. It is figured that the substitution of wood for one-fourth of the coal burned by farmers and for one-tenth of the coal burned in villages would result in a saving of nearly 3,000,000 tons, or between 65,000 and 70,000 carloads.

It is where team-hauled wood can be used instead of railroad-hauled coal that the change of fuel should be made. While it is not expected that the substitution of wood for coal could be complete, it is true that for heating many kinds of buildings wood is the more convenient and ordinarily the cheaper fuel.

This is particularly true in buildings for which heat is required only occasionally, but then is wanted in large volume at short notice.

Arrange for Burning Wood.

Furnaces are built especially for burning wood in three or four-foot lengths. If a stove grate is too coarse for wood a sheet-iron cover over a good part of the surface will make it suitable, or a few bricks can be used. Wood grates are sold in two pieces which can be inserted through the fire door and placed on top of the regular grate.

PRIVATE WOODLOTS HELP MEET A COAL SHORTAGE.

Throwing open the woodlot on his suburban place to all who would come and cut, a Washington (D. C.) man aided shivering families to meet the coal stringency a few weeks ago. Then he located some 5,000 cords more in either fallen or dead standing timber in wooded lands nearby and obtained the consent of the owners to allow the public to cut fuel in needed quantities under proper supervision.

Are the woodlots around your town doing their part in the fuel emergency?

In heating value one standard cord of well-seasoned hickory, oak, beech, birch, hard maple, ash, elm, locust or cherry is approximately equal to one ton (2,000 pounds) of anthracite coal. Of soft maple a cord and a half is required to equal one ton of coal, and of cedar, poplar or basswood, two cords. One cord of mixed wood, well seasoned, equals in heating value at least one ton of average-grade bituminous coal.

The most common method of making cord wood is to cut the trees into four-foot lengths with an ax and split the larger pieces. The pieces are then piled in a standard cord, which is eight feet long, four feet high and four feet wide. The contents are 128 cubic feet, of which 70 per cent is wood and 30 per cent air.

Best Heating Value.

To have the best heating value as well as to reduce the cost of hauling, wood should be thoroughly seasoned, which means drying it from six to eight months when piled so as to get a good circulation of air. However, 50 per cent of the moisture may be removed in three months.

HOW MUCH WOOD WOULD A WOODCUTTER CUT IF—

Taking white oak as fairly typical of the hard woods and white pine for the soft woods, the figures below will show approximately the amount of cord wood that may be cut from trees of different sizes. The figures will vary considerably with the extent at which the tops and branches are utilized and on the taper of the tree trunks. With forest-grown trees, utilizing the branches and tops to about two inches, these amounts may be expected:

White Oak.

Ten inches in diameter, 50 feet high, one-sixth to one-seventh of a cord; 15 inches in diameter, 60 feet high, about two-fifths of a cord; 24 inches in diameter, 70 feet high, one and one-fifth cords.

White Pine.

Ten inches in diameter, 50 feet high, one-eighth of a cord; 15 inches in diameter, 60 feet high, one-third of a cord; 24 inches in diameter, 70 feet high, seven-eighths of a cord.

Because of the unusual demand for cord wood it is believed that the present time offers unparalleled opportunity not only for farmers to improve their woodlands by cutting out the poorer trees and selling them, but for private and public owners of wooded tracts to clear their lands at a profit. Communities which feel they are threatened with a serious fuel shortage will do well to take measures to stimulate the cutting of wood. Such action may be viewed as part of America's co-operation in the national endeavor to feed and sustain America's army and allies.

Without any special inconvenience and without any risk to health or well-being, the sugar consumption of the average person can be lowered. Anyone who uses sugar in excessive amounts will be the better for using less.

More Food From New Islands.

Our new possessions in the Atlantic—the Virgin islands—will become more nearly self-supporting if the aim of the United States department of agriculture is realized. A representative of the federal department investigated the agricultural situation in these islands last season and made suggestions intended to help the people there to produce more food.

The only crops the investigator found under extensive cultivation were sugar cane and Sea Island cotton, the yields of which are low compared with other West Indian islands. The representative found that there was an almost complete absence of vegetables and fruit on the markets, indicating very limited supplies of locally grown food materials. Stock growing is followed to some extent, but improved stock is needed, better forage plants should be introduced, and more attention is needed to the proper handling of stock, dairying and other farm enterprises.

BIG ARMY NEEDED FOR AIR SERVICE

FORTY TO FIFTY MEN REQUIRED FOR EACH ACTIVE PLANE AT THE FIGHTING FRONT.

FIGURES BY HOWARD COFFIN

Veterinary Corps and Remount Service Growing Rapidly—Information About the Pay Received by Uncle Sam's Enlisted Men.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—In a statement issued by Howard E. Coffin, chairman of the aircraft production board, is the following:

"In discussing the accomplishments of the air service in the consummation of the army program, it will be well to point out the impossibility of certain proposals enthusiastically and persistently put forward by word of mouth and in the press. We have seen and heard much of the proposed 100,000 airplanes to be provided by the United States within the next year. In a country where one great industry produces 1,500,000 motorcars per year, the fabrication of 100,000 planes might seem easy, but actual figures based upon three years of practical experience in the war shows that there are now between 40 and 50 men of the auxiliary services required for each active machine at the front. If this same ratio should be adhered to in our service, it would mean that some 4,000,000 men would be required in our aeronautical department on foreign soil between our ports of debarkation and the fighting front.

"Even though this number of men could be reduced by 50 per cent by increased efficiency and standardization, the number required is still staggering. Consider, also, the overseas transportation problem as related to material only and without reference to personnel and its maintenance. The transportation of finished planes, properly crated, with the necessary spares, accessories, and equipment is in itself a serious problem, in view of the situation in ship tonnage."

When war was declared the strength of the United States army in animals was 66,145; it is now 344,000. The remount service April 6 consisted of one officer and four clerks in Washington, five remount depots where horses were received, and a personnel and purchasing organization in the field in proportion. The veterinary corps, responsible for the treatment of animals, consisted of 64 officers and no enlisted personnel when the United States entered the war.

The veterinary corps faced the job of building an organization of about 1,000 officers and 12,000 men. The 1,000 officers have been secured and enlisted men are being transferred at a rate which will soon bring it up to its full authorized strength.

The remount service had a similar task in securing personnel. Its present strength is about 300 officers and 11,000 enlisted men. In place of 5 remount depots it has 34, for which plans had to be drawn, sites chosen, and construction of shelter, hospitals, storage buildings, and unloading facilities in short time.

The greater proportion of deaths of animals in the army results from influenza, popularly known as "shipping fever," and its complications. British losses on horses purchased in the United States during the war have been about 10 per cent, counting only deaths occurring in this country. French and Italian losses have been higher.

The rank of commissioned officers of the United States army is shown by insignia on the shoulder loops.

The shoulder loops of a general bear the coat of arms of the United States and two silver stars; lieutenant general, one large and two small silver stars; major general, two silver stars; brigadier general, one silver star; colonel, silver spread-eagle; lieutenant, colonel, silver leaf; major, gold leaf; captain, two silver bars; first lieutenant, one silver bar; second lieutenant, gold bar.

The shoulder loop of a chaplain bears a Latin cross.

A recent comparison of health reports from troops in the United States and the expeditionary forces shows the admission rate to hospitals to be greater among the men in France.

Admissions to hospitals in one week in the expeditionary forces, figured on a basis of 1,000 men, were 45.2; in the United States the rate was 33.7 per 1,000 men. In the overseas forces the noneffective rate (the total number of men excused from duty for any injury or ailment, whether or not ordered to hospital) was 54.1 per 1,000 men; in the troops in the United States it was 46.4.

The sale of "smilage" books, containing coupons good for admission to theaters and entertainment tents in all army camps and cantonments, is handled in the smaller cities and towns throughout the country by chautauqua and lyceum organizations.

The books come in two sizes, for sale at $1 and $5. When sent to a man in camp a smilage book carries the name of the donor on the cover.

Red Cross appropriations for work in Italy from November 1, 1917, to May 1, 1918, total $4,771,990.

The pay of enlisted men depends on their grades, ratings, and length of service. From June, 1, 1917, and continuing during the term of the war the pay of the enlisted men is as follows:

Men receiving $30: All privates, the army entering grade.

Men receiving $33: First-class privates, men promoted to act in minor noncommissioned officer capacity.

Men receiving $36: Corporals, saddlers, mechanics, farriers and wagoners, and musicians of the third class.

Men receiving $38: All sergeant grades in the line, which include infantry, field artillery, coast artillery, and cavalry; cooks, horseshoers, band corporals, and musicians of the second class.

Men receiving $44: Sergeants of the various corps of the engineers, ordnance, signal corps, quartermaster corps, and medical department; band sergeants and musicians of the first class.

Men receiving $48: Battalion sergeant majors, squadron sergeant majors, sergeant majors (junior grade), sergeant buglers, master gunners, and assistant band leaders of the line.

All enlisted men, while on detached duty not in the field where there are no army quarters available, receive in addition to their pay $15 per month to cover the expense of housing and also a suitable allowance for subsistence and for heat and light.

An enlisted man in active service has no necessary personal expenses except for barber and laundry. Uniforms, underclothing, shoes, hats, quarters, medical attendance, and subsistence are supplied them at government expense. Such materials as tobacco, postage, confectionery, and incidentals of individual taste may be purchased at the post exchange at cost.

From uncensored sources the committee on public information has received editorial comment on the president's recent message in the Frankfurter Zeitung, a liberal organ with large circulation throughout the German empire. The following paragraph appears in the translation:

"The foundation for the peace negotiations has not yet been found, but we have approached much nearer to it. Wilson seeks a way out of the war and does so in a manner not entirely in accord with us. We see no reason for exposing ourselves any longer to the charge of lack of clarity about our war aims. Germany and her allies should come out openly with their terms. Then perhaps it will be seen that a continuation of the war can be avoided and the resistance of governments to the desire for peace of their peoples can be overcome."

A large harvest and storage of natural ice for summer use is being urged, accompanied by the statement that unprecedented demands for ammonia by the army and navy indicate a shortage in this chemical so widely used in producing ice and in refrigerators.

A shortage of ice during warm weather in 1918 would result in untold waste of perishable foods in the home, in small creameries, and other establishments dependent upon constant ice service. The United States department of agriculture has for distribution complete information on the harvesting and storing of natural ice.

A statement by the provost marshal general shows that of 859,150 total discharges for dependency 743,141, or 86.50 per cent, were for wife or wife and children; widowed parent, 6.51 per cent; motherless child, 0.66 per cent; minor orphan brothers and sisters, 0.58 per cent.

Of the total of 1,057,363 men certified for service in the National army 418,309, or 39.56 per cent, are listed as involuntary conscripts—those who failed to appear or filed unsuccessful claims for exemption or discharge. Voluntary conscripts—those who filed no claims for exemption or discharge—numbered 639,054.

Under the new food regulations Swiss people are allowed only one-fifth of a pound of butter per person per month.

The United States, importing before the war as much as $10,000,000 worth of aniline dyes a year, in ten months of last year exported dyes valued at $12,500,000.

Four tons of shipping capacity are required to transport a soldier, and another is necessary for his equipment. In addition, it takes 50 pounds of ship capacity a day to keep him supplied with food, clothing and ammunition.

A million checks a month will soon be going forward from the bureau of war-risk insurance to safeguard America's fighting forces and their families. Applications from soldiers and sailors for insurance are near $4,000,000,000.

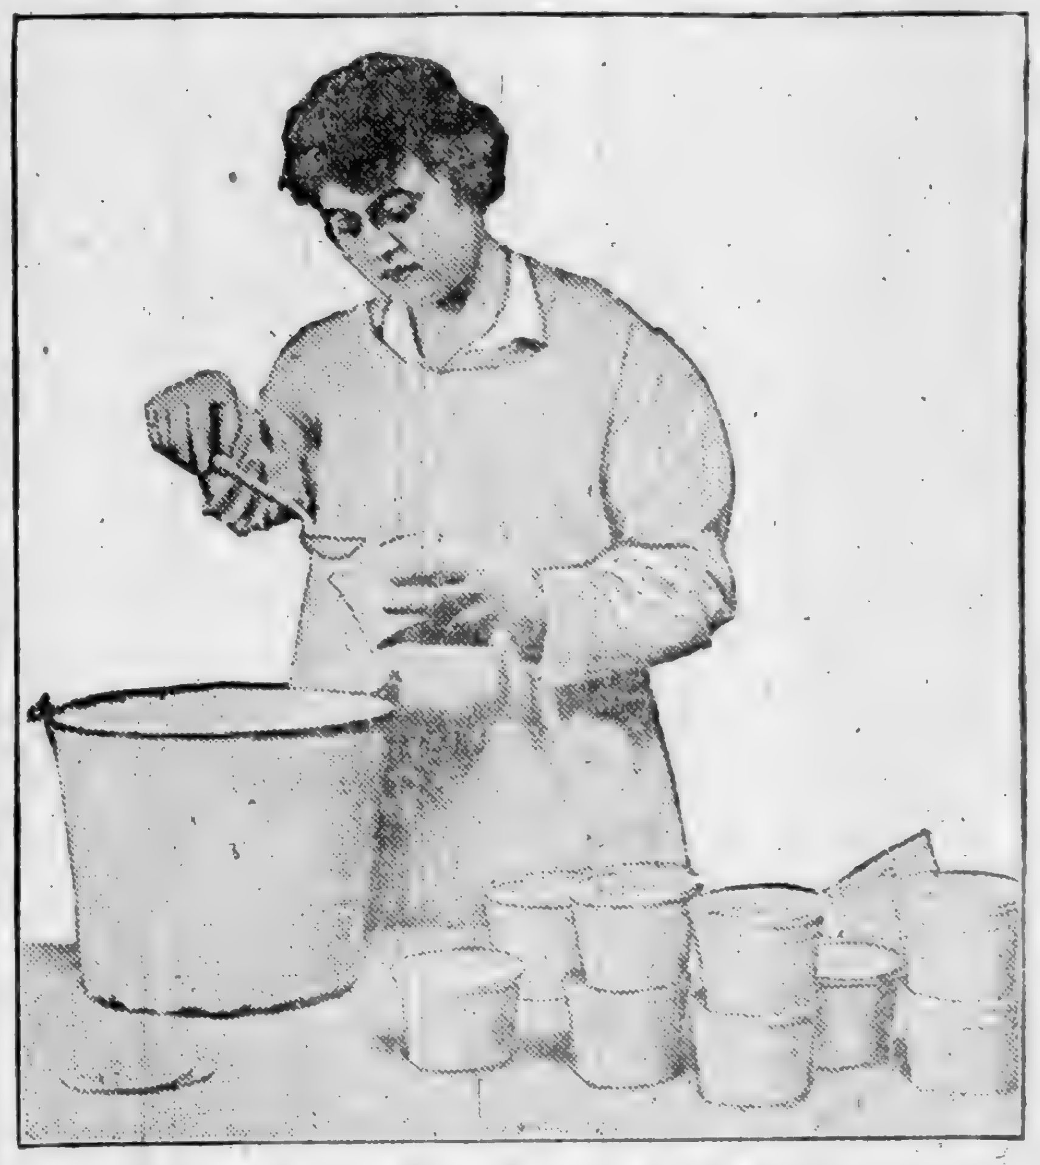
COTTAGE CHEESE MEAT'S WAR HELPMATE.



A Parcel Post Business in Cottage Cheese May Be Made Profitable.

HOME CHEESE IS MOST DELICIOUS

Follow Directions Given and See if It Isn't Relished.

GOOD SUBSTITUTE FOR MEAT

Pound for Pound Cottage Cheese Contains 25 Per Cent More Protein Than Medium-Fat Side of Beef—Easy to Make.

Given a choice between a nice, juicy piece of beef and a dish of cottage cheese, and the chances are you would take beef. We are such a meat-loving people. But pound for pound, cottage cheese contains 25 per cent more protein—the body-building substance for which we eat meat largely—than a medium-fat side of beef. And the cheese costs about half as much. It has less energy value than beef, but it is nevertheless capable of taking meat's place in the diet.

This Cheese Easy to Make.

Because cottage cheese is a most palatable and nutritious product and because it can be made easily on a small scale with little equipment in any kitchen and because it is an economical and convenient means of utilizing skim milk—a good food much neglected—in the human diet, food and dairy specialists of the United States department of agriculture are urging its wider use to save meat. Haphazard methods used in making this cheese, together with the lack of simple and easily available directions, probably are responsible, the specialists say, for the comparatively small quantities made and used at present. Uncertainty of results and defects in the finished products also have been causes for discouragement in making. By following the directions given here it is believed a better and more uniform product may be obtained.

For making the cheese in small quantities for home use a very simple process and ordinary household equipment will suffice, but if it is desired to market the product and to insure good, uniform quality, it will be necessary to follow somewhat more elaborate methods. The process of making a small amount, as well as methods used when it is desired to produce a larger quantity for the market, is described in Farmers' Bulletin 850 of the United States department of agriculture. This is the way to make cottage cheese in small amounts, perhaps utilizing only a few cups of skim milk—what is left after the cream for the coffee has been removed.

HOW COTTAGE CHEESE TAKES MEAT'S PLACE

We eat meat chiefly to get protein, a body-building substance, and energy to perform body work. Cottage cheese can supply these body necessities almost as well as meat and more cheaply. For supplying protein one pound of cottage cheese equals—

1.27 pounds sirloin steak.
1.09 pounds round steak.
1.37 pounds chuck rib beef.
1.52 pounds fowl.
1.46 pounds fresh ham.
1.44 pounds smoked ham.
1.58 pounds loin pork chop.
1.31 pounds hind leg of lamb.
1.87 pounds breast of veal.

On the basis of energy supplied, one pound of cottage cheese equals—

8 1-3 ounces sirloin steak.
11¼ ounces round steak.
11¼ ounces chuck rib beef.
10¾ ounces fowl.
6½ ounces fresh ham.
5 ounces smoked ham.
6 ounces loin pork chop.
7 1-3 ounces hind leg of lamb.
12¾ ounces breast of veal.

First of all, start with good, clean skim milk and clean utensils. Careful attention then to the details of making will insure a good product.

One gallon of skim milk will make about one and one-half pounds of cheese. If the milk is sweet it should be placed in a pan and allowed to remain in a clean, warm place at a temperature of about 70 degrees Fahrenheit until it clabbers. The clabbered milk should have a clean, sour flavor. Ordinarily this will take about thirty hours, but when it is desirable to hasten the process a small quantity of clean-flavored sour milk may be mixed with the sweet milk.

AVOID "SQUAB CHICKENS;" THREE-POUND FOWLS BEST

Housewives can help the meat situation by buying three-pound broilers and friers and refusing to use "squab chickens" weighing a pound, one-half or less. Dressed-poultry specialists of the United States department of agriculture urge this as a conservation measure. Serving under-developed or "squab chickens" in hotels, restaurants and homes is regarded as a waste, for if kept four weeks longer, including two weeks of crate fleshing, such fowls would weigh about three pounds. Moreover, under proper feeding, a chicken makes the extra flesh largely from such by-products not ordinarily used for human food, such as buttermilk, skim milk and low-grade grains.

As soon as the milk has thickened or firmly clabbered it should be cut into pieces two inches square, after which the curd should be stirred thoroughly with a spoon. Place the pan of broken curd in a vessel of hot water so as to raise the temperature to 100 degrees Fahrenheit. Cook at that temperature for about thirty minutes, during which time stir gently with a spoon for one minute at five-minute intervals.

Only Home Utensils Needed.

At the conclusion of the heating pour the curd and whey into a small cheesecloth bag (a clean salt bag will do nicely) and hang the bag on a fruit-strainer rack to drain, or the curd may be poured into a colander or a strainer over which a piece of cheesecloth has been laid. After five or ten minutes, work the curd toward the center with a spoon. Raising and lowering the ends of the cloth helps to make the whey drain faster. To complete the draining tie the ends of the bag together and hang it up. Since there is some danger that the curd will become too dry, draining should stop when the whey ceases to flow in a steady stream.

The curd is then emptied from the bag and worked with a spoon or a butter paddle until it becomes fine in grain, smooth and of the consistency of mashed potatoes. Sour or sweet cream may be added to increase the smoothness and palatability and improve the flavor. Then the cheese is salted according to taste, about one teaspoonful to a pound of curd.

Because of the ease with which the cheese can be made it is desirable to make it often so that it may be eaten fresh, although if it is kept cold it will not spoil for several days. If the cheese is not to be eaten promptly it should be stored in an earthenware or glass vessel rather than in one of tin or wood, and kept in a cold place.

She looked at him queerly. "Maybe not."

"Connie might, I suppose."

"Connie," she contradicted promptly, "will probably marry a genius, or a rascal, or a millionaire."

He looked dazed at that.

She leaned forward a little. "Carol might."

"Carol—"

"She might." She watched him narrowly, a smile in her eyes.

"Carol's too worldly."

"You don't believe that."

"No, not really. Carol—she—why, you know what I think of it. Carol wouldn't be half bad for a minister's wife. She has a sense of humor, that is very important. She's generous, she's patient, she's unselfish, a good mixer—some of the ladies might think her complexion wasn't real, but—Grace, Carol wouldn't be half bad!"

"Oh, William," she sighed, "can't you remember that you are a Methodist minister, and a grandfather, and—grow up a little?"

After that Mr. Starr returned to normal again, only many times he and Connie had little outings together, and talked a great deal. And Aunt Grace, seeing it, smiled with satisfaction. But the twins and Fairy settled it in their own minds by saying, "Father was just a little jealous of all the beaux. He was looking for a pal, and he's found Connie."

But in spite of his new devotion to Connie, Mr. Starr also spent a great deal of time with Fairy. "We must get fast chums, Fairy," he often said to her. "This is our last chance. We have to get cemented for a lifetime, you know."

And Fairy, when he said so, caught his hand and laughed a little tremulously.

Indeed he was right when he said it was his last chance with Fairy in the parsonage. Two weeks before her commencement she had slipped into the library and closed the door cautiously behind her.

"Father," she said, "would you be very sorry if I didn't teach school after all?"

"Not a bit," came the ready answer.

"I mean if I—you see, father, since you sent me to college I feel as if I ought to work and—help out."

"That's nonsense," he said, drawing the tall girl down to his knees. "I can take care of my own family, thanks. Are you trying to run me out of my job? If you want to work, all right, do it, but for yourself, and not for us. Or if you want to do anything else," he did not meet her eyes, "if you want to stay at home a year or so before you get married, it would please us better than anything else. And when you want to marry Gene, we're expecting it, you know."

"Yes, I know"—she fingered the lapel of his coat uneasily. "Do you care how soon I get married?"

"Are you still sure it is Gene?"

"Yes, I'm sure."

"Then I think you should choose your own time. I am in no hurry. But any time—it's for you and Gene to decide."

"Then you haven't set your heart on my teaching?"

"I set my heart on giving you the best chance possible. And I have done it. For the rest, it depends on you. You may work, or you may stay at home a while. I only want you to be happy, Fairy."

"But doesn't it seem foolish to go clear through college, and spend the money, and then—marry without using the education?"

"I do not think so. They've been fine years, and you are finer because of them. There's just as much opportunity to use your fineness in a home of your own as in a public school. That's the way I look at it."

"You don't think I'm too young?"

"You're pretty young," he said slowly. "I can hardly say, Fairy. You've always been capable and self-possessed. When you and Gene get so crazy about each other you can't bear to be apart any longer, it's all right here."

She put her arm around his neck and rubbed her fingers over his cheek lovingly.

"You understand, don't you, father, that I'm just going to be plain married when the time comes? Not a wedding like Prudence's. Gene, and the girls, and Prue and Jerry, and you, father, that is all."

"Yes, all right. It's your day, you know."

"And we won't talk much about it beforehand. We all know how we feel about things. It would be silly for me to try to tell you what a grand, sweet father you've been to us. I can't tell you—if I tried I'd only cry. You know what I think."

His face was against hers, and his eyes were away from her, so Fairy did not see the moisture in his eyes when he said in a low voice:

"Yes, I know, Fairy. And I don't need to say what fine girls you are, and how proud I am of you. You know it already. But sometimes," he added slowly, "I wonder that I haven't been a bigger man, and haven't done finer work, with a houseful of girls like mine."

Her arm pressed more closely about his neck. "Father," she whispered, "don't say that. We think you are wonderfully splendid, just as you are. It isn't what you've said, not what you've done for us, it's just because you have always made us so sure of you. We never had to wonder about father, or ask ourselves—we were sure. We've always had you." She leaned over and kissed him again. "Now we understand each other, don't we?"

"I guess so. Anyhow, I understand that there'll only be three daughters in the parsonage pretty soon. All right, Fairy. I know you will be happy." He paused a moment. "So will I."

But the months passed, and Fairy seemed content to stay quietly at home, embroidering as Prudence had done, laughing at the twins as they tripped gayly, riotously through college. And then in the early spring she sent an urgent note to Prudence.

"You must come home for a few days, Prue, you and Jerry. It's just because I want you and I need you, and I know you won't go back on me. Just wire you are coming—the three of you. I know you'll be here, since it is I who ask it."

It followed naturally that Prudence's answer was satisfactory. "Of course we'll come."

Fairy's plans were very simple. "We'll have a nice family dinner Tuesday evening. We'll all be together, nice and quiet, just our own little bunch. Don't have dates, twins—of course Gene will be here, but he's part of the family, and we don't want outsiders this time. His parents will be in town, and I've asked them to come up. I want a real family reunion just for once, and it's my party, for I started it. So you must let me have it my own way."

"You Don't Think I'm Too Young?"

After the first confusion of welcoming Prudence home, and making fun of "daddy Jerry," and testing the weight and length of little Fairy, they all settled down to a parsonage homegathering. Just a few minutes before the dinner hour, Fairy took her father's hand.

"Come into the limelight," she said softly; "I want you." He passed little Fairy over to the outstretched arms of the nearest auntie, and allowed himself to be led into the center of the room.

"Gene," said Fairy, and he came to her quickly, holding out a slender roll of paper. "It's our license," said Fairy. "We think we'd like to be married now, father, if you will."

He looked at her questioningly, but understandingly. The girls clustered about them with eager outcries, half protest, half encouragement.

"It's my day, you know," cried Fairy, "and this is my way."

She held out her hand, and Gene took it very tenderly in his. Mr. Starr looked at them gravely for a moment, and then in the gentle voice that the parsonage girls insisted was his most valuable ministerial asset, he gave his second girl in marriage.

It surely was Fairy's way, plain and sweet, without formality. And the dinner that followed was just a happy family dinner. Fairy's face was so glowing with content, and Gene's attitude was so tender, and so ludicrously proud, that the twins at last were convinced that this was right, and all was well.

But that evening, when Gene's parents had gone away, and after Fairy and Gene themselves had taken the carriage to the station for their little vacation together, and Jerry and Prudence were putting little Fairy to bed, the three girls left in the home sat drearily in their bedroom and talked it over.

"We're thinning out," said Connie. "Who next?"

"We'll stick around as long as we like, Miss Connie, you needn't try to shuffle us off," said Lark indignantly.

"Prudence, and Fairy—it was pretty cute of Fairy, wasn't it?"

"Let's go to bed," said Carol, rising. "I suppose we'll feel better in the morning. A good sleep is almost as filling as a big meal after a blow like this. Well, that's the end of Fairy. We have to make the best of us. Come on, Larkie. You've still got us to boss you, Con, so you needn't feel too forlorn. My, but the house is still! In some ways I think this family is positively sickening. Good night, Connie. And, after this, when you want to eat candy in bed, please use your own. I got chocolate all over my foot last night. Good night, Connie. Well, it's the end of Fairy. The family is going to pieces, sure enough."

CHAPTER XI.

Sowing Seeds.

"Have you seen Mrs. Harbert lately, Carol?"

"Yes, she's better, father. I was there a few minutes yesterday."

"Yesterday? You were there Tuesday, weren't you?"

Carol looked uncomfortable. "Well, yes, I was, just for a second."

"She tells me you've been running in nearly every day since she took sick."

Carol bent sharply inquiring eyes upon her father. "What else did she tell you?"

"She said you were an angel."

"Y—yes—she seems somehow to think I do it for kindness."

"And don't you?"

"Why, no, father, of course I don't. It's only two blocks out of my way and it's such fun to pop in on sick folks and show them how disgustingly strong and well I am."

"Where did you get the money for that basket of fruit?"

"I borrowed it from Aunt Grace." Carol's face was crimson with mortification. "But it'll be a sweet time before Mrs. Harbert gets anything else from me. She promised she wouldn't tell."

"Did any of the others know about the fruit?"

"Why—not—exactly."

"But she thinks it was from the whole family. She thanked me for it."

"I—I made her think that," Carol explained. "I want her to think we're the nicest parsonage bunch they've ever had in Mount Mark. Besides, it really was from the family. Aunt Grace loaned me the money and I'll have to borrow it from you to pay her. And Lark did my dusting so I could go on the errand, though she did not know what it was. And I—er—accidentally took one of Connie's ribbons to tie it with. Isn't that a family gift?"

"Mr. Scott tells me you are the prime- mover in the Junior League now," he continued.

"Well, goodness knows our Junior League needs a mover of some sort."

"And Mrs. Davies says you are a whole mercy and help department all by yourself."

"What I can't understand," said Carol mournfully, "is why folks don't keep their mouths shut. I know that sounds very inelegant, but it expresses my idea perfectly. Can't I have a good time in my own way without the whole church peddling me from door to door?"

The twinkle in her father's eyes deepened. "What do you call it, Carol, 'sowing seeds of kindness'?"

"I should say not," came the emphatic retort. "I call it sowing seeds of fun. It's a circus to go around and gloat over folks when they are sick or sorry, or—"

"But they tell me you don't gloat. Mrs. Marling says you cried with Jeanie half a day when her dog died."

"Oh, that's my way of gloating," said Carol, nothing daunted, but plainly to get away without further interrogation.

It was a strange thing that of all the parsonage girls, Carol, light-hearted, whimsical, mischievous Carol, was the one most dear to the hearts of her father's people. Not the gentle Prudence, nor charming Fairy, not clever Lark nor conscientious Connie, could rival the "naughty twin" in Mount Mark's affections. And in spite of her odd curt speeches, and her openly vaunted vanity, Mount Mark insisted she was "good." Certainly she was willing! "Get Carol Starr—she'll do it," was the commonest phrase in Mount Mark's vocabulary. Whatever was wanted, whatever the sacrifice involved, Carol stood ready to fill the bill. Not for kindness—oh, dear no—Carol stanchly disclaimed any such niceness as that. She did it for fun, pure and simple. She said she liked to show off. She insisted that she liked to feel that she was the pivot on which little old Mount Mark turned. But this was only when she was found out. As far as she could she kept her little "seeds of fun" carefully up her sleeve, and it was only when the indiscreet adoration of her friends brought the budding plants to light, that she laughingly declared "it was a circus to go and gloat over folks."

Once in the early dusk of a summer evening, she discovered old Ben Peters, half intoxicated, slumbering noisily on a pile of sacks in a corner of the parsonage barn. Carol was sorry, but not at all frightened. The poor, kindly, weak, old man was as familiar to her as any figure in Mount Mark. He was always in a more or less helpless state of intoxication, but also he was always harmless, kindhearted and generous. She prodded him vigorously with the handle of the pitchfork until he was aroused to consciousness, and then guided him into the woodshed with the buggy whip. When he was seated on a chunk of wood she faced him sternly.

"Well, you are a dandy," she said. "Going into a parsonage barn, of all places in the world, to sleep off an odor like yours! Why didn't you go down to Fred Greer's harness shop, that's where you got it. We're such an awfully temperance town, you know! But the parsonage! Why, if the trustees had happened into the barn and caught a whiff of that smell, father'd have lost his job. Now you just take warning from me, and keep away from this parsonage until you can develop a good Methodist odor. Oh, don't cry about it! Your very tears smell rummy. Just you hang on to that chunk of wood, and I'll bring you some coffee."

Like a thief in the night she sneaked into the house, and presently returned with a huge tin of coffee, steaming hot. He drank it eagerly, but kept a wary eye on the haughty twin, who stood above him with the whip in her hand.

"That's better. Now, sit down and listen to me. If you would come to the parsonage, you have to take your medicine. Silver and gold have we none, but such as we have we give to you. And religion's all we've got. You're here, and I'm here. We haven't any choir or any Bible, but parsonage folks have to be adaptable. Now then, Ben Peters, you've got to get converted."

The poor doddering old fellow, sobered by this awful announcement, looked helplessly at the window. It was too small. And slender active Carol, with the buggy whip, stood between him and the door.

"No, you can't escape. You're done for this time—it's the straight and narrow from this on. Now listen—it's really very simple. And you need it pretty badly, Ben. Of course you don't realize it when you're drunk, you can't see how terribly disgusting you are, but honestly, Ben, a pig is a ray of sunshine compared to a drunk man. You're a blot on the landscape. You're a—you're a—" She fished vainly for words, longing for Lark's literary flow of language.

"I'm not drunk," he stammered.

"No, you're not, thanks to the buggy whip and that strong coffee, but you're no beauty even yet. Well now, to come down to religion again. You can't stop drinking—"

"I could," he blustered feebly. "I could if I wanted to."

"Oh, no, you couldn't. You haven't backbone enough. You couldn't stop to save your life. But," Carol's voice lowered a little, and she grew shy, but very earnest, "but God can stop you, because he has enough backbone for a hundred thousand—er, jellyfishes. And —you see, it's like this. God made the world, and put the people in it. Now listen carefully, Ben, and I'll make it just as simple as possible so it can sink through the smell and get at you. God made the world, and put the people in it. And the people sinned, worshiped idols and went back on God, and—did a lot of other mean things. So God was in honor bound to punish them, for that's the law, and God's the judge that can't be bought. He had to inflict punishment. But God and Jesus talked it over, and they felt awfully bad about it, for they kind of liked the people anyhow." She stared at the disreputable figure slouching on the chunk of wood. "It's very hard to understand, very. I should think they would despise us—some of us," she added significantly. "I'm sure I should. But anyhow they didn't. Are you getting me?"

The bleary eyes were really fastened intently on the girl's bright face, and he hung upon her words.

"Well, they decided that Jesus should come down here and live, and be perfectly good, so he would not deserve any punishment, and then God would allow him to receive the punishment anyhow, and the rest of us could go free. That would cover the law. See? Punishing him when he deserved no punishment. Then they could forgive us heathens that didn't deserve it. Do you get that?" She looked at him anxiously. "It all hinges on that, you know. I'm not a preacher myself, but that's the idea. So Jesus was crucified, and then God said, 'There he is! Look on him, believe in him, worship him, and in his name you stand O. K.' See? That means, if we give him the chance, God'll let Jesus take our share of the punishment. So we've just got to let go, and say, 'All right, here I am. I believe it, I give up, I know I don't amount to a hill of beans—and you can say it very honestly—but if you want me, and will call it square, God knows I'm willing.' And there you are."

"Won't I drink any more?"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The Usual Way.

Mr. Hixon—He said he would go through anything for her.

Mrs. Hixon—Yes; and he began by going through her bank account.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

ALCOHOL DANGER TO AMERICAN ALLIES.

It is gratifying to know that there is a sentiment in Paris which recognizes the fact that Uncle Sam has thrown safeguards around his soldiers which are effective as long as they are on American soil, and, out of respect to this very evident hostility of our government towards drink, urges protection for American soldiers on French soil from the perils of alcohol. The following is from La Revue of Paris:

"At the present moment France is attracting the eyes of the world more than ever before. It is not enough to show our enthusiasm regarding the English, Americans, Italians, Portuguese or Russians who are dwelling among us. We must likewise watch over their moral security. But alcoholism menaces all in the same degree. The "Sammies" who arrive from the United States total or partial prohibitionists are exposed to multiple dangers and temptations.

"The great American republic accepts with heroism the sacrifices in men and money which the war against the Germans may demand. But let us take care! We shall commit an evil action if her children find themselves exposed not only to the danger of being slain at the front, but to that of being poisoned by alcohol. Many writers in the United States have already manifested fears upon this point. A few concrete cases would suffice to cause an outburst of opinion on the other side. The Germans are watching and they will not be slow to exploit such sentiments, which are justified, indeed, to paralyze the noble population of the United States towards the sacred cause of the allies.

"We cannot lay too much emphasis upon the decree issued by the British military authority, January 15, 1917, prohibiting the circulation of alcohol in all the French regions occupied by the English army! And this 'in order to respond to the declarations of civil and military authorities signalizing alcoholism as an obstruction to the agricultural and industrial production required by the necessities of national defense.' Shall we wait until the American, too, perhaps, shall inflict a like humiliation upon our ministers of the interior, of munitions, of supplies, and many other of their confreres?"

MEXICO TOO.

"Mexico is improving," said the Mexican general, Alvaro Obregon, at a dinner tendered him in Springfield, Ill. "It has found the reason for the revolutions. It is going to reform the new generations of Mexico. It is going to open a school where there was a saloon before. We see the advantages now of education. There have been too many drunks in Mexico. The governors of the various states are now stopping with radical measures the saloon. Men who are going to save Mexico are those who are going to close the saloon. The United States needs the same cure. I speak plainly. The Mexican government did not wait to raise the taxes before it took steps to close down the saloons. We are going to fight ignorance and vice."

WHY THEY SELL IT.

Saloonkeepers do not sell the drug alcohol to a man simply for the sake of destroying him. They give him what injures him because they think that is the way by which they can get his money. They do not desire, on their own account, to ruin his character, take away his property, break his wife's heart, and beggar and starve his children. Their object is only to get the man's money, and they do these things because that seems the shortest way. Yet it is the price of blood.

IN GEORGIA.

"Two years ago I called prohibition poppycock, but prohibition enforced is a mighty good thing, and we have that mighty good thing here. . . . The chain gang of negro prisoners has fallen from an average of 600 or 700 down to 200. Homicides dropped from 24 in 1915 to 10 in 1916, and eight of those ten were in the four months of 1916 before prohibition became effective."—Doctor Brunner, secretary of the board of sanitary commissioners, Savannah, Ga.

VICTORY NEAR.

New Mexico is the twenty-seventh prohibition state. The District of Columbia is dry, and the territories of Alaska and Porto Rico. Dry areas in wet states are constantly widening. Over 87 per cent of the area of the United States is now under prohibition. At the general election of 1918 eight more states are expected to vote upon the question. Prohibition is now a patriotic issue and Kaiser Alcohol's day of defeat is near.

NO DRINKS.

A Washington newspaper reported thus:

"For the first time in the memory of the oldest policeman on the local force, the police blotter at headquarters—but the third day under prohibition—is clean of arrest for intoxication. . . . The law is being rigidly enforced."

GET HIGHER WAGES.

In dry Denver, it is said, the soft drink clerks get bigger wages than the barkeepers in the saloons of wet Cincinnati.

WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Need Help to Pass the Crisis Safely—Proof that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Can be Relied Upon.

Urbana, Ill.—"During Change of Life, in addition to its annoying symptoms, I had an attack of grippe which lasted all winter and left me in a weakened condition. I felt at times that I would never be well again. I read of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it did for women passing through the Change of Life, so I told my doctor I would try it. I soon began to gain in strength and the annoying symptoms disappeared and your Vegetable Compound has made me a well, strong woman so I do all my own housework. I cannot recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound too highly to women passing through the Change of Life."—Mrs. FRANK HENSON, 1316 S. Orchade St., Urbana, Ill.

Women who suffer from nervousness, "heat flashes," backache, headaches and "the blues" should try this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Mr. Bangor—So you call that "fortunate," do you?

Back Given Out?

Housework is too hard for a woman who is half sick, nervous and always tired. But it keeps piling up, and gives weak kidneys no time to recover. If your back is lame and achy and your kidneys irregular; if you have "blue spells," sick headaches, nervousness, dizziness and rheumatic pains, use Doan's Kidney Pills. They have done wonders for thousands of worn out women.

An Indiana Case

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Mrs. Mary M. Stoy, 216 E. Elm St., New Albany, Ind., says: "My kidneys were weak and I had bladder trouble. It didn't take much to tire me, I was so weak and run down. I was so lame I couldn't turn in bed without help and could hardly walk across the floor. Doan's Kidney Pills benefited me right away. Now I am able to do my own work and I feel fine. I can't speak too highly of Doan's Kidney Pills for what they have done for me."

Red Cross Department

Baby Layettes.

An important part of the work of the American Red Cross in France and Belgium is among the Refugees. Many returning Refugees and repatriats have earth under them and sky over them and the American Red Cross for a friend—that is all. Under these circumstances they look to the Red Cross for everything that makes for comfort in life—food, shelter, clothing. Among these desolate people many babies are born in dire need of warm clothing and we have again received an appeal strong in the belief that thousands of women in the U. S. will gladly make an infants outfit for some little French or Belgium baby, who, without their care, would suffer and die from cold and exposure. Our patterns have arrived and we hope this delay has not diminished the interest of the women who are willing to do this work. The ladies in charge are busy getting the layettes ready to send out to be made and if anyone has pieces of old woolen blankets from which a baby blanket 28X32 in., could be made, please notify Mrs. Gee or Mrs. Jackson. We also would be glad to have donations of wool shirts and bands or parts of old underwear, either wool or cotton, from which a baby shirt could be made. Baby jackets will be made from daisy cloth, but yarn for bootees and hoods can be obtained from Mrs. Bassett.

The regular sewing class was well attended again last week, and we hope to see this continue. The burden of the Red Cross is a heavy one and it depends on the willing hands of the American women to make these very necessary garment. Do you want to be a slacker? A good per cent of our women are working but there is still room and opportunity for many more.

Surgical Dressings.

Our people have not as yet realized the enormity of this world war, and what our part means in it. So every now and then we are fairly stunned by reports and statistics which come to us. We all know of women who are too busy or too indifferent, to help in the making of war bandages for the wounded. But if these women knew that wounds are actually being tied up with old newspapers, for the lack of bandages, and that this is likely to happen to their own boys some day, they would not be too busy or too tired or too anything else to make these much needed bandages. We women are seldom intentionally unkink but too frequently we are thoughtless. Our Surgical Dressing Class has a good start, and last week we made tri-angle and many-tailed bandages. Any woman can do this work and anyone will be made welcome who will come and help. The Class meets each Friday afternoon at Mrs. Buckingham's.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Men To Lose Wote

Those of Foreign Birth who Took Out First Naturalization Papers Before September 1906 Cannot Vote.

DeKalb county citizens of foreign birth who took out their first naturalization papers before September 27, 1906, cannot vote this year, according to a letter received Monday by County Clerk W. W. Mountz.

The letter is from the United States department of labor and is addressed to all clerks of court exercising jurisdiction in naturalization matters It states that in a recent decision the supreme court of the United States held that decision of intention made prior to September 27, 1606, became invalid for all purposes on September 27, 1913, by operation of the seven year limitation contained in the naturalization act of June 29, 1906.

The department adds this instruction: "You should, therefore, receive no more petitions based upon declarations made before September 27, 1906."

There is a large number of alien born residents of DeKalb county who lose their vote by the decision.

CORN WILL WIN DEMOCRACY'S WAR

America's Greatest Cereal Crop Is Now Moving to Market.

MAINSTAY IN NATION'S CRISIS.

Surplus Wheat of the United States Has Been Sent to Famine Threatened Europe.

America's great corn crop, exceeding 8,000,000,000 bushels, will save the world's food situation, officials of the United States food administration believe.

Corn is the nation's best food cereal, housewives are beginning to realize. It contains all the elements needed to keep the body in a state of health and when used according to the scores of tried recipes, especially when combined with an added portion of oil or fat, will sustain life indefinitely. Indian warriors in colonial days lived on parched corn alone for many days at a time, and at Valley Forge parched corn was at times the sole ration of the Continental soldiers.

Owing to transportation difficulties caused by the war the corn crop moved more slowly to market this year than ever before. Now, however, the cereal is reaching the millers and consumers. In the meantime the nation's surplus wheat has been sent to Europe.

Today there are approximately 30 bushels of corn for every American. This quantity is greater by five bushels than in former years.

Corn has become the nation's mainstay in the crisis of war.

Just as this cereal saved the first American colonists from famine on many occasions, just as it served as a staple food during the War of the Revolution and during the Civil War, King Corn has again come to the front in the nation's battle with autocracy.

Corn meal is finding greatly increased use in the making of ordinary white bread. Hundreds of housewives and many of the larger bakers are mixing 20 per cent. corn meal with wheat flour to make leavened bread. This kind of a mixture is worked and baked in the same recipes and with the same methods that apply to straight wheat bread.

Corn bread—using corn meal entirely—is gaining a greater popularity than ever before. Housewives are coming to realise that every pound of wheat saved in America means a pound of wheat released for shipment to the nations with which America is associated in the war.

There are a score of corn products that today possess unusual importance for Americans. Corn syrup for sweetening corn cakes and buckwheat cakes and for use in the kitchen instead of granulated sugar is one of the leading products made from corn.

Corn oil, excellent for frying and for every other purpose filled by salad oils, is appearing on the market in large quantities. It comes from the germ of the corn.

Another Need Is Supplied.

Another need has been supplied in St. Joe. W. E Henly of Hicksville has rented the Widney rooms of G. W. Milliman and will install an up-to-date cobbling shop. This is one of the dire needs of St. Joe as we have been without a local shoe repair man since D. F. Brown became unable to work at the business about a year ago. Mr. Henly will be in St Joe this week to complete his arrangements for opening his shop. Mr. Henly will move his family here in the spring. Mr. Milliman is to be congratulated on lending his influence in securing the shop for this community.

Soft Coal Is On the Way.

Just before going to press the phone message came that two cars of soft coal were in transit for St. Joe. H. W. Mountz, county fuel administrator, delivered this message to H. L. Dunkle, local administrator, which convinces us that everything is well for us and that all is being done possible by our administrator and the Nathan Grain Co., to meet the needs of our people. Many in St. Joe are already cutting wood in order to tide over.

Many Planned to Attend.

Seventy-six tickets were sold Tuesday at the B. & O. station for Auburn, to our patriotic citizens of Concord township. The War Conference was to be well represented but because of the train not arriving until 3:40 P. M. many decided not to make the trip. The conference was full of first-hand information concerning our part in the great struggle for humanity, given by persons who had just returned from France. The conditions are appalling and we are called upon here to make the sacrifices as are now being asked of us in order that the fighting men may be sustained by our food. Those who have had any doubt in regards to the reports made in the press concerning the conditions and treatment of the civilians in France and Belgium, can rest assured now that the press was dealing out the facts as the extracts read by the speakers from the diaries of the German captains and officers showed what acts of inhuman treatment had been perpetrated upon the prisoners, women and children.

As to the length of the war, Dr. Davis gave as his judgement, that from 5 to 14 years would be used before any possible defeating of Germany.

Morr Sale A Hummer.

Chas. Morr of Concord called at THE NEWS office Wednesday and in a conversation with him he expressed his satisfaction in his public sale on last Saturday. Mr. Morr was undecided as to whether to have a sale at this time but finally decided to do so. His team sold for $460. One cow sold for $106 and one for $105, one lot of sheep sold for $21.50 per head and one lot for $22 50 per head. One brood sow sold for $50.00. The sale totaled Mr. Morr $2,370 00 when he expected about $1,800.00. Garman Hallett was the auctioneer.

The Koch sale, last Friday, was well attended and the goods sold far above the appraised value.

Dear kind old Parents:—

How is the weather serving you folks up north? It is rain here one day and cold the next. I am supposed to be the blacksmith and mule shoer here, but I am doing carpenter work at the present.

We got our pay today, I got my quota and you will get the rest, I fixed it with the government that way, you can use it any way you think best. It is hard telling when we will get home since I am transfered over here, but there is not much danger of going across the pond" very soon. About all there is here are negroes and my long-eared friends, the mules. I curry them down and think of currying Maizy while I work. I like it here better than the infantry. I have not seen brother Byron for a month that is the worst, but the soldier's fortune. Our camp is quarentined for smallpox. I was vaccinated again but it did not take so I am alright. We got your Christmas box and it was surely good and I thank you with all my heart for such a treat. I was in the captain's boots yesterday, as I wore his rubber boots all day. The captain's name is Whitehead, and he is a fine man. The non-commissioned officers are all southerners and they are O. K.

I must close now, with love to you. From

DELICIOUS CORN MUFFINS.

Here's an old fashioned recipe for corn muffins that has recently been revived and used with unusual success in several of the larger New York hotels: To make three and a half dozen muffins take one quart milk, six ounces butter substitute, twelve ounces of light syrup or honey, four eggs, pinch of salt, two ounces baking powder, one and a half pounds cornmeal and one and a half pounds rye flour. The butter and syrup should be thoroughly mixed; then add the eggs gradually. Pour in the milk and add the rye flour mixed with cornmeal and baking powder.

WHEATLESS BISCUITS.

Parched cornmeal is the feature of these excellent wheatless biscuits. First, the cornmeal—one-half a cup—is put in a shallow pan placed in the oven and stirred frequently until it is a delicate brown. The other ingredients are a teaspoon of salt, a cup of peanut butter and one and a half cups of water. Mix the peanut butter, water and salt and heat. While this mixture is hot stir in the meal which should also be hot. Beat thoroughly. The dough should be of such consistency that it can be dropped from a spoon. Bake in small cakes in an ungreased pan. This makes 16 biscuits, each of which contains one-sixth of an ounce of protein.

The following is a letter written by J. S. Collins, a brother of Mrs. Ray Reasoner, of St. Joe. He enlisted in the U. S. Navy on Decoration Day, 1908. Dear Sister:

It has been sometime since I wrote you, but please don't scold for not writing. I wrote to you before I left Shanghi, China, for the Phillipine Islands, I hope you got the letter O. K.

Am well but not happy, hope this finds you all well. I came back once more to Uncle Sam to fight and I think I will have a chance this time.

Well Hulda, I will tell you how near I came to death. I was on the U. S. S. Chauncy when she went down, but I got out O. K. I was on watch at the time, if I had not of been I would not be here today, for the English hit us right on the side where I slept, so it was a good thing for me that I was on duty at this time.

I don't expect to ever get home again, for I think sometime we will be hit with a torpedo and then go down; but what if we do, we are going for a good cause. Don't you think so? Did you get my bag and hammock I sent you when I was free in 1916. I hope you did. I had a fine trip all the way across.

I am somewhere in the war zone on the U. S. S. Decatur patrol boat. I don't dare to tell you where I am. Write me any time you care to.

A Word in Regard to the Coal Situation.

We have strict orders from the Fuel Administrator that we are not allowed to sell coal to people outside of St. Joe, Ind., unless they are unable to get wood, either from their own farms, or to buy same. Before we can then sell them we must have a written order from the Town Fuel Administrator which will only be given in severe needy cases. The coal situation in St. Joe is not good, and at present we have none on hand but we are trying very hard as are also the County and Town Fuel Administrators to get more coal for St. Joe. In times like these we must all work together, co-operation in all things will help us win the fight we are fighting for, remember co-operation by all, that is the way to do your bit. One more word to you all. Where-ever you can possibly get a load of wood to burn, do so. Every load of wood that comes to St. Joe. HELPS UNCLE SAM JUST THAT MUCH MORE.

Helping the Meat and Milk Supply

(Special Information Service, U. S. Department of Agriculture.)

MAKE CITY DAIRY REGULATIONS REGULATE

Legislation Properly Drafted and Enforced Will Promote Milk Production Under Sanitary Conditions.

ENFORCIBLE MILK LAWS FOR TOWNS

First See That They Meet Local Conditions, Say Specialists.

RECOMMEND THREE GRADES

Impossible to Frame One Ordinance That Will Be Suitable for All Communities—Form Prepared Which Will Assist.

Milk laws should meet local conditions. Ordinances governing the dairy industry must be prepared with care and be enforced. Officials of the United States department of agriculture say that it would not be wise to attempt to draft a milk ordinance, with its standards, grades, and requirements, without a special study of local dairy conditions as well as the purposes of such an ordinance. One of the most important considerations must be the reasonableness of the law. A law which works an unnecessary hardship on a legitimate industry is not reasonable, and a law so stringent that it cannot readily be enforced will defeat its own ends.

Form Prepared to Assist.

In a strict sense it is impossible to frame one milk ordinance that will be suitable for all communities. The bureau of animal industry and the bureau of chemistry of the department, however, responding to a constant demand by municipal authorities for some form of milk ordinance that will best meet the requirements and which can be used as a guide, have prepared a form which it is believed would assist in bettering the milk supply.

Three Grades Considered.

A special feature of the ordinance is the grading of milk and cream, which is believed to be of paramount importance. A great sanitary and economic question will be solved, it is asserted, if practical grading of milk, with the consequent grading or selling price, can be enforced. Three grades are considered—"Certified," Grade A, and Grade B. Pasteurization is compulsory for Grade B but optional for the others. Community health departments must determine from their own experience the score and bacteria count permitted for Grades A and B, which represent the largest quantities of milk sold. Grade A must be of such quality that there will be no question as to its purity and safety. Grade B can be of lower grade than A because pasteurization is obligatory. No grade below that of B is recognized.

NEED HELP ON MILK LAW? EXPERTS' ADVICE AVAILABLE.

A study of the milk ordinances of many cities, large and small, shows a great diversity of opinion among lawmakers and their advisers as to what constitutes a proper milk ordinance. A great lack of uniformity among laws, some of which are entirely out of date, has been noted. Many of them seem to be transcripts of ordinances in force in other cities, placed in the municipal series of laws without regard to local conditions, and some contain provisions which are unnecessary and unreasonable and cannot be enforced. Bulletin 585 of the department of agriculture suggests a form of ordinance which, it is believed, will prove to be a satisfactory framework upon which the average town or city can build a finished, practicable law that, properly enforced, will improve the average milk supply and work toward a desired uniformity of food laws.

Meat Supply Is Inspected.

Every pound of meat or meat products which reaches the mess tables of Uncle Sam's fighting forces is inspected at least twice by experts of the United States department of agriculture—first at the establishment where it is packed or prepared, and finally at the camps. This extra precaution is taken to prevent food made unwholesome by adulteration or through tampering by enemies from reaching American soldiers and sailors. Laboratory analyses of samples taken from supplies at the camps show if the foods have been made injurious by tampering.

Twenty-six hundred experts of the meat-inspection service of the department of agriculture are stationed throughout the country at establishments which prepare meat and meat products for interstate and foreign commerce. These inspectors personally examine the live animals, the carcasses, and all parts thereof at the time of slaughter. They continue to inspect and to reinspect the meat and meat products throughout the different stages of preparation. All meat which is unsold, unhealthy, unwholesome, and otherwise unfit for food is condemned and destroyed in the presence of the inspectors. Some 70 inspectors of this service have been detailed to the various military and naval camps. All meat and meat products for the army and navy are obtained only from inspected establishments, and every consignment must bear the government stamp "Inspected and Passed."

Store Ice to Save Ammonia.

Every ton of natural ice gathered and stored this winter will help in war-time conservation of ammonia, which is vitally important in the manufacture of fertilizers and explosives. Ammonia is a necessity in the manufacture of ice, and the salts of ammonia are regarded as essential in making certain fertilizers. The man who harvests ice now and stores it in pits or ice houses may have the satisfaction next summer of helping out his neighbor who depended on an ice plant. In addition to the saving of ammonia, conservation of coal is to be effected through the harvesting of natural ice. American ice factories and refrigerator plants, according to figures of the United States fuel administration, use annually 15,000,000 tons of coal.

President Wilson, by a proclamation signed January 4, has required all persons, firms, corporations and associations, except those specifically exempted by the food control act, engaged in the business of importing, manufacturing, storing, or distributing ammonia, ammoniacal liquor or ammonium sulphate, from whatever source produced, to secure license on or before January 21, 1918.

Cheap Source of Protein.

Milk at 15 cents a quart is as cheap a source of protein as sirloin steak at 34.3 cents a pound or eggs at 41.9 cents a dozen. Milk at the same price is as cheap a source of energy as sirloin steak at 21.2 cents a pound or eggs at 20 cents a dozen. Protein and energy are two important necessities for which we eat food. Milk contains the body-building materials—protein and mineral substances, such as lime and phosphorus—needed to renew body wastes and promote growth by forming new tissues and fluids; and it also supplies the energy for carrying on body functions.

The average person in this country uses only a little more than a half pint of milk daily. This quantity can be increased very profitably when safe milk is available. Many persons think of milk only as a beverage, but if they understood that it is really a nourishing food they would increase the allowance. Economy in the diet does not always depend on limiting the use of certain foods, but it is sometimes a question of actually increasing the use of foods which furnish nutritive material at relatively low cost. Milk belongs to the latter class and the housewife would do well to study its food value and decide whether her family is using as much as it should.

Man's Part in Dairy.

The dairy cow can be depended upon for production, but preservation of the milk is man's part.

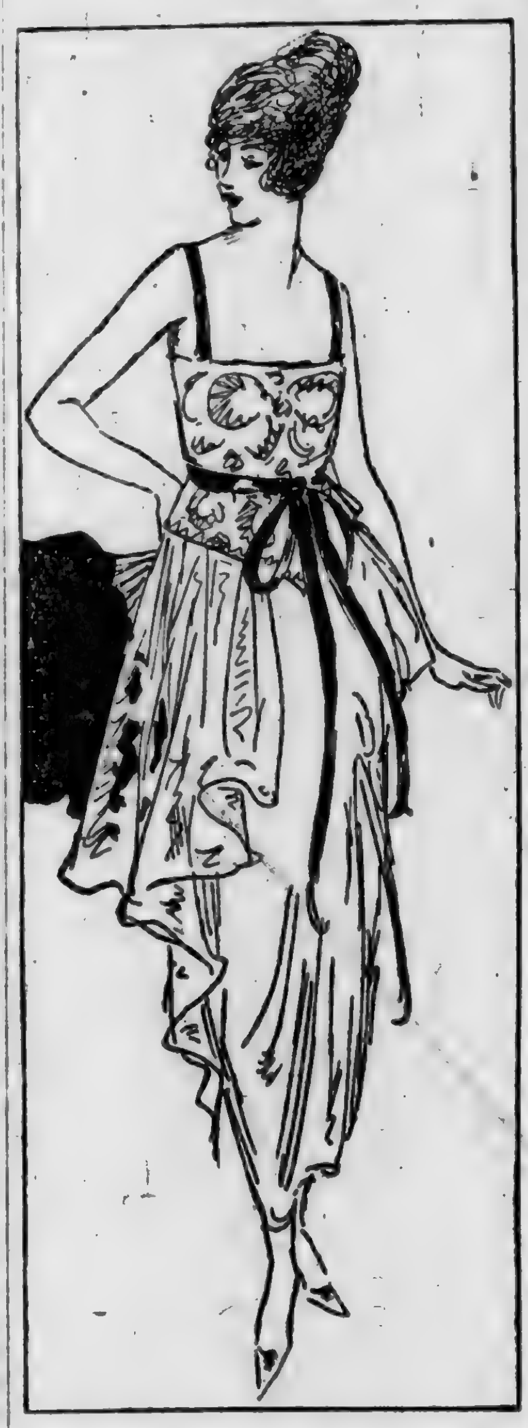
PARIS AGAIN GAY; CLOTHES CHANGE

New York.—Among the accumulated glooms in the war news there are little nuggets of cheer. One of these is the undoubted improvement of what might be called the general atmosphere of Paris. Every arrival from that city, every fashion letter, even the more serious chronicles, speak of the intangible change which has come over the municipal conscience. Apparently, nothing is changed; yet in the restaurants and hotels the menus are more appetizing; the diners are gayer; the theaters are fuller and the pieces played there are more interesting and better mounted. At the opera, at the conferences of fashionable lecturers, at the few concerts, at all the places where society gathers, the same story of better dressing, of increased interest in clothes and all that pertains to them, of the discreet reappearance of jewelry, is told by so many witnesses that we are forced by mere weight of numbers to believe them.

Paris itself wonders. But make inquiries as to the reason, and after more or less deliberation you will receive from all quarters the same answer. America is responsible.

The American troops are paid on a scale that would turn a French war ministry white with horror. Besides, many of the brand-new officers now wearing Uncle Sam's uniform are men with bank accounts which would be respected even in extravagant New York. Put any American with money in his pocket in Paris, and his impulse is to spend it and keep on spending it. Wearing brown clothes and a flannel shirt isn't going to alter that instinct. It's too deep-seated.

The visiting American officer goes to the theater, of course, though unfortunately he is apt to be a little deaf in his French ear. But his eyes are keen enough; and by all accounts, he gets his money's worth optically if not orally. Parisian plays are said to be better and to be more attractively costumed than they have been since 1914. There is no ban militaire on evening dress, on the stage, at least, though the prohibition still extends to the audience. However, we are told that the Parisienne is feeling so much happier that she makes one thickness of tulle fulfill official requirements, and the demi-toilette grows more like formal evening dress every week.



Gown with draped skirt. It is of pale-pink taffeta, with the bodice embroidered with white silk. Old rose velvet ribbon runs over the shoulder and around the waist. The skirt is caught up at one side, and the other side is veiled in white tulle.

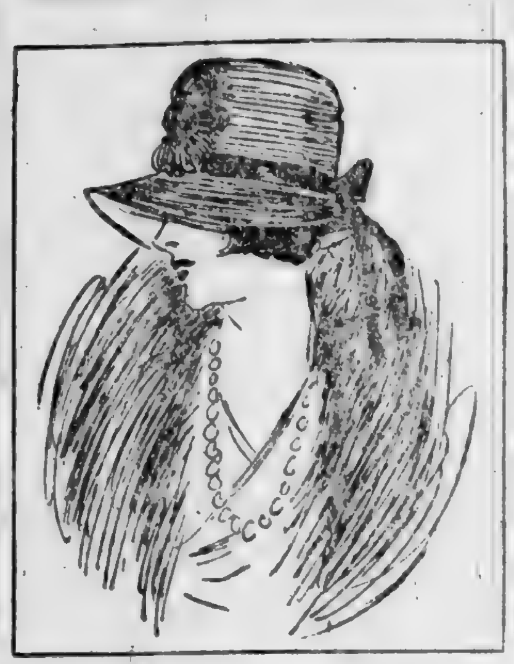
The demi-toilette, however, is nothing new to France. There has always been a certain popularity for this type of gown in Paris, and worn with a hat, it was often seen at the theater or at restaurant or hotel dinners before the war.

Paris Again Gay.

Some of the recent first nights in Paris have been signalized by the wearing of exceedingly good clothes. This was particularly true of the premiere of Jeanne d'Arc, a work new to Paris, though not to London. "Half toilettes," which were only to be distinguished from the ante-bellum evening gowns by the aforementioned use of a film of tulle, were worn by all the women; and many of them appeared in interesting and unusual headdresses. Paris seems to feel the necessity of headgear with a semi-evening frock; hence the introduction of all sorts of amusing arrangements; Oriental turbans, jeweled effects, elaborate bands of jet with dangles over the ears, all of these and many more were seen, and they were creations of the best dressmakers of France.

In the street, the Parisienne still champions the frock and coat, or the "coat dress." All winter, satin has been a favorite material for outdoor things, interlined, of course, for warmth, and simply slathered with fur.

Satin will continue in favor and there is mention of a revival of the "wool-back" variety, which had some success a good many years ago. For spring, the combination of materials, which seems to please our own designers and manufacturers equally well, will be featured.



New hat for the spring. It is of dark red straw with a large flower worked out in worsted in the front.

There really ought to be few women with "the face" to knit in colored wools for their own adornment, in these days of crying demands from the army and navy. But the slip-on garment without sleeves has taken such a hold upon our affections that it is difficult to think of abolishing it altogether. Nor need we do so. American designers, anxious to serve their soldiers and sailors in this vital matter, have had the cleverness to offer the same type of garment in materials of which there is, at present, no such pressing need.

Vests of flannels, of heavy shantungs and other rough weaves of silk, even of satin, made almost exactly like the sweater vest of last summer, have been made up and are being offered to women whose patriotic intention might weaken if these novelties were any less attractive than they are. Jersey, both in wool and silk, is another favorite material for them.

Jersey Weaves Taken Up.

In fact, jersey weaves have not in the least diminished in popularity. The first wool jersey woven in this country was rather too reminiscent of Uncle Josh's red underwear to have a success with fastidious women. But the weave has greatly improved.

As for the silk varieties, there is a heavy sort, of vegetable fiber, which is immensely satisfactory. It is heavy and lustrous and not too stretchable. It hangs in the rich, long folds that cling to the figure and lends itself particularly well to strictly one-piece frocks or coats which hang from the shoulders in an Oriental effect. Such material is never lined, but it is worn over a lining of some sort made especially for it.

Paris is using this heavy kind for outdoor coats, some of them of the slip-on over the head sort, which have failed to achieve success with us, but which she still fancies. Our hotels, restaurants and houses are still, in spite of threatened coal famine, so well-heated, for the most part, that we have retained our habit of slipping off our outdoor garments at the slightest provocation. The idea of wriggling out of a coat made all in one piece or pulling it over our heads like a sailor boy taking off his blouse, does not appeal to us; neither does the French woman's way of getting it on again, which is simply to make a circle of the garment on the floor and step into the middle of it, pulling it up around her. Here is another reason for the retention of the small hat. Such a feat would be impossible in a big one.

Most of the milliners say small hats for spring, for the beginning of spring at any rate. Lewis is reported to have said "toques" very distinctly and to be making them to suit individual faces, by building them on the head of a client, fold by fold. It must be an interesting operation to watch. Of course, as long as hats do such things, hairdressing is doomed to remain very much as at present. And no one has either time or inclination to indulge in the making of elaborate puffs and curls in these times of strenuous endeavor, war work and 24-hour waking days.

For the Girl With White Skin.

The girl with a milk-white skin and reddish hair selects green tulle for her afternoon dance frock—else she misses a great opportunity, when this most becoming color is the rage. From Paquin also comes a delightful green tulle dance frock with layers and layers of green tulle in flounces, each flounce with long points that come at a different place on the skirt and a green tulle overbodice drawn in under a gold-green sash. The underbodice is cut out in a round decolletage and is sleeveless; the overbodice comes high across the neck at front and back and its sleeves veil the arms.

A FIGHT FOR LIFE

It has been fight or die for many of us in the past and the lucky people are those who have suffered, but who are now well because they heeded nature's warning signal in time to correct their trouble with that wonderful new discovery of Dr. Pierce's called "An-u-ric." You should promptly heed these warnings, some of which are dizzy spells, backache, irregularity of the urine or the painful twinges of rheumatism, sciatica or lumbago. To delay may make possible the dangerous forms of kidney disease, such as stone in the bladder.

To overcome these distressing conditions take plenty of exercise in the open air, avoid a heavy meat diet, drink freely of water and at each meal take Dr. Pierce's Anuric Tablets (double strength). You will, in a short time, find that you are one of the firm indorsers of Anuric, as are thousands of neighbors.

Step into the drug store and ask for a 60c package of Anuric, or send Dr. V. M. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y., 10c for trial pkg. Anuric, many times more potent than lithia, eliminates uric acid as hot water melts sugar.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Relieve After 20 Years' Suffering

Mrs. James Dots, of Zanesville, O., is one of thousands of people who in the past 40 years have been relieved of the agonies of kidney trouble by taking Dodd's Kidney Pills. Only recently we received an unsolicited letter from Mrs. Dotz, which reads as follows:

"For twenty long years I suffered with heart disease and bladder inflammation. I had frequent chills, cramps in the muscles and suffered from headache and backache. I was often dizzy and had flashes of light and floating specks before my eyes. I could get no help until I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Then I began to improve right away and six boxes of these Pills completed the cure.

"My little boy also had kidney trouble and was cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I hope thousands of others, suffering as I have, hear of your wonderful remedy."

Mighty few people realize in time that Kidney Trouble is making its advances upon their health. They put off treatment—they say, "Oh, I'll be all right in a day or two." And the malady tightens its grip. Result: Bright's Disease, hospital treatment, doctor's bills—often death.

SLOWER THAN CITY COUSIN

Country Youngster in Army Found to Be Possessed of Much Less Initiative and Speed.

American officers are making precisely the same comment as to the city boy versus the country boy that the British officers made when the first green regiment came to the continent, says a correspondent in France. The country boy is a heavier, stronger, but also a slower lad than his city cousin.

"City life sharpens the wits," is the British conclusion. "The city boys adapt themselves to the devilish life more rapidly than the country boys do. They are just as hardy, too, and soon pick up the little outdoor tricks that so many country boys have learned on hunting and fishing trips. The city youngster has more initiative and more speed."

"Is he game?" I asked.

"There are no gamer regiments in the British army than the cockneys," was the reply.

Americans find the country boy needs more watching and caring for than the recruit from the city. His morale and behavior are far better, but he does not adapt himself quickly to his new environment.

TROTZKY IN NEW YORK

Leon Trotzky, Russian minister of foreign affairs, made a deep impression upon fellow Socialists during his short stay in New York. He remained only a few months—from late in December, 1916, until early in April of last year—but in that time, while living in penury with his wife and two sons in a three-room apartment in the Bronx, he succeeded in interesting Socialists everywhere in his propaganda for a general peace.

Trotzky was "hard up." Exiled from Europe, he arrived in New York penniless. But his reputation as one of the most aggressive advocates of social revolution had preceded him, and his welcome here was cordial.

His workshop was the little editorial office of the Novy Mir, a Russian newspaper published in St. Mark's place. His only source of revenue seems to have been public speaking. Thomas Seltzer, formerly an editor of the Masses and an active Socialist, was among Trotzky's closest friends, seeing him almost daily. "I am not at all surprised by Trotzky's rapid rise to power in Russia, because I know the force of his character, the sincerity of his motives and his unusual gifts as an orator," said Mr. Seltzer. "The talk that Trotzky is pro-German at heart is plain nonsense."

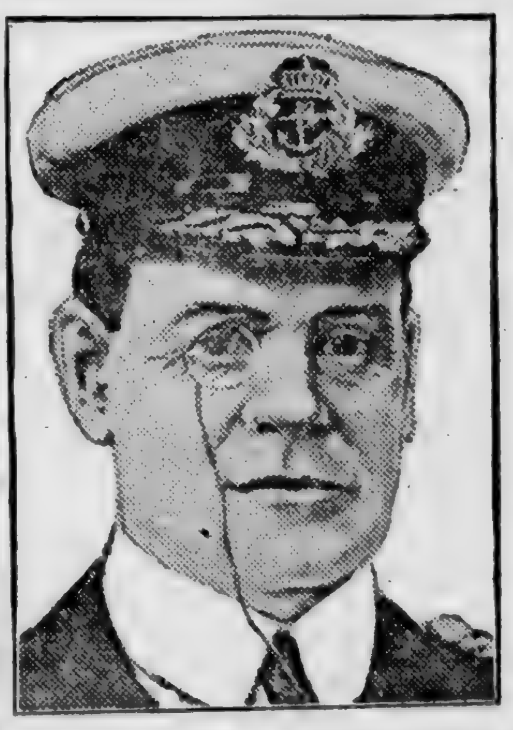
SUFFRAGE LEADER'S NEW WORK

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

Mrs. Norman De R. Whitehouse, who goes as a government emissary to Switzerland shortly to direct a campaign to interpret America's war ideals there, was given credit for "leading the suffragists" to victory last November. As chairman of the New York State Woman Suffrage party she spared no effort to crown the issue with success.

The campaign ended, Mrs. Whitehouse turned her attention to the question that seemed to be occupying the minds of skeptics: "Now that you have the vote what are you going to do with it?" and inaugurated a comprehensive campaign in the city and state to prepare women to use the ballot intelligently. Under her direction every assembly district in the state has schools to teach women civic policies, schools to teach immigrant women English and to become citizens instead of mere voters. It is thought that this Americanization work, as much as her leadership of the suffrage cause, had to do with her selection for the educational campaign abroad, which she will carry on under the direction of the committee on public information.

BRITAIN'S NEW SEA LORD



Vice Admiral Sir Rosslyn Wemyss, who was recently appointed first sea lord of the admiralty in succession to Admiral Sir John R. Jellicoe, is looked to by the British public to get more visible results from England's acknowledged supremacy on the sea.

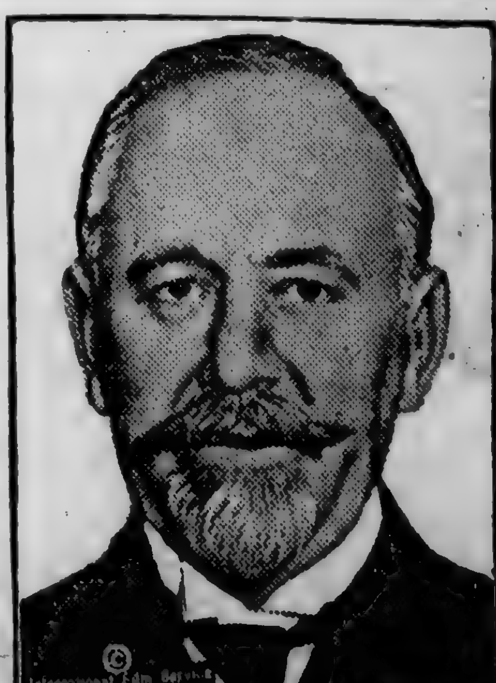
Sir Rosslyn Wemyss is five years' Sir John Jellicoe's junior. According to Geoffrey Butler, who visited America with the Balfour mission last summer, Sir Rosslyn Wemyss represents the old aristocratic element in maintaining British traditions at sea. As second sea lord he had the responsibility of appointing the personnel, because of his knowledge of men and his reputation as an aggressive fighter of the first order. He played a prominent part in the battle of Jutland.

The new first sea lord is the son of the late J. H. Erskine Wemyss, of Wemyss castle, Fife. He entered the navy in 1877, was lieutenant in 1887, commander in 1898, and captain in 1901. He has been in command of the Royal Naval barracks, was for a while equerry to King Edward, and as rear admiral commanded the second battle squadron in 1912-13.

"When they called Wemyss back from his command in the East Indies and made him second sea lord we suspected that he was going to 'get the job,' as you say," said an officer of Great Britain's navy and a former shipmate of Sir Rosslyn Wemyss. "Then, when, about three months later, they created a brand-new post for him, first deputy sea lord, we knew that Wemyss would succeed Jellicoe.

"Wemyss is a born organizer. He is the shrewdest judge of a man's capabilities I know. He picks his assistants with the utmost forethought and care, but, when he has once picked them, he lets them handle their departments with little or no interference. Understand me, Wemyss will know what is going on. But he will not worry about his assistants not doing their work in a proper manner; he does his worrying when he appoints them."

NOTED VISITOR FROM SERBIA



International Film Service

Among the distinguished foreign visitors in Washington is one who deserves more attention than he received on his arrival in the United States. This is Milenko Vesnitch, head of the Serbian war mission to America, his sovereign's envoy in France, and next to old Premier Pashitch, far and away the most able statesman of Serbia. He has represented his country at most of the international congresses which have taken place during the past ten years, enjoys an altogether European reputation and is particularly well qualified to voice the views, the aspirations and the requirements of his nation.

Milenko Vesnitch may be said to have shared the ups and downs of the nation to which he belongs. Like other eminent statesmen in Serbia, he has known what it has been to suffer imprisonment for alleged political offenses. In the reign of the ill-fated but almost completely crazy King Alexander, the slightest opposition to the whim and caprices of the sovereign was construed as high treason, and men who were cabinet ministers one day, found themselves 24 hours later in jail and assigned to convict labor.

Milenko Vesnitch should have received a hearty welcome in the United States, all the more as he has shown his sympathy with this country in a very graceful fashion by marrying an American.

FOOD CONTROLLER OF CANADA GIVES WARNING

Food Production Should Be Increased at All Cost.

In his letter to the public on the 1st of January, Hon. W. J. Hanna, Canada's Food Controller, says;—

"Authoritative information has reached me that food shortage in Europe is terribly real, and only the sternest resolve on the part of the producers, and equally stern economies on the part of all as consumers, can possibly save the situation.

"France last year had a crop between one-third and one-half that of a normal year. Women did the work of draught animals in a determined effort to make the impoverished soil of France produce every possible ounce of food. They now look to us to make up their deficiency of essential supplies.

"The harvest in Italy was far below normal and will require much larger supplies to feed her people until next harvest.

"It is impossible for the allies to spare many cargo carriers to transport foodstuff from India, Australia, New Zealand and even the Argentine Republic. This means that the allied nations are practically dependent upon North America to supply them with the food which must be forthcoming if terrible suffering is to be avoided and the fighting efficiency of the armies maintained.

"On December 1, the United States had not a single bushel of wheat for export, after allowance was made for domestic requirements on the basis of normal consumption, and the United States Food Administration is endeavoring to bring about a reduction of 20 per cent in home consumption of wheat and flour. This would release 100,000,000 bushels for export, but the Allies will require nearly five times that amount before the 1918 harvest.

Canada is the only country in the world, practically accessible to the Allies under present conditions of shipping shortage, which has an actual exportable surplus of wheat after allowance for normal home requirements. The surplus today is not more than 110,000,000 bushels. A reduction of 20 per cent in our normal consumption would save an additional 10,000,000 bushels for export. The outlook for production of food stuffs in Europe next year is distinctly unfavorable.

"Such is the situation—grave beyond anything that we thought possible a few months ago. Unless our people are aroused to a realization of what the world shortage means to us, to our soldiers and to our Allies, and of the terrible possibilities which it entails, disaster is inevitable.

"Production, too, must be increased to the greatest possible extent. Present war conditions demand extraordinary efforts, and every man, woman, boy or girl who can produce food has a national duty to do so.

"I am confident that when the people of this country realize that the food situation is of utmost gravity they will willingly adjust themselves to the necessities of the case and make whatever sacrifices may be required. The call which is made upon them is in the name of the Canadian soldiers at the front, the allied armies, and the civilian populations of the allied nations who have already made food sacrifices to an extent little realized by the people of this country."

Here is an appeal made by a man, upon whom rests the great responsibility of assisting in providing food for the allies and the soldiers at the front, who are fighting the battles in mud and blood. It cannot be ignored. At home we are living in luxury and extravagance inclined to idleness and forgetfulness. This must cease. We must save and produce. Our lands must be tilled no matter where it may be, in Canada or the United States. It is our duty to cultivate. Splendid opportunities in the United States are open for further cultivation of lands. Western Canada also offers opportunities in high producing lands at low prices. Decide for yourself where you can do the most good, on land in the United States or in Canada, and get to work quickly.—Advertisement.

DOCTOR URGED AN OPERATION

Instead I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Was Cured.

Baltimore, Md.—"Nearly four years I suffered from organic troubles, nervousness and headaches and every month would have to stay in bed most of the time. Treatments would relieve me for a time but my doctor was always urging me to have an operation. My sister asked me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound before consenting to an operation. I took five bottles of it and it has completely cured me and my work is a pleasure. I tell all my friends who have any trouble of this kind what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me."—NELLIE B. BRITTINGHAM, 609 Calverton Rd., Baltimore, Md.

It is only natural for any woman to dread the thought of an operation. So many women have been restored to health by this famous remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after an operation has been advised that it will pay any woman who suffers from such ailments to consider trying it before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

Criticism Kills Patriotism.

Everyone has a big opportunity to do "his bit."

Our admiration, affection and gratitude go out to the brave men who will defend the honor of state and nation. How about the brave one who stays at home?

Did you ever stop to think that it takes a brave heart to stay out of active service? Perhaps in many cases the degree of sacrifice is greater with the one who must stay at home.

Our people are loyal and patriotic and in this great fight "to make the world safe for democracy" we shall maintain the best tradition of our state and of a people, who always contribute their services when a real call comes.

Perhaps your boy is in active military service. Perhaps his duty keeps him at home. I venture the opinion that the spirit of loyal patriotism is as keen with many who cannot go on the firing line as it is with our brave fighters.

We ought to avoid and, is possible, prevent sarcastic, unjust, unfair criticism, that often cuts deeper than the bullet and tends to destroy brotherly love and patriotism.

Abraham Lincoln in an hour of great distress, cried out his memorable appeal: "What we need most is the spirit of co-operative copartnership, baptized in the blood of brotherly love," and that great truth is of vital importance now.

This war is so tremendously big and of such intimate personal importance to every wage-earner and tax-payer, and to every man and home, regardless of class or creed, that there is no middle ground for the partisan. We must unite on one common hope and determination—to fight and to win.

The State Council of Defense and, in like manner, the County Councils of Defense, are organized for efficient, constructive and co-operative services with the Federal Government and are intended to serve a loyal people as the clearing-house of activities.

You and I and every man and woman and child, have splendid opportunities, at home, in our own neighborhood, among our own friends, and business associates, to help win this war.

In a thousand ways the opportunity is open to everyone to help, and to do real services of vital importance.

The President of the United States, the Governor of the State, all who are in authority from the Admiral to the coal stoker, from the commanding officer to the boys in the trenches, are partners with us in a glorious enterprise and we must play fair with our partners. Get under the load, and into the fight. There is no middle ground that you can take. We are in the fight to win.

The first big thing we can do, is to kill unfair, unjust criticism and help develop the spirit of co operative co-partnership with civic, state and national authorities.

A thousand opportunities for real co-operative, constructive and efficient service will open for you.

Will you try it now with me, and pledge your sacred honor, as follows:

Every day, so long as we are in the war, and by the help of God, I pledge my sacred honor to do my very best, to avoid unfair, unjust criticism. I will help my neighbor and my friends and every man, woman, and child to do the same, and to develop the spirit of co-operative co-partnership with the authorities, civic, state and national, so that they may fight to win.

Booze Parties in Court.

Evening Star.

Three shame-faced young men appeared before Judge Link together Friday afternoon and confessed their guilt of stealing.

The prisoners declared it was their first offense and threw themselves on the mercy of the court. Judge Link decided they merited clemency, placing them under a suspension of sentence to the penal farm.

The three young men are William McKinley, Ralph Palmer and Clarence White of Spencerville. They admitted they had deliberately taken some whiskey from a car on the Wabash railroad siding at Spencerville. The court fined them $1 and costs, a total of $13.80 each, stipulated that they should pay for the whiskey, worth $250, and sentenced them to the penal farm for sixty days. The sentence is suspended during good behavior, being in effect for two years.

Incidentally, other Spencerville men were implicated in the case, and evidence was given to show that several shared in the booty. These included Jack Beams, a merchant; James Vallieu, a blacksmith; Buck Allen, James Moody and Charles Chapman.

Temptation Was Strong.

The booze party was held on the night of January 24. According to the evidence presented by McKinley, Palmer and White, the Wabash telepraph operators at Spencerville told McKinley that there was a carload of whiskey on a siding. The three went to Vallieu and got a brace and bit, telling the blacksmith what they intended to do. They secured a pail and a jug and went after the liquor on the evening of January 24. A fifty-gallon keg of whiskey had been shifted so that it had pushed the car door out and was part way off the floor of the car, although the seal of the car was not broken.

The boys bored a hole in the bottom of the keg and filled their jug and pail and went up to the Beams store, going into the basement. Other men gathered and partook of the feast. Some of them were ambitious to get a share of the liquor and Moody, Chapman and Allen decided to make a trip in Moody's sleigh, McKinley agreeing to go along as guide, he said. Two or three buckets were filled and the crowd returned to the Beams basement. Ralph Baker joined them there.

Not Regular Drinkers.

McKinley is a clerk in the Beams store, while White and Palmer are sons of farmers and have been lately working on the Wabash section. McKinley is thirty-one years old and a widower. White is twenty and Palmer is nineteen. None of them had ever been in trouble before and come of good families. Palmer and White declared they threw away their whiskey. None of them seemed to have criminal intentions. They agreed that they had done wrong and would not repeat the offense.

Detectives Will G. Bates and J. A. Uhrig of the Wabash, made an investigation of the theft and brought about the arrest of the three young men. Although the specific charge was for stealing four gallons of whiskey, valued at $16, Bates said practically all of the whiskey in the keg disappeared. What became of the balance not accounted for by the testimony of McKinley, White and Palmer is not known.

The witnesses against these three men are given on Prosecutor Nyce's affidavits as James Valieu, George Jenkins, Charles Uhrig, Elmer Harwood, Bert Wasson, William Moore, Ralph Baker and Albert Peterson. But McKinley, White and Palmer were willing to tell the story of their participation in the affair and no other witnesses were called. The fathers of the three were in court and were greatly affected by the disgrace and by the judge's warning that their crime would land the boys in the penitentiary. The young men all promised to heed the court's advice and to appreciate the leniency shown toward them in their first offense.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Ruthless Submarine Warfare and the Prussian Autocracy

How Broken Promises of German Government Forced United States Into War In Defense of Its Rights as a Free Nation

By DAVID S. HOUSTON, Secretary of Agriculture

Why is the United States at war with Germany? Why all this preparation, expense, and jeopardy of thousands of American lives? Are we fighting the battles of England, France, Italy and Russia? Are we in the war to pull the chestnuts of the allies out of the fire? Are we fighting to help them recover lost territory or to acquire new possessions? Why do we fight at all? Why not employ peaceful means? Why not negotiate?

These questions are now being asked not infrequently, especially by German propagandists, by a few disloyal natives, and by some unintelligent and unpatriotic pacifists.

The main answer to these enemies of America within and without is simple. We are at war with Germany primarily to assert and to defend our rights, to make good our claim that we are a free nation, entitled to exercise rights long recognized by all the nations of the world, to exercise these rights without restraint or dictation from the Prussian autocracy and militarists, to have the kind of institutions we wish, and to live the kind of life we have determined to live. We are at war with Germany because Germany made war on us, sank our ships, and killed our citizens who were going about their proper business in places where they had a right to be, traveling as they had a right to travel. We either had to fight or to keep our citizens and ships from the seas around England, France and Italy, or to have our ships sunk and our people killed.

We did not make this war. Germany made war on America, and only after exercising great patience and enduring grievous wrongs did we formally declare this to be a fact. Recall the history of our negotiations with Germany, of our attempts to secure justice by diplomatic, peaceful means.

David S. Houston.

Declares War Zone.

February 4, 1915, Germany declared that on and after February 18, 1915, she would regard the waters around Great Britain and Ireland, including the channel, as a war zone and that "every enemy merchant ship would be destroyed without possibility of avoiding danger to crew and passengers." She pointed out that it would not always be possible to prevent neutral vessels from becoming victims of submarine attack. This action was without the color of justification in international law. Her only legitimate course was to declare and to effect a blockade and then, having done so, to intercept enemy vessels, discriminating between enemy and neutral vessels, enemy and neutral cargoes, in the case of neutral ships captured to take to prize courts only those carrying contraband, to sink vessels only in extraordinary circumstances, and in every case to give safety to crews and passengers and to preserve all papers of ships sunk or captured. Because of the allied fleets, it was impossible for Germany to do these things by the use of instruments heretofore employed. She could attempt them only with a new device, the submarine.

Unquestionably, new conditions of war had arisen and new means for waging it had come into existence; and, just as it was recognized that fleets could not be held to a close blockade of ports, the old three-mile blockade, so it was tacitly admitted that a submarine could not be expected to capture and take a ship into port, but might sink it provided it practiced visit and search for purposes of discrimination, safeguarded the lives of crew and passengers and, therefore, gave ample warning to vessels and did not sink them in places or under conditions in which noncombatants could not secure safety.

United States Protests.

On February 11 this government replied, contesting Germany's position, and warning her that it would hold her to a strict accountability and take every necessary step to safeguard American lives and property and to secure a full enjoyment of their rights on the high seas.

On March 28 a German submarine sank the Falaba, drowning an American citizen; on May 1 the Gulflight, drowning two American citizens; and on May 7 the Lusitania, drowning 114.

These acts were followed by a protest from this government on May 13, in which a demand was made for disavowal of the action of the commander of the submarine in sinking the Lusitania and for reparation. This government informed Germany that it would omit no word or act necessary to the performance of its sacred duty of maintaining the rights of the United States and of its citizens and of safeguarding their free exercise. On May 28, Germany replied, placing the responsibility for the sinking of the Lusitania on Great Britain and the British shipping company, asserting that the Lusitania was an auxiliary cruiser, which was false, that it was armed, which was equally false, and that the company permitted it to carry munitions, which it had a right to do.

On the 9th of June the government of the United States replied to Germany's Lusitania note, denying the statements as to the character of the Lusitania and as to her armament, asserting that it was sunk without warning, solemnly renewed its representations, and asked assurances that American ships and the lives of American citizens be not put in jeopardy. A month later Germany answered saying that she was compelled to meet the British blockade, and that if her submarine commander had practiced visit and search the submarine would have been destroyed. She cynically added that in any event it was to have been expected that a mighty ship like the Lusitania would remain above the water long enough for its passengers to get off. The sinking of this ship, she hypocritically represented, revealed with horrible clearness to what jeopardy of human lives the manner of conducting war employed by her adversaries led. American ships, she promised, would not be hindered from their legitimate business, and lives on neutral vessels would not be jeopardized. This was promise number one.

Gives Orders to Neutrals.

She decreed that neutral vessels must be properly marked, sufficient notice be given in advance, and a guaranty be furnished that they would not carry contraband. She impudently informed us that she would agree to a proposal to increase by installments the number of vessels available for the passenger service by placing a reasonable number of neutral ships under the American flag.

Of course the secretary of state answered that Germany's reply was unsatisfactory. It did not indicate how the principles of international law and humanity could be applied. It proposed a partial suspension of them which, in effect, set them aside. This government noted Germany's assurance, made once more, as to the freedom of the seas, that the character and cargoes of merchant vessels would be first determined and that lives of noncombatants would not be jeopardized. The United States demanded the disavowal of the act of the commander of the submarine and reparation for injuries. It revealed the warning to Germany and advised her that the repetition of such an act against the rights of the United States affecting her citizens would be regarded as deliberately unfriendly.

Less than a month after this definite representation, Ambassador Page sent notice from London of the sinking of the Arabic, with a loss of three American lives. Five days later the German ambassador expressed the hope that the United States would await full information before acting and asserted that if American lives were lost it was not in accordance with the intention of the German government. A week later he gave this assurance: "Liners will not be sunk by our submarines without warning and without safety of noncombatants, provided that they do not try to escape or offer resistance." This was promise number two.

Makes Another Promise.

He added that this policy was decided upon by this government before the Arabic was sunk. This was followed on September 7 by word from the German government through Ambassador Gerard that the Arabic was sunk because it planned to attack the submarine, that the government could not admit indemnity even if the commander was mistaken, and that if he was, the government would be willing to submit the case to The Hague. On the 14th, after receiving the facts, Mr. Lansing wrote that the Arabic was not warned and did not try to ram the submarine. On October 5 Bernstorff replied that the German government rules had been made so stringent that no repetition of the Arabic case was possible, admitted the validity of the evidence against the Arabic's attempt to ram the submarine, expressed regret at the occurrence, disavowed the act and offered indemnity.

This was promise number three.

On March 27 the state department sent Ambassador Gerard word that there was much evidence that the channel passenger steamer Sussex was sunk by a torpedo March 24 with 328 passengers on board. It asked for information concerning the following ships which, with Americans on board, were sunk: The Englishman, the Manchester Guardian, the Eagle Point and the Berwindale, all sunk within a comparatively short time. The German government replied on April 11, saying either that it did not have sufficient information to form an opinion, or that it was doubtful if the sinking was traceable to a submarine, or that the ship attempted to escape.

Ultimatum From United States.

Within a week this government replied that the Sussex was torpedoed, that this was not an isolated case, that it was clear Germany had made indiscriminate destruction a deliberate policy, contrary to assurances given again and again, that the United States had been willing to wait till the course of Germany was susceptible of only one interpretation and that that time had been reached. It added: "Unless the imperial German government should now immediately declare and effect an abandonment of its recent methods of submarine warfare against passenger and freight carrying vessels the government of the United States can have no choice but to sever diplomatic relations with the German empire altogether." The next day the president addressed the congress to the same effect.

On May 4 Germany replied that she was alive to the possibility that the Sussex was torpedoed, admitting in effect that she was caught in having made a false statement. Her commanders, she asserted, had orders to conduct warfare in accordance with visit and search except in the case of enemy trade ships navigating in the war zone. As to these she gave no assurance, and claimed that she had never given any. She regretted that the United States did not extend the same sympathy to the German civilian population that it did to the victims of submarine warfare. However, she was willing to go the limit: "In accordance with the principles of law German submarines will exercise visit and search before sinking merchant vessels recognized by law if they do not attempt to escape or resist."

This was promise number four.

Violates Solemn Pledges.

On January 31, on the pretext of acknowledging receipt of the president's address to the senate, Germany expressed regret that the attitude of the allies, their lust for conquest, made peace impossible. This, she proclaimed, created a new situation, to which reference was made in a former note, and called for a decision. That decision was nothing less than to violate all her solemn pledges, to extend the submarine zone to Great Britain, France and Italy, and to sink all ships. She was confident that this action would lead to a speedy termination of the war and would be understood by the United States. As a favor to this country she would permit it to send one steamer a week each way to a particular port, Falmouth. She fixed the day for arrival, Sunday, and the day for departure, Wednesday. The ship must be striped with three stripes, each a meter wide, white and red alternating, and a guaranty must be given that it carry no contraband.

The president promptly executed his warning to Germany, severing diplomatic relations with the German empire on February 3. Immediately the president laid the matter before congress and informed it of his action. American ships, however, remained in port as they arrived, as did those of other neutrals, and Germany was achieving her ends by menace. On the same day the Housatonic, an American steamer, was sunk, and on February 13 the Lyman M. Law. It was obvious that a further step must be taken or this country would be impotent and would be playing into the hands of the Prussian autocrats. Therefore, on February 26 the president asked congress for authority to arm merchant vessels, and even then said that war, if it came, could come only by the act of Germany.

226 Americans Killed.

In the period from February 26 to April 2, six American ships were sunk with loss of many lives. Ships of other neutrals were destroyed and Americans were murdered. In this whole period, 226 American citizens, many of them women and children, were killed. Armed neutrality obviously was ineffective. The country was experiencing all the disadvantages of war without any of the rights or effectiveness of a belligerent. Only one alternative was left.

On April 2 the president appeared before congress and recommended that a state of war be declared against the German government. The congress accepted the recommendation by a vote of 373 to 50 in the house of representatives and 82 to 6 in the senate.

If we had not accepted the challenge of the war-mad, desperate, dictatorial, contemptuous, hypocritical, and medieval Prussian militarists, we would have had to admit that we were not a free nation, that we preferred peace at any price, and were interested only in the fleshpots. This country either had to swallow its own words, abdicate its position as a free sovereign power, concede that it had no rights except those which Germany accorded it, hold its citizens and ships away from Europe, or to recognize the plain fact that Germany was acting in a hostile manner against it, fight to defend its rights, fight for humanity and the cause of civilization and free peoples everywhere, joining its power with the other free nations of the world to put an end to autocratic and brute force. There was one choice we could not make—we were incapable of making. We could not "choose the path of submission and suffer the most sacred rights of our nation and our people to be ignored or violated."

LABOR—AGRICULTURE'S BIG WAR PROBLEM

All Practicable Machinery That Can Take Man's Place Should Be Utilized—Mechanical Potato Diggers Save Hand Operations.

SPECIALISTS TO AID THE FARMER

Country Divided Into Divisions to Handle Man Power.

SOLVE FARM LABOR PROBLEM

Subject Which Agricultural Department Has Given More Thought to Than Any Other, According to Secretary Houston.

The farm labor problem has presented and continues to present many difficulties, Secretary Houston said the other day. It is one of the two or three subjects to which the department has given more thought than to any others, he said, not only since this country entered the war, but for many months prior to that time. There has been before the farmers the question of retaining a sufficient number of year-round skilled laborers and also of meeting the urgent needs at the planting and harvesting periods. Farmers in the neighborhood of cities, where there has been great redirection of labor and capital, and also where the cantonments and other special enterprises have been under way, have been greatly embarrassed, Secretary Houston said.

Labor Survey First.

Constructive effort, according to the secretary, is needed along several lines, which may be briefly stated as follows: A systematic survey of the farm labor situation to ascertain the possible needs of farmers and to determine ways of meeting them, the promotion of fuller co-operation in the utilization of labor among farmers in the same community, the further development of machinery for assisting in the transfer of labor, making available labor which heretofore has not been fully or regularly utilized, the releasing of men for agricultural purposes as far as possible by replacing them with women, the largest possible production and the fullest use of farm labor-saving machinery.

To co-operate effectively in the farm labor problem with the United States department of labor, state councils of defense, state commissioners of agriculture and labor, and other official state and local agencies concerned with supplying needed farm labor, the department of agriculture has divided the country into four farm labor divisions: (1) New England and Northeastern states, (2) Southern states, (3) North Central states, and (4) Western states.

Federal Co-operation With States.

Each of these divisions is in charge of a representative of the department of agriculture, known as a supervising farm help specialist, who supervises the work of the department's farm labor work in single states or two or more adjoining states. These farm help specialists will co-operate directly with state agencies, central and local employment agencies of the United States department of labor, and with the county agents and community farm help committees which will be charged directly with meeting labor needs in their special localities.

The farm help specialists through preliminary labor surveys will endeavor to ascertain in advance the prospective needs for extra labor in each community. They will work with state and local agencies to supply labor deficiencies from local supplies if possible, or from the nearest point where labor can be secured outside the community in need of assistance. All local sources of labor first will be drawn upon and only when the fullest possible utilization of local labor proves inadequate, will labor be brought in from outside. In cases of necessity, however, through the department of agriculture and the department of labor, arrangements will be made for interstate movement of help, in which the department of labor will co-operate in obtaining extra labor for farm purposes from the populous communities.

It is pointed out that the farmer in need of labor should proceed as follows: He should report his need to his county agent or to a member of the community farm help committee. If possible, his need will be supplied from lists of men available in the county. If local labor is inadequate, the county agent or committee will report to the state farm labor specialist, who, in co-operation with the state officials, will draw on the nearest available labor within the state.

LABOR-SAVING MACHINERY TO CONSERVE MAN POWER.

One of the important measures urged by the department of agriculture to help meet the labor needs this year is the largest possible production and fullest use of farm labor-saving machinery. The department has actively interested itself in securing priority for raw materials used in the manufacture of farm implements and also in securing favorable consideration at the hands of transportation committees to provide facilities for moving the materials to the manufacturers, and the completed products from the manufacturers to the distributors and also to the farmers. Both those dealing with priorities of materials and those dealing with priorities of transportation have evinced a complete willingness to assist. This is indicated by the fact that the priorities committee of the war industries board gave raw materials needed for farm implements a position of preference over all articles except those urgently required for military and naval purposes, and that the transportation committee took steps to secure the prompt movement of the raw materials and of the manufactured articles.

EXPERTS TO AID "WOOD INSTEAD OF COAL" MOVEMENT.

Ten experts of the forest service, United States department of agriculture, have been assigned to co-operate with the fuel administration to relieve the fuel shortage in the eastern states. They will give their attention to ways of increasing the use of firewood, in order to lessen the demand for coal. They will demonstrate to farmers and other woodland owners methods of cutting by which firewood can be obtained with the best results to the timber growth. Plans for securing and distributing firewood will be worked out. It is hoped to establish municipal wood yards at various places and to decide upon satisfactory methods for utilizing waste from sawmills and other woodworking plants. A special appeal will be made through directors of extension work in the various states to the farmers to cut wood this winter while other work is slack.

Fiber Silk to Be Popular.

The use of jersey weaves or knitted fabrics in both silk and wool continues to be a dominant feature of garment and style development. For wear during the coming spring season fiber silk, much on the order of that used for sweaters, will be used in both sport suits and dresses. Several textile houses have brought this fabric out, giving it fanciful trade names, but it is nothing more nor less than fiber silk, which everyone knows is not silk at all, but which serves as an excellent imitation and substitute for silk at a much cheaper price.

The Drape Skirt.

The drape skirt is still seen in the new dresses. This may be one way back to the tight skirt. Other dresses have series of plaits in their skirts, so they seem narrow without being so—another route to the tighter models. Still others have slight draperies made of released skirt plaits. Tunic tops, despite their slight curves, often present as a whole a long, slender dress.

Temperance Notes

HOW ALCOHOL AFFECTS BRAIN.

Alcohol is a poison to all parts of the body, but the part which alcohol can damage most quickly and to the greatest extent is the delicate and sensitive brain. And that is a fact. The first effect of taking alcohol into the system is felt by the brain; the worst damage is done to the most delicate parts of the brain; and so it follows, that when a man takes a drink of whisky or beer, or anything else containing alcohol, it promptly muddies his thinking, weakens his judgment, and loosens his control over his actions. In other words, it quickly steals from him what is best in him; it reduces the force of highest brain control which nature has given him which he has developed through ages and which marks him out as different from brute animals.

Now, of course, we don't mean to say that when a person takes a drink of anything containing alcohol he at once is reduced to a brute animal; but very few will dispute that a drunken person is not much better than a brute animal. And the reason he has been reduced to such a state by alcohol is because, before he can take enough of it to kill his body, he has had enough to paralyze his brain, especially the highest parts of his brain. It has paralyzed his power to think, it has paralyzed his power to judge, has paralyzed his power to control his actions. The amount of alcohol which makes a person drunken varies with different people. Some can stand very little, others a great deal. However, even a very little, though it does not show itself in drunkenness, has a damaging effect on the brain. This is what we want to point out particularly. Too many people think that if they drink alcohol in moderation, such for example, as three or four glasses of beer a day, or one or two drinks of whisky a day, they are not doing themselves any harm at all. Very many even think that they may safely drink as long as they stop before getting drunk. These are very dangerous and mistaken ideas to have. Drinking even in moderation has dangers for the brain and nerves, and steady drinking is very bad.

One of the most terrible effects of alcohol on the nervous system is delirium tremens—the "D. T.'s." Now, it is not necessary to drink oneself drunk to get the D. T.'s. Here is what a doctor who has handled an enormous number of alcoholic patients and who has made a life-long study of their troubles, has to say: "Many men who have never been intoxicated, but have for years steadily taken alcohol, will, after some severe accident, develop delirium tremens."—Official Bulletin, Bureau Public Health Education, Department of Health, New York City.

WHAT THE DOCTORS SAY.

"Whereas we believe that the use of alcohol as a beverage is detrimental to the human economy; and

"Whereas, its use in therapeutics as a tonic, or a stimulant, or as a food, has no scientific basis; therefore be it

"Resolved, that the American Medical association opposes the use of alcohol as a beverage; and be it further

"Resolved, that the use of alcohol as a therapeutic agent should be discouraged."

The above resolution was adopted by the American Medical association, an organization representing 80,000 physicians and surgeons of the United States.

Dr. Charles H. Mayo, president of the association, declared in his installation address: "Alcohol's only place is in the arts and sciences. National prohibition would be welcomed by the medical profession."

A PERTINENT QUESTION.

Speaking of the proposed government purchase and control of the liquor business in Great Britain, Dr. Robertson Nicol says in the British Weekly: "We have to put the question whether America would allow the money she lends to the allies to be spent in such a fashion. . . . We doubt whether Lord Reading would venture to ask the Americans to lend us £500,000,000 in order that we may compensate the great multitude concerned in the liquor trade.

ILL HEALTH OF SALOON MEN.

Concerning the result of the prohibition referendum in Ohio, the Outlook says: "If we owned a corner saloon in some Ohio town and had given serious thought to the diminishing [wet] returns, we would feel inclined to insert in a local paper an advertisement reading somewhat as follows: 'TO EXCHANGE—ONE SALOON FOR one farm. Present owner desires to retire from business on the ground of ill health.'"

POOR BRAIN FOOD.

Patient—But this is "brain food," doctor. I thought it was my liver that was affected.

Doctor—Yes; but "liver medicine" will do you no good until you get brains enough to stop drinking.—Temperance.

LOST THROUGH DRINK.

"When the German soldiers entered Belgium," says Sir Harry Johnston, "they really lost the chance of getting to Paris or to Calais by stupefying themselves with strong drink."

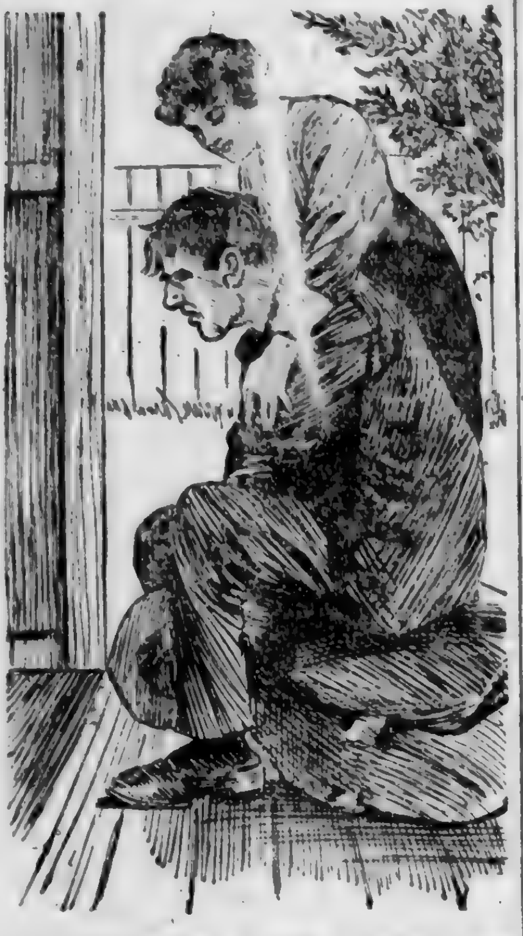
"No, not if you let go hard enough. I mean," she caught herself up quickly, "I mean if you let clear go and turn the job over to God. But you're not to think you can keep decent by yourself, for you can't—it's not born in you, and something else is—just let go, and stay let go. After that it's God's job, and unless you stick in and try to manage yourself, he'll see you through."

"All right, I'll do it."

Carol gasped. She opened her lips a few times, and swallowed hard. She didn't know what to do next. Wildly she racked her brain for the next step in this vital performance.

"I—think we ought to pray," she said feebly.

"All right, we'll pray." He rolled curiously off the stick of wood, and fell, as if by instinct, into the attitude of prayer.



"I—I Think We Ought to Pray," She Said Feebly.

Carol gazed about her helplessly. But true to her training, she knelt beside him. Then came silence.

"I—well, I'll pray," she said with grim determination. "Dear Father in Heaven," she began weakly, and then she forgot her timidity and her fear, and realized only that this was a crisis in the life of the drunken man.

"Oh, God, he'll do it. He'll let go, and turn it over to you. He isn't worth anything, God, none of us are, but you can handle him, for you've had worse jobs than this, though it doesn't seem possible. You'll help him, God, and love him, and show him how, for he hasn't the faintest idea what to do next, and neither have I. But you brought him into our barn tonight, and you'll see him through. Oh, God, for Jesus' sake, help Ben Peters. Amen.

"Now, what shall I do?" she wondered.

"What's your father for?" She looked quickly at Ben Peters. He had not spoken, but something certainly had asked, "What's your father for?"

"You stay here, Ben, and pray for yourself, and I'll send father out. I'm not just sure what to say next, and father'll finish you up. You pray for all you're worth."

She was gone in a flash, through the kitchen, through the hall, up the stairs two at a time, and her arm thrown closely about her father's shoulder.

"Oh, father, I got stuck," she wailed. "I'm so ashamed of myself. But you can finish him off, can't you? I honestly believe he's started."

He took her firmly by the arms and squared her around on his lap. "One, two, three, ready, go. Now, what?"

"Ben Peters. He was drunk in the barn and I took him into the woodshed and gave him some hot coffee—and some religion, but not enough to hurt him. I told him he had to get converted, and he said he would. So I told him about it, but you'd better tell him again, for I'm afraid I made quite a mess of it. And then we prayed, and I was stuck for fair, father, for I couldn't think what to do next. But I do believe it was God who said, 'What's your father for?' And so I left him praying for himself, and—you'd better hurry, or he may get cold feet and run away. Be easy with him, father, but don't let him off. This is the first chance we've ever had at Ben Peters, and God'll never forgive us if we let him slip through our fingers."

Carol was dumped off onto the floor and her father was half-way down the stairs before she caught her breath. Then she smiled. Then she blushed.

"That was one bad job," she said to herself sadly. "I'm a disgrace to the Methodist church. Thank goodness the trustees'll never hear of it. I'll bribe Ben Peters to eternal silence if I have to do it with kisses." Then her face grew very soft. "Poor old man! Oh, the poor old man!" A quick rush of tears blinded her eyes, and her throat throbbed. "Oh, why do they—what makes men like that? Can't they see, can't they know, how awful they are, how—" She shuddered. "I can't see for the life of me what makes God treat us decently at all." Her face brightened again. "It was a bad job, all right, but I feel kind of pleased about it. I hope father won't mention it to the girls."

And Ben Peters truly had a start, incredible as it seemed. Yes, as Carol had warned him, he forgot sometimes and tried to steer for himself, and always crashed into the rocks. Then Carol, with angry eyes and scornful voice, berated him for trying to get hold of God's job, and cautioned him anew about "sticking in when it was not his affair any more." It took time, a long time, and hard work, and many, many prayers went up from Carol's bedside, and from the library at the head of the stairs, but there came a time when Ben Peters let go for good and all, and turned to Carol, standing beside the bed with sorry frightened eyes, and said quietly:

"It's all right, Carol. I've let go. You're a mighty nice little girl. I've let go for good this time. I'm just slipping along where he sends me—it's all right," he finished drowsily. And fell asleep.

CHAPTER XII.

The Connie Problem.

Mr. Starr was getting ready to go to conference, and the girls hovered about him with anxious eyes. This was their fifth conference since coming to Mount Mark—the time limit for Methodist ministers was five years. The Starrs, therefore, would be transferred, and where? Small wonder that the girls followed him around the house and spoke in soft voices and looked with tender eyes at the old parsonage and the wide lawn. They would be leaving next week. Already the curtains were down, and laundered, and packed. The trunks were filled, the books were boxed. Yes, they were leaving, but whither were they bound?

"Get your ecclesiastical dander up, father," Carol urged, "don't let them give us a church fight, or a twenty-thousand-dollar debt on a thousand-dollar congregation."

"We don't care for a big salary or a stylish congregation," Lark added, "but we don't want to go back to washpans and kerosene lamps again."

The conference was held in Fairfield, and he informed the girls casually that he would be home on the first train after the assignments were made. He said it casually, for he did not wish them to know how perturbed he was over the coming change. During the conference he tried in many and devious ways to learn the will of the authorities regarding his future, but he found no clue. And at home the girls were discussing the matter very little, but thinking of nothing else. They were determined to be pleased about it.

Just the same, on Wednesday evening, the girls sat silent, with intensely flushed faces and painfully shining eyes, watching the clock, listening for the footstep. They had deliberately remained away from the station. They thought they could face it better within the friendly walls of the parsonage. It was all settled now, father knew where they were going. Oh, why hadn't he wired? It must be terribly bad then, he evidently wanted to break it to them gently.

Maybe it was a circuit! There was the whistle now! Only a few minutes now. Suppose his salary were cut down—good-by to silk stockings and kid gloves—cheap, but kid, just the same! Suppose the parsonage would be old-fashioned! Suppose there wasn't any parsonage at all, and they would have to pay rent! Sup— Then the door slammed.

Carol and Lark picked up their darning, and Connie bent earnestly over her magazine. Aunt Grace covered a yawn with her slender fingers and looked out of the window.

"Hello!"

"Why, hello, papa! Back already?"

They dropped darning and magazine and flew to welcome him home.

"Come and sit down!" "My, it seemed a long time!" "We had lots of fun, father." "Was it a nice conference?" "Mr. James sent us two bushels of potatoes!" "We're going to have chicken tomorrow—the Ladies' Aiders sent it with their farewell love." "Wasn't it a dandy day?"

"Well, it's all settled."

"Yes, we supposed it would be. Was the conference good? We read accounts of it every day, and acted stuck-up when it said nice things about you."

"We are to—"

"Ju-just a minute, father," interrupted Connie anxiously. "We don't care a snap where it is, honestly we don't. We're just crazy about it, wherever it is. We've got it all settled. You needn't be afraid to tell us."

"Afraid to tell us!" mocked the twins indignantly. "What kind of slave-drivers do you think we are?"

"Father knows we're all right. Go on, daddy, who's to be our next flock?"

"We haven't any, we——"

The girls' faces paled. "Haven't any? You mean—"

"I mean we're to stay in Mount Mark."

"Stay in— What?"

"Mount Mark. They—"

"They extended the limit," cried Connie, springing up.

"No," he denied, laughing. "They made me a presiding elder, and we're—"

"A presiding elder! Father! Honestly? They—"

"They ought to have made you a bishop," cried Carol loyally. "I've been expecting it all my life. That's where the next jump'll land you."

"I pity the next parsonage bunch," said Connie sympathetically.

"Why? There's nothing the matter with our church!"

"Oh, no, that isn't what I mean. But the next minister's family can't possibly come up to us, and so—"

The others broke her sentence with their laughter.

"Talk about me and my complexion!" gasped Carol, wiping her eyes. "I'm nothing to Connie and her family pride. Where will we live now, father?"

"We'll rent a house—any house we like."

"Rent! Mercy, father, doesn't the conference furnish the elders with houses? We can never afford to pay rent! Never!"

"Oh, we have a salary of twenty-five hundred a year now," he said, with apparent complacence, but careful to watch closely for the effect of this statement. It gratified him, too, much as he had expected. The girls stood stock-still and gazed at him, and then, with a violent struggle for self-composure Carol asked:

"Did you get any of it in advance? I need some new slippers."

So the packing was finished, a suitable house was found—modern, with reasonable rent—on Maple avenue where the oaks were most magnificent, and the parsonage family became just ordinary "folks," a parsonage household no longer.

Mr. Starr's new position necessitated long and frequent absences from home, and that was a drawback to the family comradeship. But the girls' pride in his advancement was so colossal, and their determination to live up to the dignity of the eldership was so deep-seated, that affairs ran on quite serenely in the new home.

One day this beautiful serenity was broken in upon in a most unpleasant way. Carol looked up from "De Senectute" and flung out her arms in an all-relieving yawn. Then she looked at her aunt, asleep on the couch. She looked at Lark, who was aimlessly drawing feathers on the skeletons of birds in her biology text. She looked at Connie, sitting upright in her chair, a small book close to her face, alert, absorbed, oblivious to the world. Connie was wide awake, and Carol resented it.

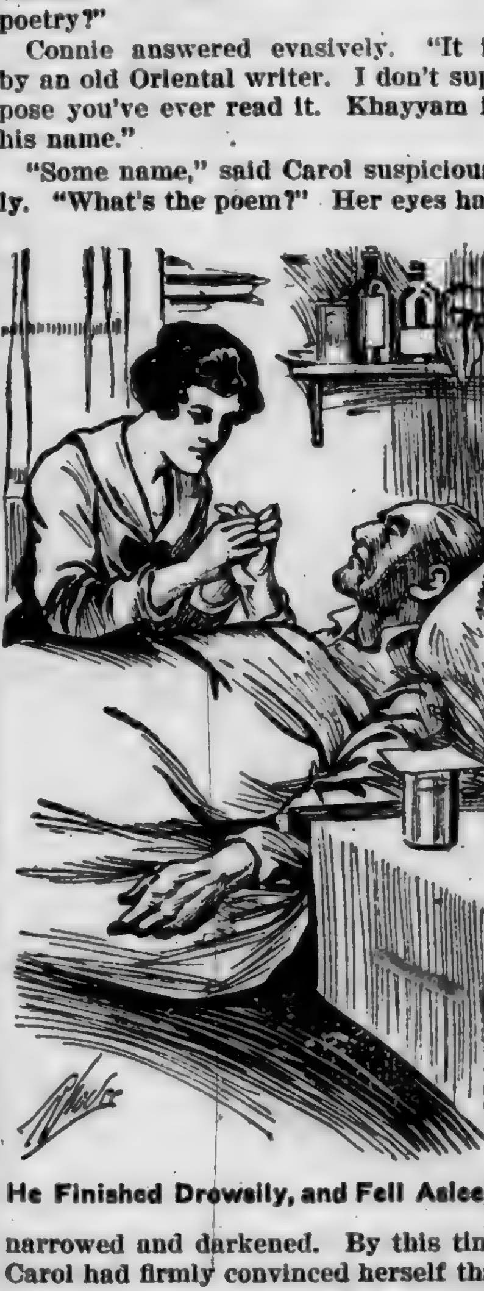
"What are you reading, Con?" She asked reproachfully.

Connie looked up, startled, and colored a little. "Oh—poetry," she stammered.

Carol was surprised. "Poetry," she echoed. "Poetry? What kind of poetry?"

Connie answered evasively. "It is by an old Oriental writer. I don't suppose you've ever read it. Khayyam is his name."

"Some name," said Carol suspiciously. "What's the poem?" Her eyes had narrowed and darkened. By this time Carol had firmly convinced herself that she was bringing Connie up—a belief which afforded lively amusement to self-conducting Connie.



He Finished Drowsily, and Fell Asleep.

"Why, it's 'The Rubaiyat.' It's—"

"'The Rubaiyat!'" Carol frowned. Lark looked up from the skeletons with sudden interest. "'The Rubaiyat?' By Khayyam? Isn't that the old fellow who didn't believe in God, and heaven, and such things—you know what I mean—the man who didn't believe anything, and wrote about it? Let me see it. I've never read it myself, but I've heard about it." Carol turned the pages with critical disapproving eyes.

"I don't believe it, you know," Connie said coolly. "I'm only reading it. How can I know whether it's trash or not, unless I read it? I—"

"Ministers' daughters are supposed to keep their fingers clear of the burning ends of matches," said Carol neatly. "We can't handle them without getting scorched, or blackened, at least. Prudence says so."

"Prudence," said Connie gravely, "is a dear sweet thing, but she's awfully old-fashioned, Carol; you know that."

Carol and Lark were speechless. They would as soon have dreamed of questioning the catechism as Prudence's perfection.

"She's narrow. She's a darling, of course, but she isn't up-to-date. I want to know what folks are talking about. I don't believe this poem. I'm a Christian. But I want to know what other folks think about me and what I believe. That's all. Prudence is fine, but I know a good deal more about some things than Prudence will know when she's a thousand years old."

The twins still sat silent.

"Of course, some folks wouldn't approve of parsonage girls reading things like this. But I approve of it. I want to know why I disagree with this poetry, and I can't until I know where we disagree. It's beautiful, Carol, really. It's kind of sad. It makes me want to cry. It's—"

"I've a big notion to tell papa on you," said Carol soberly and sadly.

Connie rose at once.

"I'm going to tell papa myself."

Carol moved uneasily in her chair. "Oh, let it go this time. I—I just mentioned it to relieve my feelings. I won't tell yet. I'll talk it over with you again. I'll have to think it over first."

"I think I'd rather tell him," insisted Connie.

Carol looked worried, but she knew Connie would do as she said. So she got up nervously and went with her. She would have to see it through now, of course. Connie walked silently up the stairs, with Carol following meekly behind, and rapped at her father's door. Then she entered, and Carol, in a hushed sort of way, closed the door behind them.

"I'm reading this, father. Any objections?" Connie faced him calmly, and handed him the little book.

He examined it gravely, his brows contracting, a sudden wrinkling at the corners of his lips that might have meant laughter, or disapproval, or anything.

"I thought a parsonage girl should not read it," Carol said bravely. "I've never read it myself, but I've heard about it, and parsonage girls ought to read parsonage things. Prudence says so. But—"

"But I want to know what other folks think about what I believe," said Connie. "So I'm reading it."

"What do you think of it?" he asked quietly, and he looked very strangely at his baby daughter. It was a crisis, and he must be very careful.

"I think it is beautiful," Connie said softly, and her lips drooped a little, and a wistful pathos crept into her voice. "It seems so sad. I keep wishing I could cry about it. Part of it I don't understand very well."

He held out a hand to Connie, and she put her own in it confidently. Carol, too, came and stood close behind him.

"Yes," he said, "it is beautiful, Connie, and it is very terrible. We can't understand it fully because we can't feel what he felt. He looked thoughtfully at the girls. "He was a marvelous man, that Khayyam—years ahead of his people, and his time. He was big enough to see the idiocy of the heathen ideas of God, he was beyond them, he spurned them. But he was not quite big enough to reach out, alone, and get hold of our kind of a God. It is a wonderful poem. It shows the weakness, the helplessness of a gifted man who has nothing to cling to. I think it will do you good to read it, Connie. Read it again and again, and thank God, my child, that though you are only a girl, you have the very thing this man, this genius, was craving. We admire his talent, but we pity his weakness. You will feel sorry for him. You read it, too, Carol. You'll like it. We can't understand it, as I say, because we are so sure of our God, that we can't feel what he felt, having nothing. Of course it makes you want to cry, Connie. It is the saddest poem in the world."

The Middlemen.

A farmer raised a peck of wheat beside the River Dee; a boarder ate a wheated loaf 'way down in Tennessee; the loaf the boarder fed upon cost half as much and more as did the farmer's peck of wheat a month or so before. "Now, why is this," the boarder raved, "they hold me up on bread?" "And why is wheat so bloomin' cheap?" the plodding farmer said.

A chap beyond the Rocky ridge raised 20 pounds of limes; another one in old New York was kicking on the times, for he had downed a glass of "ade," and, poor forlorn galoot, had paid one-half the market price of 20 pounds of fruit. "Now, why is this, they soak me thus for this wee sip of 'ade'?" "And why," exclaimed the orchard man, "am I so poorly paid."

Now hold your horses steady there, you man beside the Dee; go easy there, you hungry chap in sunny Tennessee; restrain yourself, you orchard man, forbear this angry talk, and you beside the soda fount in Little Old Noo Yawk, remember this: Our food and drink, no matter where and when, must also be the food and drink of thirty middlemen.—Utica Globe.

Endurance of Reindeers.

The reindeer is said to be able to endure more fatigue than any other draft animal except the camel. It has been known to pull 200 pounds 16 miles an hour for 12 hours.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 10

JESUS CHOOSES THE TWELVE.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 3:7-35.

GOLDEN TEXT—And he ordained twelve, that they should be with him, and that he might send them forth to preach.—Mark 3:14.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 10:1-4; Luke 6:12-16; John 15:15-27; Matt. 5:13-16; 16:24-25; John 17:6-26; II Tim. 4:7-8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus chooses twelve helpers.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The twelve and what we know about them.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—What it means to be a disciple of Jesus.

No man can alone accomplish any great task. Every great leader has been blessed by one or more equally great helpers. Luther had his Melancthon; Wesley, his brother Charles, Whitfield and others; Moody had Whittle, Bliss, Sankey, Towner and more. These leaders but followed the example of our Lord. Jesus' ministry made him much observed and greatly multiplied his duties and burdens. When, therefore, he chose these disciples, he desired not only to obtain help and to begin to teach those who were to take his place, but, like every other act, he desired to teach a lesson to those who were so carefully observing him. In verse 14 we are told that he chose twelve, which was a significant number, corresponding to the twelve tribes, and at once confirmed his assumption to the Messiahship and meant that the wondrous prophesies were being fulfilled. It also served to stimulate those upon whom the choice fell. Jesus, as we know from other passages, retired to the mountains to pray. The call came from on high (v. 13), and those called "went up" to him for preparation and for qualification. The call is a purposeful one, for it is not enough to go up; we must also go down and out, hence these are "sent" (vv. 14, 15). Only those who are authorized, however, are sent. Those whom Jesus sent out were to found a new kingdom and to do a greater work than merely to judge the people, because they were not only to judge results, but they were to change results by altering causes; hence they had power over demons, even as the Master, for evil has no rights. The source of their power is to be Jesus, for he is to be with them, our own protection as well (Matt. 28:20); and their power is to grow with its usage, for we learn by doing. These men were originally united, not by a creed but by an ideal; not by a doctrine or teaching, but by actions; not by a subscription to a confession. At once they met with conflict. First of all by a blasphemous unbelief. The Holy Ghost is no more holy than Jesus; but, if we slander him in his veiled condition and before his unfinished work, great shall be the penalty. Those who hate God shut out the light. Secondly, by a conflict with misdirected zeal. There were those about Jesus who watched over him, whereas rather they should have had him watching over them (v. 21). On the other hand, the scribes accused him of being possessed of devils. They attributed to the devil the work that the Holy Spirit and Son were doing. What a strange picture! Friends seeking to restrain, enemies accusing and relatives interposing, yet nothing can stop the onward march of the kingdom of God. Luke tells us that these twelve were selected from among the rest of the disciples. They were to have a greater nearness and more extended authority and, of course, greater testings than the others who were disciples or "learners." These disciples are to be the light of the world. The Christian, "who is the salt of the earth," loses his identity and will lose his saltness and become like the world, if he keeps not near unto Christ. As light is a good thing to preserve, purify and to cleanse, so are the Christians, yet there is a greater thing, when we energize, direct and believe. This is what the apostles were to do. The aggressive Peter and the other "Son of Thunder," the reflective, cautious Thomas, these were the men who were sent forth as public heralds (John 1:36.) Some they are to win by personal solicitation (James 1:41). Others by public proclamation (Acts 2:39-41.) Men are saved through men, and those whom he sends forth are those who have first learned to follow. Their work is made permanent only as "they abide in him." God wants the hearing ear, the believing heart and the confessing mouth (Rom. 10:14). The one who would preach Jesus and have power in his name must first of all "be with him," that is, he must enjoy a deep, abiding, victorious life of fellowship with Jesus. Jesus gave directions to those he sent out, first to preach; second, to heal illness; third, to cast out demons.

Our mission is to both body and soul, but Christ puts the spiritual needs first (vv. 14, 15; see Matt. 10:7, 8.) The difficulty with many healers of today is that they invert this order. Those whom Jesus sends out are to offer his kingdom to men and not command men to receive it. Their work will bring variance upon the earth, even among those in the same family; but those who will not go are not "worthy of me." Jesus saw plainly that the victories of his kingdom were often hindered rather than helped by the presence of great crowds (v. 12)

Had Kidney Trouble From Childhood and Was Discouraged. Doan's, However, Brought Health and Strength.

Mrs. C. Anderson, 4104 W. 22nd St., Chicago, Ill., says: "I had kidney trouble from childhood and three years ago a severe spell developed. If I stooped, a terrible pain took me in the small of my back, and for several minutes I couldn't straighten. Often at night the pain in my back was so bad I had to prop myself up with a pillow. It seemed as if my back would break. Watery sacs formed under my eyes and my feet were so swollen I had to wear slippers. Sudden dizzy spells came on and pains in my head drove me almost frantic.

Mrs. Anderson

"I felt tired and weak and had hardly enough ambition to move. Nothing seemed to help me and I was discouraged until I commenced taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me completely and my health has been of the best ever since. Doan's surely deserves my endorsement." Sworn to before me,

An Opportunity For Tractor Owners.

International Havester Company will hold Tractor School at Hicksville and Auburn. Hicksville School, Tuesday only, Feb. 12th. at Town Hall. Auburn School, Wednesday and Thursday, Feb. 13—14 at the Commercial Club.

These Schools will be absolutely free to all who care to attend, whether they are tractor owners or not. Nothing will be offered for sale and there will be no selling talks. A course of instruction in how a tractor works and how to keep it working will be strictly adhered to.

The instructors are practical tractor and engine men who have been given special training for this work. Their lectures and talks are laid out on large charts, illustrated with clear diagrams and described in simple terms. They will take up the reasons why an engine operates, what takes place within the cylinders of an engine, symptoms that indicate approaching trouble, how to look for trouble and not overlook it, how to get the best possible service from a tractor or engine, new uses for tractors and scores of other subjects of vital importance to those interested in power farming.

Those who attend will be encouraged to ask questions on any subject in connection with tractors or engines. These questions will be answered at each school session or by letter.

To be sure that everyone who attends carries home with him every point brought out, a book containing all of the subjects discussed will be given away This book should be in the library of every engine or tractor owner. Every farmer who is at all interested in power farming should attend, and if he owns a tractor he should bring with him the man who operates it. Plan now to be present at every session for the men who do this will get the most benefit out of it.

The Hicksville School will last one day only due to fuel orders. The Auburn School will last two days. And the subjects discussed on the second day will be entirely different than those discussed the first day. Each school will open promptly at 8:00 in the morning and close at 4:00 in the afternoon.

NEWVILLE

The Red Cross meets on Tuesday afternoon of each week.

Dale McNabb and family, of Harlan, are guests of relatives here.

The W. C. T. T. met with Mrs. Jessie Fusselman, last Friday afternoon.

Rev. Hively, wife and son Orville, visited relatives at Columbia City, last week.

Sam Wyatt and family were Sunday dinner guests of Elmer Wyatt and wife.

Grandma Dean has not been in her usual good health recently, but is reported better at present.

The Ladies Aid will meet at the sewing room, Wednesday of next week, to sew all day, bringing their lunch with them.

The quarantine was lifted from the Tarney home about 2 weeks ago, all having recovered. No other cases are reported.

Services have been poorly attended for a few Sundays at both churches on account of the deep snow banks and the bad weather in general.

Ten men went to the Henry Webster woods, last Tuesday, with shovels and dug a road through so that teams could get in to haul wood to several families in Newville. Some were nearly out of fuel.

There will be a lot of changing done here in the near future; Sam Tomlinson and Floyd Beree are going on the Chas. R. Scoville farm, and Oren Hook will be a tenant on the DeKalb Co. farm. All expect to make the change before spring work commences.

A Silver Medal Contest was held Sunday evening at the U. B. church under the direction of Mrs. Stella McNabb, the W. C. T. U. Medal Contest Superintendent. The contestants were the Misses Bertha Platter, Lileth Yeiser, Fern Tarney and Myrtle Jennings; the medal being awarded to Miss Jennings. The judges were Mrs. Nettie Gloy, Mrs. Hively and Miss Laura Brunson. Mrs. Clara Platter presented the medal. Rev. Hively gave a short talk which was highly appreciated. The house was only about half filled owing to the disagreeable weather.

Coal vs. Beer

"It takes almost a pound of coal to produce a pint of beer," asserts E. H. Leach, assistant State Fuel Administrator of Ohio.

"If the Lusitania were now floating the seas, the coal used annually in the manufacture of beer in this country would furnish fuel for 726 round trips for the giant ship and transport 28,595,000 tons of suppli's to the Allies.

"Coal used in the manufacture of beer in Ohio alone would furnish more than 60 round trips and carry nearly 2,000,000 tons of supplies a year to the Allies.

It requires 180,000 cars, or 3,000 trains a day, to move the raw material to the breweries.

"We have heard a great deal about the grain in the beer and about the sugar in the beer, but we have heard little about the coal in the beer. Coal is one of the chief ingredients. It takes almost a pound of coal to produce a pint of beer.

Issuing Food Cards.

Flour and sugar will be put on a card basis in DeKalb county on Saturday morning, February 16. Food Administrator Herman L. Brown has sent out instructions to his deputies in the fifteen townships of DeKalb county to this effect.

Beginning Saturday each person desiring either flour or sugar must present a card on which spaces are alloted for a record of each purchase, the grocer entering the amount disposed of at the time he sells either sugar or flour. Persons must have one of these cards before they can secure either sugar or flour.

The card has a place for the name of the head of the family, the township in which he resides, the number in the family including the regular boarders, the number of pounds of sugar you are entitled to each month (three for each person) and the number of pounds of flour you require each month.

The cards require a statement being made as to the amount of sugar on hand and all persons are warned not to make a false statement, as grocers are to report all violations.

G, M. Barney, director for Concord township, and J. W. Henderson, of Spencer township, are now busy issuing the cards. Some cards will be left at Concord at Baker's Store for those who will be unable to get into town.

Jesse Provines, of Jackson township, notified THE NEWS that he would place the food cards at the School Houses so the people could secure them before Saturday.

We wish to advise the public in general that our milling operations are directed by the United States Food Administration and that we will adhere to the rules strictly as nearly as we are able to understand them.

It may seem ruthless but we are in a ruthless war, one such as the world has never known, and we are facing a cricis that is going to require the careful consideration of every rational American. Newville Chautauqua Postponed.

The officers and others interested in the chautauqua, which has been an annual event at the Newville U. B. Church, met at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Guy Platter, Wednesday evening of last week, and reached the conclusion to dispense with the usual program for this year. The chautauqua has been exceedingly popular in past years, but our nation being at war and peoples minds being occupied with the momentous happenings of these days, influenced those present to believe that it would be best to forego the pleasure of the annual event.

The organization will be maintained and should the war close the usual program could be given next fall. The whole country surrounding has been benefitted by these chautauqua meetings and even though one year is to be skipped, the interest will not be allowed to die out and we can only trust that in 1919 the great conflict will have ceased and that this educational work will be again taken up.

A Word in Regard to the Coal Situation.

We have strict orders from the Fuel Administrator that we are not allowed to sell coal to people outside of St. Joe, Ind., unless they are unable to get wood, either from their own farms, or to buy same. Before we can then sell them we must have a written order from the Town Fuel Administrator which will only be given in severe needy cases. The coal situation in St. Joe is not good, and at present we have none on hand but we are trying very hard as are also the County and Town Fuel Administrators to get more coal for St. Joe. In times like these we must all work together, co-operation in all things will help us win the fight we are fighting for, remember co-operation by all, that is the way to do your bit. One more word to you all. Where-ever you can possibly get a load of wood to burn, do so. Every load of wood that comes to St. Joe. HELPS UNCLE SAM JUST THAT MUCH MORE.

A TRULY VALENTINE!

by Louise
Oliver

LUELLA tramped down to the mail box through snow that had drifted as high as her knees. The postman was late. This was her third trip and it was almost dark. There was good reason for the lateness, Luella knew, for it was Valentine day and more than likely the dozens of pink and blue sentiments he left along his route had caused the delay.

Her own heart was beating hard, not so much with the delicious joy of anticipation—for she hardly expected a valentine from anybody—as with excitement. What if, after all, somebody had thought of her!

As she drew near to the box she stopped for an instant. What if it was empty? Oh, well, she was used to not getting things, and life wouldn't be any different than before. She went on down to the box, lifted the lid and peeked in.

"Oh!" Luella's gray eyes widened with wonder. For there in the box lay another, cubical in shape, violet in color and tied with silver cord. "Oh!" she said again, standing on her tiptoes to get a better view.

Name and Address Were Hers.

She touched it cautiously lest it vanish. "It's a mistake. I know. No one in the world would send me something like that." She thought of all the people she knew and made a rapid retrospection of the one stationer's shop in town and its possibilities in the way of sentimental souvenirs. There was no one she could think of who would send her anything, and nothing that she could remember that would come in a box like that. And Mr. Marks, she knew, had never seen silver string. He used red and white cord that looked like peppermint candy and since paper was so high he had even charged extra for envelopes.

She laid back the lid of the letter box and took the violet box tenderly in both hands as she would have lifted a sick baby. Yes, the name and address were hers. She had received a valentine.

She laid her cheek against its damp cold top, where the snowflakes were already doing their best to obliterate the address. "You darling," she whispered. "You dear." Then she folded it carefully under her shawl and turned back to the house.

"Well," said Miss Mathilda, looking up from the stove where she was frying eggs for their supper, "was he here?"

Luella shut the door, still keeping her treasure out of sight. "Yes," she answered slowly. Then producing the box, "He left this."

"Hm! Who's it for?"

"Me."

"Who from?"

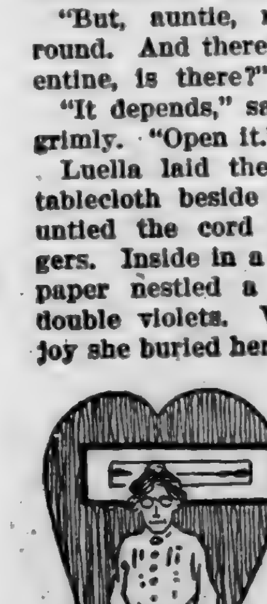
"I don't know."

"If I catch any of these young sillies hangin' round after you, I'll get rid of them in short order."

"But, auntie, no one is hanging round. And there's no harm in a valentine, is there?"

"It depends," said the older woman grimly. "Open it."

Luella laid the box on the white tablecloth beside her own plate and untied the cord with trembling fingers. Inside in a nest of damp tissue paper nestled a gorgeous bunch of double violets. With a little cry of joy she buried her face in the fragrant mass. "Oh, Aunt Mathilda, aren't they beautiful?"



Told Him to Mind His Own Business.

"I suppose they're from that young fellow in New York," examining the wrapper for the postmark. "Yes, I thought so—New York!"

Luella started and her face went crimson.

"He neen't keep up that gratitude business forever!" her aunt went on. "It was all right after he got hurt in his automobile and we nursed him back to life for him to write a couple of times. But I answered both letters and told him to mind his own business. That should have been an end to it. I know this sinful old world and when I was told to take care of you, I promised to do it and I have. The idea! He must be away up on the top of society in New York and you a quiet little mouse of a girl away off here in the country. Why, you two haven't got any more in common than a weasel and a settin' hen. He'll marry some rich girl of his own kind no matter what he says, and he needn't be makin' eyes at you. Violets indeed! Is there any card or letter or anything?"

"No, auntie!" Luella's lips trembled guiltily as she said it, for when she had buried her face in the flowers, she had noticed a little white card down among the leaves. But her aunt's words hurt fearfully and she was afraid she couldn't stand any more.

"I'll put them in water on the sitting-room table," said Luella, filling a bowl and going into the other room. She slipped out the card and read. "Dear little girl, I love you. Bob."

Her heart hammering so she was afraid her aunt would hear it, and her face aflame with suppressed excitement, she went back and made an attempt to eat her supper.

But as the evening wore on, her aunt's words got in their effect. "He'll marry some rich girl of his own class." It was true, of course. And the card was only a valentine and it didn't mean anything. He was probably sending similar souvenirs with like sentiments to all the girls he knew.

Didn't Mean Anything.

So she went to bed and cried herself to sleep with the card tucked under her pillow, and dreamed that Bob was flying out of sight in a silver airship with violet wings and waving good-by to a crowd of girls, all of whom, when she looked more closely, had her own features.

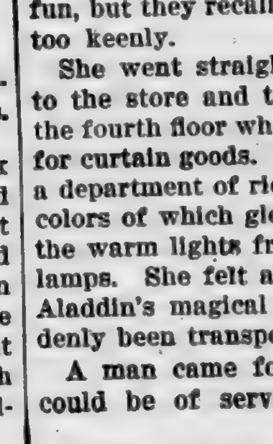
She was wakened by the aunt calling, "Luella, oh, Luella. Do you think you could be ready to make the eight o'clock train? I've been thinking I could get those new curtains made if I had the stuff today. You could be back by noon."

"All right, auntie, I'll go!" Luella began dressing rapidly. The touch of the card had brought back everything and she was glad of a chance to get away.

She ate her breakfast and passed the sitting-room without once glancing in at the violets. Perhaps she was foolish to feel so about a valentine sent in fun, but they recalled her aunt's words too keenly.

She went straight from the station to the store and took the elevator to the fourth floor where she was directed for curtain goods. She walked through a department of rich oriental rugs, the colors of which glowed wonderfully in the warm lights from skillfully placed lamps. She felt as if she had rubbed Aladdin's magical lamp and had suddenly been transported to the Orient.

A man came forward to ask if he could be of service and Luella, reluctantly turning her eyes away from the scene, gave a little cry, "Bob!"



"They Can Wait, and I Can't."

"Luella! It was dear of you to come! Did you get my note?"

"Yes—but I—I — Will you please tell me where the curtain goods is? Aunt Mathilda sent me in to buy some."

There was a high-backed bench in a secluded corner concealed by palms. He drew her toward it. they can wait, dear, and I can't. Come and sit down and tell me you care enough to marry me, dear! When you save anyone's life, you have to pay the penalty by marrying him, you know."

"Aren't you just grateful?" she stammered.

"Perhaps!" he smiled.

"And don't you think you ought to marry a society girl?"

"I don't know anything about society and don't want to. I want you, that's all."

"Oh, Bob!" cried Luella happily. "Then it was a really truly valentine."

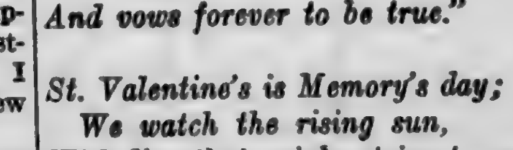
Memory's Day.

St. Valentine's is Memory's day
For some of us who hold
A bit of satin put away
Engraved in tarnished gold.
"From one who gives his heart to you
And vows forever to be true."

St. Valentine's is Memory's day;
We watch the rising sun,
With lips that vainly strive to pray
Their Lord, "Thy will be done."
Love was so sweet, so brief its state,
And it is hard, so hard, to wait.

St. Valentine's is Memory's day,
Yet, like to that above,
Is blooming by an earthly way,
A long-remembered love.
And tender are the eyes that shine
Tear-gemmed, above a valentine.



INDIANA STATE NEWS

Noblesville.—A suit was filed in court to test the constitutionality of the act passed by the legislature several years ago to create a state highway commission. Robert House, a wealthy farmer of this county, appears in the case as the plaintiff and State Treasurer U. Z. McMurtrie, State Auditor Otto Krause, members of the state highway commission, the local board of county commissioners and the members of the local county council are made defendants. The court is also asked to enjoin all of the defendants from paying out any money for the construction of the proposed highways as planned by the commission until the case is finally decided.

Lafayette.—The fourth annual road school at Purdue university was given over to a discussion of the maintenance of concrete, brick and gravel roads, relation of highway construction to military operations and fiscal regulations governing highway work. Gravel roads were also discussed and the fact was emphasized that remarkable and profitable results are obtainable from a road of this material. Regarding macadam roads, W. S. Moore, chief engineer of the Indiana highway commission, made plain the value of a good grade of stone for the construction of such highway. Indiana has 73,000 miles of road, 31,000 of which are improved, or 42.5 per cent, and it is the second state in the Union when regarded on a per cent basis.

Indianapolis.—Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, announced that if it had not been for the manufacture of Indiana beet sugar at a factory in Decatur, the state, at this time would have been practically without sugar. The food administrator said a total of 13,000,000 pounds of beet sugar was produced in Indiana last year, and that the increase of the acreage necessary in this state next year must be met by patriotic farmers, if a dangerous shortage is not to exist next year. Barnard has sent out an appeal to the farmers, urging them to increase the sugar beet acreage, following a similar appeal for the stimulation of the raising of sugar beets by the federal food administration.

Indianapolis.—The first officers' school, for officers of the New Indiana state militia, in Indianapolis, was held in the office of Harry B. Smith, adjutant general, at the state house, and every officer of the militia in Indianapolis and some from other points in the state, attended. Maj. Louden Harriman, instructor, gave an extended discussion of "first principles" of officers' work. General Smith announced that equipment for the companies of the state, in the matter of guns and ammunition has arrived, and that enough guns to supply approximately one-fourth of each company will be issued at once for purposes of instruction.

Chicago.—Kenesaw M. Landis has been nominated for the presidency of the Indiana Society of Chicago; William A. Heath, Edwin M. Allen, Charles W. McGuire, Edwin W. Landman and Frank S. Cunningham, vice presidents; Edward M. Holloway, secretary; Lucius Teter, treasurer; Will J. Davis, Hoyt King and Ralph A. Bond, three-year-term trustees, in a ticket made public by the recently elected nominating committee of the society. The nominating committee is composed of John C. Shaffer, John T. McCutcheon, George Ade, Wilbur D. Nesbit, William B. Austin, George T. Buckingham and Edward Rector.

Terre Haute.—Frank Carmack, special judge, in circuit court here, granted a temporary restraining order enjoining the school board from permitting Henry F. Schmidt, resigned member of the board, or any other person to begin a term this year. The petition was filed by Charles A. Haupt, third highest in the race for trustee, who charges there is a conspiracy among members of the board to keep him from serving. A motion for a change of venue has been filed by the school board.

Evansville.—The Indiana Antituberculosis society elected officers as follows: Dr. R. S. Sensenick of South Bend, president; Mrs. James P. Goodrich Indianapolis, vice president; Mrs. Ella B. Kehrer, Anderson, secretary, and James W. Lilly, treasurer. The honorary vice presidents chosen are Mrs. A. F. Bacon, Evansville; James Royce, Terre Haute; Prof. Louis Dorn, Fort Wayne, and Will Irwin, Columbus.

Lafayette.—Under the auspices of the Indiana Corn Growers' association, an essay contest will be held on "seed corn testing" during February in Indiana schools, Prof. G. I. Christie, the secretary, has announced. The contest will be open to all boys of club age, ten to eighteen years, and the winner will be awarded a gold medal. About half of Indiana's counties already have started plans for the contest.

Indianapolis.—Assessors never get a chance at hundreds of millions of dollars of taxables in Indiana, according to statistics just completed in the office of the state board of tax commissioners. Figuring only from the total amount of ordinary bonds, building and loan stock and mortgage exemptions, the board arrived at an estimate for this year of $198,465,476 tax-exempt property, with no attempt to estimate the amount of taxable money wrapped up in Liberty bonds, property held by tax-exempt organizations and the like. The board arrived at its estimate on the latest available figures of tax-exempt property and found as follows: Gravel road bonds, January 1, 1917, $42,583,501; city bonds, January 1, 1916, $9,773,435; town bonds, January 1, 1916, $842,224; county bonds, January 1, 1916, $11,131,111; mortgage exemptions, January 1, 1918, $74,135,205. Besides this, the board believes that $60,000,000 of the total assets of the building and loan associations, which amounts to $72,294,256, never finds its way to the tax duplicates.

Indianapolis.—Greater conservation of wheat, meat, fats and sugar has to be acomplished immediately if the people of the United States would do their part to win the war, according to Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, who announced a new "eatless" program for Indiana. While the new program follows closely on the heels of the announcement just made public in Washington by National Food Administrator Hoover, it is known that Doctor Barnard's statement was promulgated as a result of a visit he paid to Mr. Hoover not more than two weeks ago, when the question whether the available wheat supply of the nation would be sufficient to meet the needs of the people until the 1918 crop could be harvested, was facing food administrators in every state of the Union.

Indianapolis.—Announcement of the call for the convention of the national congress of mothers and parent-teachers' associations, to be held in Atlantic City, February 26 to March 2, in connection with the meeting of the National Educational association, was made here. The meeting was called two months earlier than planned on account of some special war work the congress is contemplating. Mrs. Frederick Schoff of Philadelphia is the national president.

Hammond.—Big landowners in the Kankakee river marsh district have decided that money intended to be used for the construction of the million-dollar Singleton drainage system, is needed to buy Liberty bonds. The ditch will not be built until after the war, it was announced here. The drainage system would affect the entire Kankakee river mash lands owned by persons in many states. Work on the system was to have started in March.

Columbus.—Figures compiled in the office of the Bartholomew county auditor show that $2,904.13 was paid out during 1917 to persons whose live stock or poultry was killed by dogs. The amount is larger than it was for the previous year. It is believed that Bartholomew county strikes an average with reference to live stock and poultry killed by dogs and on this basis the expense throughout the state would be more than $175,000.

Evansville.—By the ruling of Fred M. Hostetter, judge of the Vanderburg superior court, Ele Stansbury, attorney general of Indiana, will not be a defendant in the cases of the F. W. Cook Brewing company, the Evansville Brewing association and Henry Gergenrath, filed here recently to test the validity of the statewide prohibition law that is scheduled to go into effect on April 2 next.

Indianapolis.—A greater centralization of control will mark the third Liberty loan campaign which is expected to open some time in March. Will H. Wade, manager of the bond department of the Fletcher American National bank, who conducted the first two campaigns as state chairman, will be in full charge of the third campaign as vice director for the state of Indiana.

Indianapolis. — Governor Goodrich has announced the appointment of Mrs. Arthur T. Cox of East Chicago as a state factory inspector, to have jurisdiction over woman workers in factories of Indiana. She will work in conjunction with the department of factory inspection of the industrial board of Indiana, at the head of which is John J. Walsh, state factory inspector.

Fort Wayne.—The first unidentified body to be turned over to the State Medical college pursuant to the new law, stipulating such disposal of the bodies of unidentified dead in Indiana, is that of a man about fifty years old, who died at St. Joseph's hospital without revealing his name or giving any information as to the whereabouts of relatives or friends.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana statehouse from now on will be closed on heatless Mondays, at least until the present coal shortage is relieved, according to an announcement by Otto L. Krauss, auditor of state and a member of the state board of buildings and property.

Aircraft Standardized.

It is less than a score of years since the first heavier-than-air machine successfully carried a passenger into the air. It is less than 15 years since the art of controlling such a craft was imparted by the inventor to another, yet today aircraft have been standardized and factories turn them out with the ease that motorcar builders produce their product.

Great Rubber Producer.

The Malay peninsula is the largest rubber-producing and rubber-exporting country in the world. Ten years ago the production was small, as compared with that of Brazil, which was then the principal source of supply. Its advent to first place as a rubber-producing country is due to its favorable climatic and soil conditions.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 17

JESUS TEACHING FIVE PARABLES —FOUR KINDS OF GROUND.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 4:1-20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Take heed therefore how ye hear.—Luke 8:18.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 13:1-30; 36-43.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus telling a story about sowing seed.

PRIMARY MEMORY VERSE—Be ye doers of the word.—James 1:22.

Jesus tells us plainly why he taught so much by means of parables (Matt. 13:10-13). The truth had to be taught; hence the parable, that those to whom it was given to know the messages of the kingdom, those who sought it, might know and understand, and that to the others it might be hidden (Mark 4:11, 12). Like all his parables, Jesus draws his pictures from the common experiences of life—the field, the home, etc. Paul draws his illustrations chiefly from the city, the army, the market. In studying this lesson we must turn to the parallel account as given by Luke and Matthew to get the full and complete picture.

What is the seed? Luke says that Jesus told his disciples that the seed was the Word of God (Luke 18:11). We get the same thought in verse fourteen of the lesson. A great deal is being made today of seed selection, Some wonderful results have been obtained. How much more important for those of us who deal with immortal souls that we select the best seed, i. e., the Word of God.

The second consideration is the sower (v. 4). Notice he went forth not to "soar," not is it recorded that he was "sore" because the people did not all receive the seed alike. He did not have a grouch; he did not enter into his work that he might receive the adulation of men (Matt. 6:2). It is, however, the "soil" that seems to be most emphasized in both the direct teaching and also the explanation of the parable. There are four kinds of soil. The manner by which the seed came into contact with each kind of soil is significant. Some fell "by" the wayside; the path was well trodden; the ground was preoccupied; e. g., it was used for other purposes than to yield a harvest; it was hard to be broken, and hence it was an easy matter for the birds of the air (v. 15) to come and pluck it away. We need to remember that if men receive with meekness the implanted word, there will, of course, be no such opportunity for the evil one. The trouble in this case was that the Word was not implanted. Thus it is that one-fourth of the seed is lost. The result is a deplorable one as we see from Heb. 2:1-4. Is the soil of our life so hard that God must drive the plowshare clean through it ere there is a chance for the seed to take root? (Ps. 129:3).

The next fell "on" the rocky ground. The first is a picture of the hardened, and this is a picture of the superficial hearer. For a time they did run well. They even received the Word with gladness (v. 16), but they had no stability because they had no root. They were superficial. There was no chance for the seed to get a real grip on their lives. The earth yields its increase though we do not understand. So God will add his 95 per cent to our 5 per cent. The oak tree comes from small seed.

In the third place Jesus speaks of the seed that fell "among" the thorns. Here is the worldly soil. It is not so much the character of the soil, it is the character of that which already occupied the soil ere the sower sowed the seed. The cares of this world, the deceitfulness of riches and "other things" had so entered in that the good seed never had a chance in the soil of the human heart. It was choked and yielded no fruit. There was no real grip of the will, no whole-hearted surrender. The cares of life that keep the housewife or the business man; the deceitfulness of riches that snare men and choke the word which at one time gave such promise in their lives; the lusts and other things which the evil one knows so well how to use keep us from the Word, for Satan knows that by it we are to be saved (Luke 18:12). Are we impulsive? Do we make vows soon forgotten, ties that soon fade away or fall beneath the temptations for lack of root? May God blast and turn up the subsoil of our hearts by strong convictions of sin, and so occupy the soil that there is no opportunity for other things.

We have thus seen three-fourths of the seed lost. Of the remaining fourth, that which fell "into" (R. V.) the good soil, not all yielded the same return. It all brought forth (v. 7); it all yielded; it all sprang up, but not all in the same ratio.

There are three distinguishing features of this last kind of hearers: (1) They hear the Word. These are the ones who appreciate its value and give good heed to its precepts. (2) They accept it e. g. they understand its teachings. They take it into good and honest hearts. (3) They hold it fast (Luke 8:15 R. V.) These are the ones of which martyrs are made.

Jesus was a great open-air preacher (vv. 1 2) and like all preachers he has various kinds of hearers the half-hearted hearer the shallow-hearted hearer. The way to reach the masses is to go where the masses are.

A KLONDIKE TO THE REAL FARMER

A Western Canada Crop Estimated at $12,000, Makes $19,000.

Messrs. Harris, formerly of Audubon, Iowa, wrote the "Audubon Advocate," expressing their satisfaction of things in Western Canada. They located at Makepeace, Alberta. They say there are those who make good, and those who fail. The former are those that land agents refer to when advertising their land. "But," continues the letter, "A great many of the farmers in this vicinity pay for their land with their first crop. A man near here bought a section of land in the year 1915 for $23 per acre. He broke 300 acres of the land during the summer of 1915. In the fall of 1916 he threshed 16,000 bushels of wheat, which paid for his land, all expenses and had a balance of $4,000. In the fall of 1917 he threshed nearly as much off the other half of the section. At the present time he would not take $50 per acre for his land.

"We have had five crops in Alberta. The two dry years (1914-1917) our wheat made 20 and 30 bushels to the acre respectively. In 1916 we raised 50 bushels of wheat to the acre on summer fallow. The best results are obtained by plowing or breaking in the summer, working it down in the fall so that it will retain the moisture. Thus farming one-half your ground each year.

"Persons owning land here and still living in the States should, if they don't feel themselves able to come up here and finance themselves until they could get their first crop, get some of their land broken and worked down in the fall before they come. The next spring they could come and put in the crop, fence and put up their buildings. This way they have to wait only one summer for their first crop.

"It is not advisable for a person to come here in the spring, break out land and put it in crop the first year, because the moisture is not in the ground and a failure is almost certain unless it is an exceptionally wet year.

"One of the boys from that locality, Mr. Peder M. Jensen came to Alberta last spring. He bought a 30-60 Rumely Oil-Pull engine on the 8th day of June, 1917. After that date he broke 1,100 acres of prairie sod for which he received an average of $5.00 per acre.

"Mr. Hansen from your community, was up here last fall with several prospective land buyers from that neighborhood. At that time he inquired the value of the crop on the section we were farming. We told him that it would probably make in the neighborhood of $12,000. This same crop when sold brought nearly $19,000. The most of it being sold when prices were low for the year."—Advertisement.

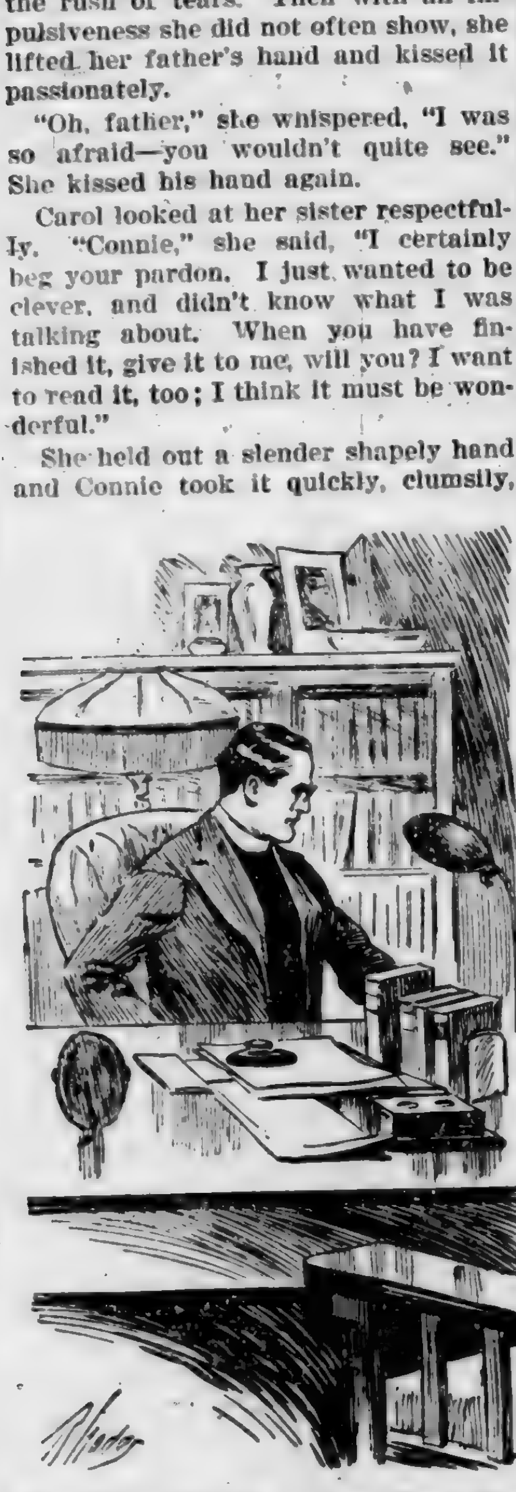
Connie's eyes were very bright. She winked hard a few times, choking back the rush of tears. Then with an impulsiveness she did not often show, she lifted her father's hand and kissed it passionately.

"Oh, father," she whispered, "I was so afraid—you wouldn't quite see." She kissed his hand again.

Carol looked at her sister respectfully. "Connie," she said, "I certainly beg your pardon. I just wanted to be clever, and didn't know what I was talking about. When you have finished it, give it to me, will you? I want to read it, too; I think it must be wonderful."

She held out a slender shapely hand and Connie took it quickly, clumsily, and the two girls turned toward the door.



Mr. Starr Sat for a Long Time Staring Straight Before Him Into Space.

"The danger in reading things," said Mr. Starr, and they paused to listen, "the danger is that we may find arguments we cannot answer; we may feel that we have been in the wrong, that what we read is right. There's the danger. Whenever you find anything like that, Connie, will you bring it to me? I think I can find the answer for you. If I don't know it, I will look until I come upon it. For we have been given an answer to every argument. You'll come to me, won't you?"

"Yes, father, I will—I know you'll find the answers."

After the door had closed behind them, Mr. Starr sat for a long time staring straight before him into space.

"The Connie problem," he said at last. And then, "I'll have to be better pals with her. Connie's going to be pretty fine, I believe."

CHAPTER XIII.

Boosting Connie.

Connie was past fifteen when she announced gravely one day, "I've changed my mind. I'm going to be an author."

"An author," scoffed Carol. "You! I thought you were going to get married and have eleven children."

"Oh, I've plenty of time for them yet, when I find a father for them. Yes, I'm going to be an author."

"Can you write?"

"Of course I can write."

"What makes you think you can write, Con?" inquired Lark, with genuine interest.

"I have already done it."

"Was it any good?"

"It was fine."

Carol and Lark smiled at each other.

"Yes," said Carol, "she has the long-haired instinct. I see it now. They always say it is fine. Was it a masterpiece, Connie?"

"Well, considering my youth and inexperience, it was," Connie admitted, her eyes sparkling appreciatively. Carol's wit was no longer lost upon her, at any rate.

"Bring it out. Let's see it. I've never met a masterpiece yet—except a dead one," said Lark.

"No—no," Connie backed up quickly. "You can't see it, and—don't ask any more about it. Has father gone out?"

The twins stared at her again. "What's the matter with you?"

"Nothing, but it's my story and you can't see it. That settles it. Was there any mail today?"

Afterward the twins talked it over together.

"What made her back down like that?" Carol wondered. "Just when we had her going."

"Why, didn't you catch onto that? She has sent it off to a magazine, of course, and she doesn't want us to know about it. I saw through it right away."

Carol looked at her twin with new interest. "Did you ever send 'em off?"

Lark flushed a little. "Yes, I did, and always got 'em back, too—worse [illegible] why I gave it up."

"What did you do with them when they came back?"

"Burned them. They always burn them. Connie'll get hers back, and she'll burn it, too," was the laconic answer.

"You wait until she can't eat a meal, and then you'll know she's got it back. Many's the time Prudence made me take medicine, just because I got a story back. Prudence thought it was tummyache. The symptoms are a good bit the same."

So Carol watched, and sure enough, there came a day when the bright light of hope in Connie's eyes gave way to the sober sadness of certainty. Her light had failed. And she couldn't eat her dinner.

Lark kicked Carol's foot under the table, and the two exchanged amused glances.

"Connie's not well," said Lark with a worried air. "She isn't eating a thing. You'd better give her a dose of that tonic, Aunt Grace."

"I'm not sick," the crushed young author protested. "I'm just not hungry."

"You can see for yourself," insisted Lark. "Look at her. Isn't she sick? Many's the long illness Prudence staved off for me by a dose of this magic tonic. You'd better make her take it, father. You can see she's sick."

"You'd better take a little, Connie," her father decided. "You don't look very well today."

And the aspiring young genius was obliged to swallow the bitter dose.

After the meal was over, Carol shadowed Connie closely. Sure enough, she headed straight for her own room, and Carol, close outside, heard a crumpling of paper. She opened the door quickly and went in. Connie turned, startled, a guilty red staining her pale face. Carol sat down sociably on the side of the bed, politely ignoring Connie's feeble attempt to keep the crumpled manuscript from her sight. She engaged her sister in a broad-minded and sweeping conversation, adroitly leading it up to the subject of literature. But Connie would not be inveigled into a confession. Then Carol took a wide leap.

"Did you get the story back?"

Connie gazed at her with an awe that was almost superstitious.

"I sure did," she said.

"Hard luck," said Carol, in a matter-of-fact voice. "Let's see it."

Connie hesitated, but finally passed it over.

"I'll take it to my own room and read it, if you don't mind."

More eagerly than she would have liked Connie to know, Carol curled herself upon the bed to read Connie's masterpiece. It was a simple story, but Connie did have a way of saying things, and—Carol laid it down in her lap and stared at it thoughtfully. Then she called Lark.

"Look here," she said abruptly. "Read this. It's the masterpiece."

She maintained a perfect silence while Lark perused the crumpled manuscript.

"Is it any good?" pursued Carol.

"Why, yes, I think it is. It's just like folks you know. They talk as we do, and—I'm surprised they didn't keep it. I've read 'em a whole lot worse!"

"Connie's disappointed," Carol said. "I think she needs a little boost. I believe she'll really get there if we kind of crowd her along for a while. We'll just copy it over, and send it out again."

"And if it comes back?"

"We'll send it again. We'll get the name of every magazine in the library, and give 'em all a chance to start the newest author on the rosy way."

"It'll take a lot of stamps."

"That's so. Well, I have half a dollar," admitted Carol reluctantly.

After that the weeks passed by. The twins saw finally the shadow of disappointment leaving Connie's face, and another expression of absorption take its place.

"She's started another one," Lark said, wise in her personal experience.

And when there came the starry rapt gaze once more, they knew that this one, too, had gone to meet its fate. But before the second blow fell, the twins gained their victory. They embraced each other feverishly, and kissed the precious check a hundred times, and insisted that Connie was the cleverest little darling that ever lived on earth. Then, when Connie, with their father and aunt, was sitting in unsuspecting quiet, they tripped in upon her.

"We have something to read to you," said Carol beaming paternally at Connie. "Listen attentively. Put down your paper, father. It's important. Go on Larkie."

"My dear Miss Starr," read Lark. "We are very much pleased with your story,"—Connie sprang suddenly from her chair—"your story, 'When the Rule Worked Backwards.' We are placing it in one of our early numbers, and shall be glad at any time to have the pleasure of examining more of your work. We inclose our check for forty-five dollars. Thanking you, and assuring you of the satisfaction with which we have read your story, I am,

"Very cordially yours,"—

"Tra, lalalalala!" sang the twins, dancing around the room, waving, one the letter, the other the check.

Connie's face was pale, and she caught her head with both hands, laughingly nervously. "I'm going round," she gasped. "Stop me."

Carol promptly pushed her down in a chair and sat upon her lap.

"Pretty good—eh, what?"

"Oh, Carol, don't say that, it sounds awful," cautioned Lark.

"What do you think about it, Connie? Pretty fair boost for a struggling young author, don't you think? Family, arise! The Chautauqua salute! We have arrived. Connie is an author. Forty-five dollars!"

"But however did you do it?" wondered Connie breathlessly.

"Why, we sent it out, and—"

"Just once?"

"Alas, no—we sent it seven times."

Connie laughed excitedly. "Oh, oh! —forty-five dollars! Think of it. Oh, father!"

"Where's the story," he asked, a little jealously. "Why didn't you let me look it over, Connie?"

"Oh, father, I—couldn't. I—I—I felt shy about it. You don't know how it is father, but—we want to keep them hidden. We don't get proud of them until they've been accepted."

"Forty-five dollars." Aunt Grace kissed her warmly. "And the letter is worth a hundred times more to us than that. And when we see the story—"

"We'll go thirds on the money, twins," said Connie.

The twins looked eager, but conscientious. "No," they said, "it's just a boost, you know. We can't take the money."

"Oh, you've got to go thirds. You ought to have it all. I would have burned it."

"No, Connie," said Carol, "we know you aren't worth devotion like ours, but we donate it just the same—it's gratis."

"All right," said Connie. "I know what you want, anyhow. Come on, auntie, let's go down town. I'm afraid that silver silk mull will be sold before we get there."

The twins fell upon her ecstatically. "Oh, Connie, you mustn't. We can't allow it. Oh, of course if you insist, dearest, only—" And then they rushed to find hats and gloves for their generous sister and devoted aunt.

The second story came back in due time, but with the boost still strong in her memory, and with the fifteen dollars in the bank, Connie bore it bravely and started it traveling once more. Most of the stories never did find a permanent lodging place, and Connie carried an old box to the attic for a repository for her mental fruits that couldn't make friends away from home. But she never despaired again.

And the twins, after their own manner, calmly took to themselves full credit for the career which they believed lay not far before her.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Millionaire's Son.

"If Jim doesn't ask for a date for the concert next week, Lark, let's snub him good."

"Oh, don't worry. He always asks. You have that same discussion every time there's anything going on. It's just a waste of time."

Mr. Starr looked up from his mail. "Complexion and boys with Carol, books and boys with Lark, Connie, if you begin that nonsense you'll get spanked. One member of my family shall rise above it, if I have to do it with force."

Connie blushed.

The twins broke into open derision.

"Connie! Oh, yes, Connie's above that nonsense."

"Connie's the worst in the family, father, only she's one of those reserved, supercilious souls who doesn't tell everything she knows."

"'Nonsense.' I wish father could have heard Lee Hanson last night. It would have been a revelation to him. 'Aw, go on, Connie, give us a kiss.'"

Connie caught her lips between her teeth. Her face was scarlet.

"Twins!"

"It's a fact, father. He kept us awake. 'Aw, go on, Connie, be good to a fellow.'"

"I—I—" began Connie defensively.

"Well, we know it. Don't interrupt when we're telling things. You always spoil a good story by cutting in. 'Aw, go on, Connie, go on, now!' And Connie said—" The twins rocked off in a paroxysm of laughter, and Connie flashed a murderous look at them.

"Well, I—"

"Give us time, Connie. We're coming to that. And Connie said, 'I'm going in now; I'm sleepy.'"

"I didn't—father, I didn't!"

"Well, you might have said a worse thing than that," he told her sadly.

"I mean—I—"

"She did say it," cried the twins. "'I'm sleepy.' Just like that."

"Well, it would make you sick," declared Connie, wrinkling up her nose to express her disgust. "Are boys always like that father?"

"Don't ask me," he hedged promptly. "How should I know?"

"Oh, Connie, how can you! There's father—now, he never cared to kiss the girls even in his bad and balmy days, did you, daddy? Oh, no, father was all for the strictly orthodox even in his youth!"

Mr. Starr returned precipitately to his mail, and the twins calmly resumed the discussion where it had been interrupted.

A little later a quick exclamation from their father made them turn to him inquiringly.

"It's a shame," he said, and again: "What a shame!"

"Why, it's a letter from Andrew Hedges—an old college chum of mine. His son is going West and Andy is sending him around this way to see me and meet my family. He'll be here this afternoon. Isn't it a shame?"

"Isn't it lovely?" exclaimed Carol. "We can use him to make Jim Forrest jealous if he doesn't ask for that date?" And she rose up and kissed her father.

"Will you kindly get back to your seat, young lady, and not interfere with my thoughts?" he reproved her sternly but with twinkling eyes. "The trouble is I have to go to Fort Madison on the noon train for that Epworth League convention. I'd like to see that boy. Andy's done well, I guess. I've always heard so. He's a millionaire, they say."

For a long second his daughters gazed at him speechlessly.

Then, "A millionaire's son," Lark faltered feebly.

"But I have to go to Fort Madison. I am on the program tonight. There's the puzzle."

"Oh, father, you can leave him to us," volunteered Lark. "We'll be lovely, just lovely. A millionaire's son! Oh, yes, daddy, you can trust him to us all right."

At last he caught the drift of their enthusiasm. "Ah! I see! That fatal charm. You're sure you'll treat him nicely?"

"Oh, yes, father, so sure. A millionaire's son. We've never even seen one yet."

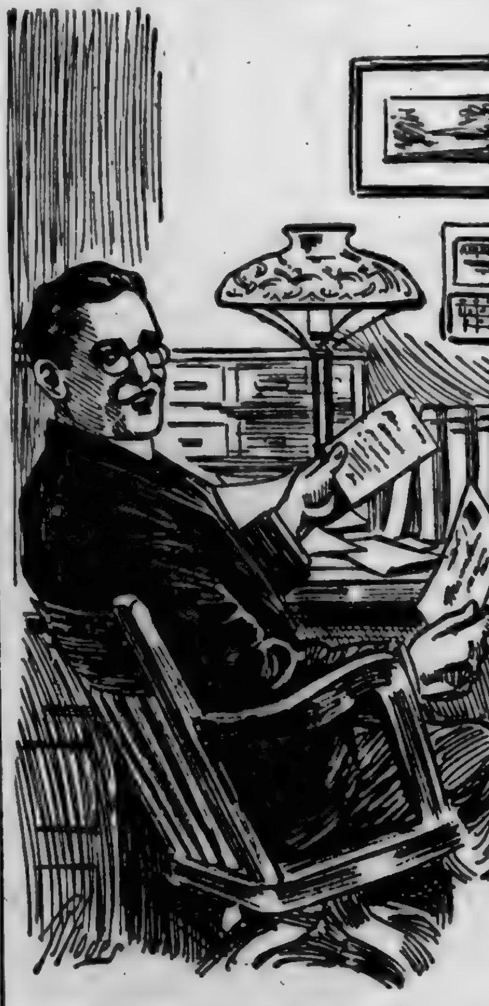
"Now, look here, girls, fix the house up and carry it off the best you can. I'll be gone until the end of the week, since I'm on for the last night, too. Will you do your best?"

After his departure, Carol gathered the family forces about her without a moment's delay.

"A millionaire's son," she prefaced her remarks, and as she had expected, was rewarded with immediate attention. "Now, for darling father's sake, we've got to manage this thing the very best we can. We have to make this Andy Hedges, millionaire's son, think we're just about all right, for father's sake. We must have a generous dinner, to start with. We'll plan that a little later. Now I think, Aunt Grace, lovely, it would be nice for you to wear your lavender lace gown, and look delicate, don't you? A chaperoning auntie in poor health is so aristocratic. You must wear the lavender satin slippers and have a bottle of cologne to lift frequently to your sensitive nostrils."

"Why, Carol, William wouldn't like it!"

"Wouldn't like it!" ejaculated the schemer in surprise. "Wouldn't like it! Why wouldn't he like it? Didn't he tell us to create a good impression?



"It's a Shame," He Said, and Again: "What a Shame!"

Well, this is it. You'll make a lovely semi-invalid auntie. You must have a faintly perfumed handkerchief to press to your eyes now and then. It isn't hot enough for you slowly to wield a graceful fan, but we can get along without it."

"But, Carol—"

"Think how pleased dear father will be if his old college chum's son is properly impressed," interrupted Carol hurriedly, and proceeded at once with her plans.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

No Room for Teddy Bears.

A woman with her little girl was looking through a flat that was for rent. The janitor said no dogs or animals of any kind were allowed. The little girl said to her mother: "Don't move here, I can't bring my Teddy bear."

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

"NO. NOTHING."

From the Morning Olympian, Olympia, Wash.:

"What's the matter with you fellows on the force? Are you all asleep that you never throw any one in these days?" asked a restaurant cook of the Olympia police force. "The past two months I have not had orders for enough meals at the city jail to remember I had a city contract. In all my years in Olympia I never saw the like, and I've cooked many a meal in my time and made good money. But it's not even pennies for me now from you fellows. You're a bum bunch."

"You know why, don't you?" asked the police officer addressed.

"No, only that it's rotten business. What's the matter?"

"No booze!"

"No! Is that a fact?"

"Take it from me. She went dry some months ago, didn't she—bone dry? Well, where there is no whisky there is less trouble, and I've never seen it fail. No drunks, no disorder, no old-time 'rolling,' no scraps, no nothing. There is no chance to jug the law-abiding Americans of Olympia today."

"Switched if it ever struck me, but that sure is the case. I guess the jail meals business is shot for good."

And later that afternoon Police Judge Crosby reported he hadn't had one case of drunkenness in police court during the entire month just past. "In the old days I used to dread to come down to the office in the morning, for, they would be there waiting, six to a dozen strong," said the magistrate.

PRUSSIAN AND RUSSIAN.

Once upon a time—before the war—a Russian gentleman of great importance was dining with a Prussian gentleman similarly distinguished. As was usual on such occasions, wine and beer flowed and the guests became more and more unrestrained, much to the disgust of the Russian, who was of a highly refined and intellectual type and particularly prejudiced against beer and the grossness which attends its use.

In a state of hilarity the Prussian poured a great glass of beer and presented it to his Russian guest, saying: "You must empty this to the health of our kaiser."

The Russian took up an immense joint of mutton from the table and, laying it upon the Prussian's plate, said: "You must eat this to the health of our noble czar."

"What!" cried the Prussian in astonishment. "Do you think I am a wolf that I could gorge myself on that enormous joint?"

"Do you think," replied the Russian, "that I am a swine to pour that rotten mess into my stomach?"

FROM HIGH AUTHORITY.

In a form letter sent out from the treasury department at Washington, making suggestions as to the sale of Liberty bonds, was this significant statement: "With the higher wages paid to workmen and with the larger returns to capital, the savings of the people, despite the high cost of living, have increased enormously. The growth of prohibition has also stimulated thrift and helped materially to increase savings deposits."

THE RUM RATION.

Yes, we know that the pernicious practice of giving small doses of rum to soldiers in the trenches has prevailed in the British army. Also, we know that thousands of soldiers have been picked up out of shell craters in "No Man's Land," and because their power of resisting shock had been lowered by rum poisoning. To the man who must endure wounds hours before he receives attention, the rum issue is a stab in the back.

GIVE US THE SOLID.

It discourages the most of us from trying to get fat on "liquid bread" when those scientific fellows come along with their demonstration that one must drink 54 bottles of it to get the same amount of nourishment contained in a single loaf of the other kind of bread. We really cannot afford it, since beer has gone up to "two for a quarter" in some places.—American Issue.

WORK FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Since the United States entered the war the W. C. T. U. of the country has furnished between 300,000 and 400,000 comfort kits for the soldiers and sailors. Kansas W. C. T. U. alone made and distributed nearly 6,000. A tremendous amount of other war relief work is being done by the organization, including the making of surgical bandages.

MEN FROM PEORIA DISTILLERIES.

"Peoria's manufacturers will snap up every available man Monday morning," said a conspicuous Peoria (Ill.) business man. "Between 1,500 and 2,000 men will be put out of employment in the distilleries, but there is a place for every one of them in the tractor factories, the implement works, and in other Peoria industries. We can use every ounce of coal, and are glad to get it, that the distilleries have been requiring. Industrially, Peoria, will never know that the distilleries have been closed.—Chicago (Ill.) Tribune.

WASH THE KIDNEYS!

All the blood in the body passes thru the kidneys every few minutes. This is why the kidneys play such an important role in health or disease. By some mysterious process the kidney selects what ought to come out of the blood and takes it out. If the kidneys are not good-workmen and become congested—poisons accumulate and we suffer from backache, headache, lumbago, rheumatism or gout. The urine is often cloudy, full of sediment; channels often get sore and sleep is disturbed at night. So it is that Dr. Pierce, of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y., advises "Washing the Kidneys," by drinking six to eight glasses of water between meals and then if you want to take a harmless medicine that will clear the channels and cure the annoying symptoms, go to your druggist and get Anuric (double strength), for 60c. This "Anuric," which is so many times more potent than lithia—will drive out the uric acid poisons and bathe the kidneys and channels in a soothing liquid.

If you desire, write for free medical advice and send sample of water for free examination. Experience has taught Doctor Pierce that "Anuric" is a most powerful agent in dissolving uric acid, as hot water melts sugar.

Good Reason Why Young Man Did Not Desire House as Gift From His Father-in-Law.

John D. Rockefeller, Jr., at the Y. M. C. A. camp in New Jersey, where he has been doing volunteer war work, told a story about a mean young man.

"This mean young man," he said, "married a girl of wealthy parentage, and the young couple began their wedded life in a house belonging to the bride's father.

"Not long ago, while we were discussing market conditions together, I asked the young man if it was true that his father-in-law had made him a present of the house he lived in.

"'It's a very generous thing, if so?' I added.

"'Well, it ain't so,' said the young man. 'That is, it ain't exactly so. He offered me the house, but I wouldn't accept it.'

"'Why not?' said I.

"He winked solemnly.

"'The house is sure to be willed to me when my father-in-law dies,' he said, 'and meanwhile I'm living in it rent free, while the old man pays the taxes.'"

Sir Robert Walpole.

Flowery oratory he despised. He ascribed to the interested views of themselves or their relatives the declarations of pretended patriots, of whom he said: "All these men have their price."—Memoirs of Walpole.

Wheatless Means Wheatless.

Many people, some dealers in fact, believe they are living up to the food conservation program when they serve war bread.

It is the intention of the administration that you never have any bread purer than war bread and on wheatless days eat bread that contains no flour at all unless it is the small amount needed for holding the substance together. This means practically no wheat at all.

We feel sure that the people of DeKalb County will not raise any voice of protest after hearing the excellent talks of Miss Elnore Barker, of Indianapolis, at the War Conference.

The fifty-fifty plan of selling flour is no hardship on any family and if they desire to do their best towards winning this war they will "grin and bear it."

Graham flour is not a substitute and families who have been conserving in this way have not commenced to help even where their intentions were good.

Following is a complete list of the substitutes which you should keep before you all the time:—

Corn meal, Rice and rice flour, Corn flour, Corn starch, Corn grit, Hominy, Oatmeal, Barley flour and rye flour, Buckwheat flour, Potato flour, Sweet potato flour, Rolled oats, Soy bean flour.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

AMERICAN SUGAR SENT TO FRANCE

American Price Rigidly Regulated by United States Food Administration.

CONSUMERS HERE PAY 9c.

Sugar Cost 35 Cents a Pound During Civil War—Refiners' Profits Now Curtailed.

Sugar is selling today throughout America at from 8½ to 9 cents a pound to the consumer, even though there is a world shortage which has reduced this nation's sugar allotment to 70 per cent. of normal.

Through the efforts of the United States food administration the sugar market has been regulated as far as the producer, refiner and wholesaler is concerned. The food administration has no power to regulate retail prices except by public opinion. Even though more than 85,000 tons of sugar have been shipped to France in the last four months the retail grocer's sugar price is around 8 to 8½ cents. He should sell this sugar at 8½ to 9 cents, the food administration believes, and asks the American housewife to pay no more than this amount.

Last August when the food administration was organized the price of sugar rose suddenly to 11 cents a pound. During the Civil War sugar cost the consumer 35 cents a pound. By regulation of the sugar market and reducing the price to 8½ and 9 cents and keeping it from advancing to 20 cents the food administration has saved the American public at least $180,000,000 in four months, according to a statement made by Herbert Hoover the other day.

"It is our stern duty to feed the allies, to maintain their health and strength at any cost to ourselves," Mr. Hoover declared. "There has not been, nor will be as we see it, enough sugar for even their present meagre and depressing ration unless they send ships to remote markets for it. If we in our greed and gluttony force them either to further reduce their ration or to send these ships we will have done damage to our abilities to win this war.

"If we send the ships to Java for 250,000 tons of sugar next year we will have necessitated the employment of eleven extra ships for one year. These ships—if used in transporting troops—would take 150,000 to 200,000 men to France."

Reason for World Shortage.

As Mr. Hoover pointed out, the United States, Canada and England were sugar importing countries before the war, while France and Italy were very nearly self-supporting. The main sources of the world's sugar supply was Germany and neighboring powers, the West Indies and the East Indies.

German sugar is no longer available, as it is used entirely in Germany, which also absorbs sugar of surrounding countries.

England can no longer buy 1,400,000 long tons of sugar each year from Germany. The French sugar production has dropped from 750,000 to 210,000 tons. The Italian production has fallen from 210,000 tons to 75,000 tons. Thus three countries were thrown upon East and West Indian sources for 1,925,000 tons annually to maintain their normal consumption.

Because of the world's shipping shortage the allied nations started drawing on the West Indies for sugar; East Indian sugar took three times the number of ships, since the distance was three times as great. Suddenly the west was called on to furnish and did furnish 1,420,000 tons of sugar to Europe when 300,000 tons a year was the pre-war demand. The allies had drawn from Java 400,000 tons before the shipping situation became acute.

"In spite of these shipments," Mr. Hoover stated the other day, "the English government in August reduced the household sugar ration to a basis of 24 pounds per annum per capita. And in September the French government reduced their household ration to 13 2-10 pounds a year, or a bit over 1 pound of sugar a month. Even this meagre ration could not be filled by the French government it was found early in the fall. America was then asked for 100,000 tons of sugar and succeeded in sending 85,000 tons by December 1. The French request was granted because the American household consumption was then at least 55 pounds per person, and it was considered the duty of maintaining the French morale made our course clear."

Today the sugar situation may be summarized by stating that if America will reduce its sugar consumption 10 to 15 per cent. this nation will be able to send 200,000 more soldiers to France.

Sugar today sells at seaboard refineries at $7.25 a hundred pounds. The wholesale grocer has agreed to limit his profit to 25 cents a hundred plus freight, and the retail grocer is supposed to take no more than 50 cents a hundred pounds profit. This regulation was made by the food administration, which now asks the housewife to reduce sugar consumption as much as possible, using other sweeteners, and also reminds her that she should pay no more than 9 cents a pound for sugar.

Control of Cane Refiners' Profits.

"Immediately upon the establishment of the food administration," Mr. Hoover said, "an examination was made of the costs and profits of refining and it was finally determined that the spread between the cost of raw and the sale of refined cane sugar should be limited to $1.30 per hundred pounds. The pre-war differential had averaged about 85 cents and increased costs were found to have been imposed by the war in increased cost of refining, losses, cost of bags, labor, insurance, interest and other things, rather more than cover the difference. After prolonged negotiations the refiners were placed under agreement establishing these limits on October 1, and anything over this amount to be agreed extortionate under the law.

"In the course of these investigations it was found by canvass of the Cuban producers that their sugar had, during the first nine months of the past year, sold for an average of about $4.24 per hundred f. o. b. Cuba, to which duty and freight added to the refiners' cost amount to about $5.66 per hundred. The average sale price of granulated by various refineries, according to our investigation, was about $7.50 per hundred, or a differential of $1.84.

"In reducing the differential to $1.30 there was a saving to the public of 54 cents per hundred. Had such a differential been in use from the 1st of January, 1917, the public would have saved in the first nine months of the year about $24,900,000."

Next Year.

With a view to more efficient organization of the trade in imported sugars next year two committees have been formed by the food administration:

1. A committee comprising representatives of all of the elements of American cane refining groups. The principal duty of this committee is to divide the sugar imports pro rata to their various capacities and see that absolute justice is done to every refiner.

2. A committee comprising three representatives of the English, French and Italian governments; two representatives of the American refiners, with a member of the food administration. Only two of the committee have arrived from Europe, but they represent the allied governments. The duties of this committee are to determine the most economical sources from a transport point of view of all the allies to arrange transport at uniform rates, to distribute the foreign sugar between the United States and allies, subject to the approval of the American, English, French and Italian governments.

This committee, while holding strong views as to the price to be paid for Cuban sugar, has not had the final voice. This voice has rested in the governments concerned, together with the Cuban government, and I wish to state emphatically that all of the gentlemen concerned as good commercial men have endeavored with the utmost patience and skill to secure a lower price, and their persistence has reduced Cuban demands by 15 cents per hundred. The price agreed upon is about $4.60 per hundred pounds, f. o. b. Cuba, or equal to about $6 duty paid New York.

"This price should eventuate," Mr. Hoover said, "to about $7.30 per hundred for refined sugar from the refiners at seaboard points or should place sugar in the hands of the consumer at from 8½ to 9 cents per pound, depending upon locality and conditions of trade, or at from 1 to 2 cents below the prices of August last and from one-half to a cent per pound cheaper than today.

"There is now an elimination of speculation, extortionate profits, and in the refining alone the American people will save over $25,000,000 of the refining charges last year. A part of these savings goes to the Cuban, Hawaiian, Porto Rican and Lousianian producer and part to the consumer.

"Appeals to prejudice against the food administration have been made because the Cuban price is 34 cents above that of 1917. It is said in effect that the Cubans are at our mercy; that we could get sugar a cent lower. We made exhaustive study of the cost of producing sugar in Cuba last year through our own agents in Cuba, and we find it averages $3.39, while many producers are at a higher level. We found that an average profit of at least a cent per pound was necessary in order to maintain and stimulate production or that a minimum price of $4.37 was necessary, and even this would stifle some producers.

"The price ultimately agreed was 23 cents above these figures, or about one-fifth of a cent per pound to the American consumer, and more than this amount has been saved by our reduction in refiners' profits. If we wish to stifle production in Cuba we could take that course just at the time of all times in our history when we want production for ourselves and the allies. Further than that, the state department will assure you that such a course would produce disturbances in Cuba and destroy even our present supplies, but beyond all these material reasons is one of human justice. This great country has no right by the might of its position to strangle Cuba.

"Therefore there is no imposition upon the American public. Charges have been made before this committee that Mr. Rolph endeavored to benefit the California refinery of which he was manager by this 34 cent increase in Cuban price. Mr. Rolph did not fix the price. It does raise the price to the Hawaiian farmer about that amount. It does not raise the profit of the California refinery, because their charge for refining is, like all other refiners, limited to $1.30 per hundred pounds, plus the freight differential on the established custom of the trade.

"Mr. Rolph has not one penny of interest in that refinery."

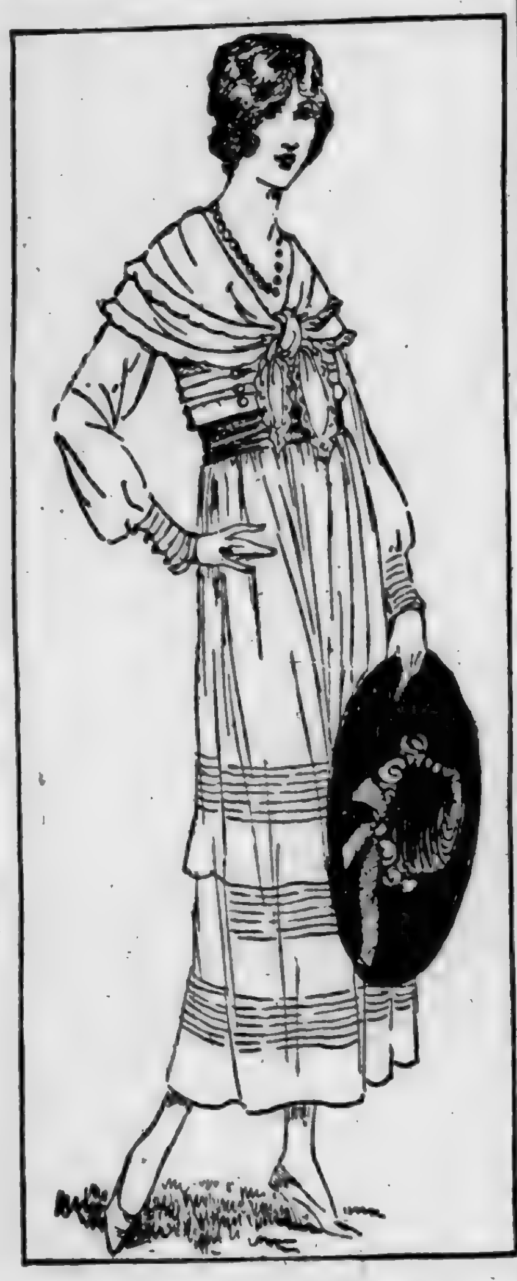
SPRING GOWNS AT HOME AND ABROAD

New York.—That large segment of people on this continent, called society, which means those who have money to indulge in what they wish to do, has been unable to decide between two problems.

They did not know whether it was best to fight out the cold of heatless houses in the North or to take their chances of getting South within a few days after they started. Each case brought its train of evils. Each situation was full of discomfort.



Simple frock for young girl. It is of blue georgette crepe, the skirt tucked in groups. The waist is finely tucked and finished at the neck with a white organdie fichu.

The majority of them shrugged their shoulders with the trick we are trying to learn from the French and used the phase that has become incorporated in our language, "dans la guerre, comme la guerre."

The dressmakers, who must be opportunists, divided their time between offering stay-at-home clothes that looked as though they were intended for a Siberian winter, and thin apparel that is always associated with the sands of Palm Beach in February.

Havana presents more novelty than the Florida, Georgia and South Carolina cities. Another language is spoken, other customs prevail and the Latin brush has been passed over everything and left its mark of color, allurement and brilliancy. Therefore, the clothes that went to Cuba were extremely good looking.

Shifting of Fashion.

It is undoubtedly important to take cognizance of the clothes that were invented for the South. They were put out in a tentative manner because of chaotic conditions that the war brought about not only in travel, but in the expenditure of money. The dressmakers knew that no one would want these clothes except for Augusta, Havana, Miami and Palm Beach.

Aiken puts its faith in sport clothes. Possibly that is because Aiken is easily more fashionable and has more social prestige than any other colony foregathered in the South, and as it is intimate and goes there for outdoor pleasure purely, it not only indulges in new sport clothes, but in many, many old ones.

The straight silhouette has been approved, the scarcity of material accepted, plaited skirts are accomplished and the verdict has been given for strictly tailored and mannish apparel. And yet, before the eyes, an actual and concrete fact, are frocks that are girlish and futile and full of small and minor trifles that destroy elegance.

There are fichus and ruchings and plaited bands of ribbon and silly sashes and awkward loopings at the ankles, and baby sleeves finished with ruffles and sometimes with a few blossoms.

Is this the new silhouette produced by America? Has it anything to do with Paris? Is it a makeshift or a determined effort to change what has been into something that has been dropped?

The Paris doors are opening to the few American buyers that have crossed the ocean, and the sketches of the new gowns, as they have been outlined in Paris, do not lead one to suppose that there is any shifting of fashion over there from a severe, straight silhouette to a Dolly Varden kind of a thing that is utterly unbecoming to the American woman and has nothing in common with her stern activities in wartime.

Over there, Bulloz, who has had a dominating influence on clothes for three years, has thrown his cap over the windmill and gone in for the directoire. This is a fashion that the American woman wears in a manner peculiarly suitable to her figure and personality.

Sleeves fit the arm at the top and branch out into wide cuffs or flares that are lined with brilliant, striped silks, and the elongated decolletage that shows the neck only as far as the collarbone is quite severe, edged with an upstanding ruche of white tulle or organdie.

Chains of brilliant quartz or carved, opaque stones drop over the plain, tight blouses in the early Italian fashion. Sleeves are sometimes latticed, as they were in the days when Ghirlandaio painted the lovely Giovanna Tornibuoni on the canvas which is now owned by J. Pierpont Morgan.

March will decide the issue between the two fashions. America is evidently striving to produce a silhouette of her own, and she is trying it out at the Southern resorts. It consists of a straight, narrow skirt and a short Eton jacket, or a drapery of material that suggests such a jacket. She is destroying all severity of line by adding ruchings, plaited ribbons and various kinds of ornamentation that break the surface and do not sharply outline it.

The Spring Materials.

There is a patriotic effort made by the American dressmakers to bring in such fabrics as are produced by our cotton mills.

The use of the gayly colored calicoes of the South which have been worn by the negroes for generations, has long been advocated, and the use of the bandanna handkerchief for trimming. It is quite possible that the northern part of the country has never quite realized the beauty of the cheap fabrics that are turned out in bales by the Southern mills.

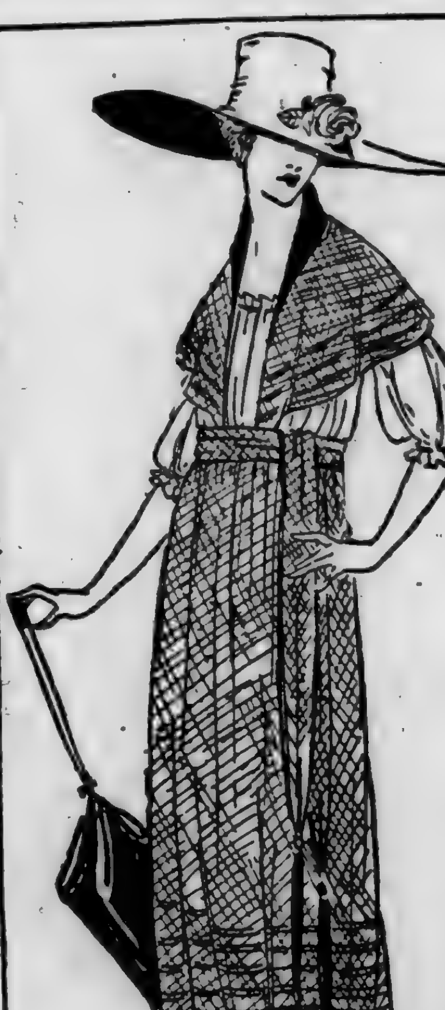
Calico has never come into its own in this country, although Paul Poiret admired it more than any other national fabric that we offer. There is an effort being made to introduce it at the Florida resorts this spring, and it may come about that we shall see it in a great variety of costumes late in the season.

Jersey is rampant, and when made of artificial silk threads or of thin worsteds, it holds its own in an amazing manner. The novelty jersey shows a cream or oyster white background with a large and rather grotesque ornament woven into it or applied by means of small beads.

All the Chinese fabrics have been reinstated. Shantung in its khaki color has again been found an admirable material, especially when its dullness is enlivened by a bit of Nattier blue, deep scarlet and sometimes with a combination of black and orange.

Georgette crepe has a powerful position. It has taken on a bit of kinship to the embroidered jersey by having stamped circles or interlaced rings dripping across its surface. It comes in odd colors of light blue with rings of deeper blue.

Brilliantly printed silks, usually of American make, are put back into the spring fashions, although they need an artist to incorporate them in a costume. The world is rather weary of the Futuristic designs, as they have been commonised in these silks to an alarming degree. The Italian striping is preferred, especially when used as a sash, as a turnover collar or as facings to the wide Italian sleeves that the French designers have pressed upon their public.



Afternoon gown of shantung. It is khaki-colored and the collar is nattier blue. The sash is finished with blue silk tassels and there is a chemisette of tulle. The elbow sleeves are an added feature.

STRAWBERRIES FROM SUMMER TO FROST

Planted in April This Field of an Everbearing Type Gave a Crop the Following Autumn.

DELICIOUS BERRY THROUGH SUMMER

Long-Season Strawberries Have Passed Trial Period.

OF REAL VALUE FOR MARKET

Heretofore "Everbearing" Varieties Have Been Grown Chiefly by Amateurs and Commercial Growers—Crop First Season.

Strawberries from your garden throughout summer and autumn are now a possibility as the result of the perfection of "everbearing" varieties of this delicate berry. Everbearing strawberries are not a brand new discovery, but heretofore they have been grown chiefly by amateurs and commercial growers who have tested them in comparison with ordinary sorts. In a recent publication of the United States department of agriculture announcement is made that a sufficient number of trials of these varieties now have been completed to indicate their real value for home use and for market in certain sections of the country.

Primarily a Northern Type.

The regions where it is known that everbearing varieties can be grown extend as far south as the northern parts of Virginia, Kentucky, Arkansas and Kansas. South of these limits there are probably points where they may be grown with some degree of success, but they are not definitely known to succeed there.

The two leading varieties of this type of strawberry, the Progressive and the Superb, are notable not only because they produce fruit from the time of the usual crop until late summer or autumn, but also because they are exceptionally resistant to leafspot diseases. They are also very hardy. The Progressive has been found to withstand the winters of the middle West better than any other variety except the Dunlap, one of its parents. The Superb also is hardier than most varieties of strawberries. Another remarkable characteristic of these varieties is that if their blooms are killed by frost they soon flower again. Therefore in many sections subject to late spring frosts, which often destroy the crop, these varieties are particularly valuable.

Small Crop First Season.

If plants of the everbearing type are set early in the spring, a small crop can be had the first season. Plants which have been set for a year give a fair yield at the time the usual strawberry crop is borne. For the period immediately after this early summer crop the amount of fruit secured is small. In August, September and October it becomes larger and under favorable conditions the late summer or autumn crop from certain varieties may equal or exceed the early summer crop. Thus instead of a constant supply throughout the season there is a distinct early summer crop, then a period of comparative rest when little fruit is produced, followed by a long period when a fairly uniform amount of fruit is borne.

Weather conditions play an important part in the amount of fruit produced during the summer and autumn. Only when the moisture supply and other climatic conditions are favorable can the yield be constant. For this reason the results obtained from the everbearing varieties have varied greatly in the different sections of the country, and in different years. If a long drought occurs while the plants are fruiting, the berries become small and the plants finally cease to bear. Therefore they are not well adapted to sections having long droughts except when irrigation can be supplied.

Territories Produce More.

The two million people in Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and Guam are trying to do their part for the food supply. Through its experiment stations in these possessions the United States department of agriculture early in the emergency started campaigns to increase food production. To make the territories less dependent upon the mainland of this country for their supplies is the aim of the federal workers. Important results already have been obtained.

Porto Rico, which formerly imported more than $800,000 worth of beans annually from the mainland, now is in a position to export this product. The Alaska stations have greatly increased the areas sown to grains and now are able to meet increased demands for seed grains locally adapted. The Guam station is distributing larger quantities of seeds and plants for cultivation by the natives, with prospects of an increased production of food. Hawaii also has materially increased its production of food crops. Before the war Hawaii and Porto Rico imported some $20,000,000 worth of food supplies from this country annually. Many of the articles imported can be grown successfully in these islands.

KINDS OF EVERBEARERS AVAILABLE TO GROWERS

Thirteen varieties of "everbearing" strawberries are in the trade at present. They are: Advance, Americus, Autumn, Forward, Francis, Iowa, Onward, Pan American, Peerless, Productive, Progressive, Standpat and Superb. In addition, a variety known as the Minnesota No. 1017, distributed by the Minnesota State Horticultural society and the Minnesota agricultural experiment station, has been introduced. Only two of the varieties introduced, the Progressive and the Superb, have been widely grown as yet. The Americus is grown to a slight extent and the others very little. The Minnesota No. 1017 has been widely tested in Minnesota and is grown to a slight extent in surrounding states. Farmers' Bulletin 901 of the United States department of agriculture describes these varieties in detail and discusses their suitability to different sections.

SET STRAWBERRIES EARLY TO GET FRUIT FIRST YEAR

Early spring—as soon as you can get into the garden—is the time to set "everbearing" strawberries, or, in fact, any strawberries. With such an early start a larger crop of fruit can be obtained the first year. The plants also have opportunity to become established and to develop better root systems before beginning to fruit. The markedly different behavior of the long-season varieties has led to the development of cultural practices differing in special details from those followed in the production of standard sorts. Directions for the culture of the everbearing types, in so far as the methods differ from ordinary practices with strawberries, are given in Farmers' Bulletin 901 of the U. S. department of agriculture.

Keep Yourself Fit

You can't afford to be laid up with sore, aching kidneys in these days of high prices. Some occupations bring kidney troubles; almost any work makes weak kidneys worse. I had medical treatment and used many remedies, but got no benefit until I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. Since using them, my kidneys have been normal and my system has been practically free from kidney complaint. JOKE THAT CARRIED MORAL Humorist Found How Many Men Were Sincere in Desire to Save for the Country's Needs.

Even the jokers aided Doctor Jameson, the fuel administrator.

A group of young men were enjoying the comfortable cushions of a cigar store. One of the boys looked up and saw a single light burning over the entrance of a cafe. He stepped to a telephone and called up the cafe.

"That light you have burning over your entrance is superfluous. Put it out," said he.

In a jiffy the light was out.

Up the street a dentist's office displayed a fancy electrical advertisement. The young man called the dentist's office.

"For conservation's sake please extinguish your electric sign," he said.

Out went the dentist's sign.

On around the circle the order, jokermade, went on and before an hour had passed the central part of the business district was in darkness.

"Having served my country, I guess I'll grope my way home to supper," the joker said.

And he went his darkened way.

The jokers gained a patriotic moral. They sat for an hour discussing the willingness of so many people to comply with the nation's war needs.

A wise man doesn't try to scare a cow into standing still while being milked.

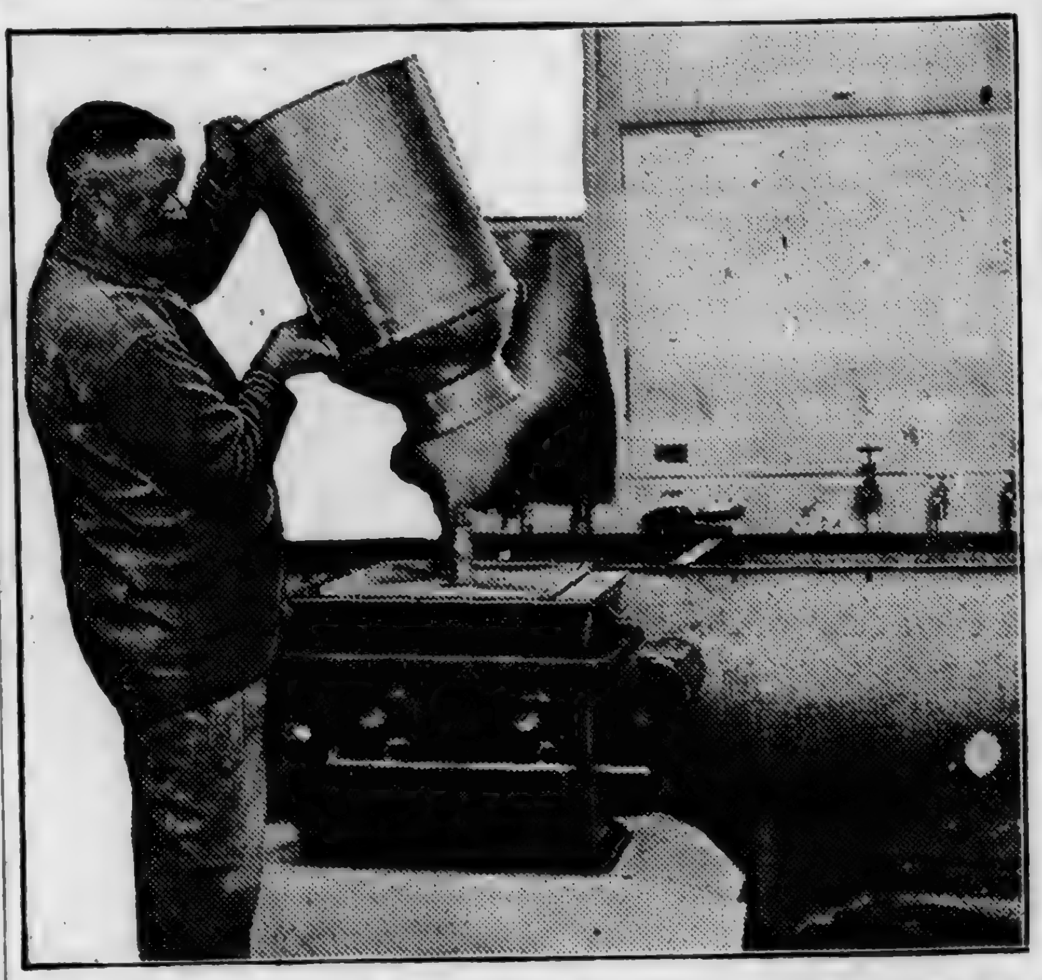
A STEAM GERM-KILLER FOR SMALL DAIRIES



Placing a Milk Can Over the Home-Made Sterilizer—It Can Be Used on the Kitchen Stove.

DEVICE INSURES CLEANSED MILK

Steam Destroys Disease Germs and Injurious Bacteria.

SMALL OUTFIT EASILY MADE

Tests Show Five-Minute Treatment of Dairy Utensils Is Sufficient—Two-Burner Wickless Kerosene Stove Is Useful.

Steam is the arch enemy of harmful bacteria that lurks in milk utensils. But steam isn't the common method of sterilizing used in small dairies, because it is not always available. In fact, lacking it, dairy utensils on small farms are not often sterilized satisfactorily, and as a result diseases hide in milk and may be carried to many families. Washing milk cans and utensils, at least by the processes ordinarily used, does not insure freedom from infection and contamination.

For $10 or $15 a simple steam sterilizer, which will serve a small dairy, can be made in a short time. At that price—which includes a small kerosene stove—this sterilizer should be practical in any dairy from which cream or milk is sold. And the additional keeping qualities which the sterilization of utensils will give milk and cream probably will pay for the cost of the sterilizer in one season. For when utensils are treated with steam all bacteria or disease germs which may be in them are destroyed, and therefore milk and cream when placed in these utensils will keep sweet much longer.

Directions for Making.

This is the way to make a small sterilizer. Specialists of the United States department of agriculture, who describe the process, say this sterilizer will be of greatest use to those who have one, two or three ten-gallon or smaller cans, with a similar number of pails and a strainer cloth. It can be used, however, with a large number of cans. It is made of a roasting pan, a cover, a galvanized-iron box and a removable top to the box. The roasting-pan is of standard size, 20 inches long, 14 inches wide—top measurement—and 3 inches deep. The cover to this is close fitting and insulated. Upon this is placed the galvanized-iron box with its removable top. The insulated cover is made as follows:

Take a sheet of heavy galvanized iron and cut it large enough to allow it to project three-fourths inch over the edge of the pan. Bend the edges of the sheet so as to form a shallow box with sides three-eighths inch high. Then cut out a cover for the shallow box. Cut a hole one and one-half inch in diameter in the center, through the top and bottom, of the small box. Iron braces should be placed crosswise of the box to strengthen it. Then fill the shallow box completely with paper or asbestos sheets, after which the top is carefully soldered on, care being taken to make the seams absolutely tight. Solder a round, galvanized iron pipe, four and one-half inches long and one and one-half inch in diameter in the hole in the center of the cover. Solder flanges beneath cover so that they will meet the edge of the roasting pan, thus making a tight cover. On the top of the insulated cover solder strong folded galvanized-iron strips, three-eighths inch high, to form a square 15 inches by 15 inches, for holding the upper galvanized-iron box. On top of the cover solder also four strips of stiff, galvanized-iron eight inches long and three-eighths inch wide. These strips should extend three-eighths inch above the cover and run from a distance of one inch from the corners to one inch from the steam outlet in the center.

The galvanized-iron box has no bottom but fits in the square formed by the four strips on the cover. The box is 11 inches high. Inside it, three-fourths inch from the top and one-half inch from one side, a stiff wire should be riveted and soldered. It is sometimes desirable to re-enforce the box at each corner with angle iron six inches long and one-half inch wide, riveted halfway up the side.

Kerosene Stove Used.

In the department of agriculture's tests of the outfit described a two-burner wickless kerosene stove was used with excellent results. The sterilizer, however, may be placed on the kitchen stove or over any other source of heat, such as a gas, gasoline, or laundry stove, which burns either wood or coal. Good results also are obtained at very little cost by building under the sterilizer a small brick furnace 12 inches high. It is necessary to have sufficient heat to furnish steam at the end of the outlet pipe at least 205 degrees Fahrenheit, and 210 to 211 degrees Fahrenheit should be obtained if possible.

FOR $10 TO $15, SMALL DAIRIES CAN HAVE STEAM STERILIZER.

The cost of the steam sterilizer itself should not be more than $8. If it is necessary to buy a small stove the cost will be $4 or $5 more. The materials used in it can be bought at prices about as follows: Roasting pan, 25 cents to $1, depending on the grade of iron. The galvanized iron with asbestos and construction work should not cost more than $7, and the work can be done by any tinner. A two-burner wickless kerosene stove costs from $4 to $5; but in many cases it will not be necessary to purchase a stove. The details of making the sterilizer and suggestions as to how it should be operated are described in Farmers' Bulletin 748 of the United States department of agriculture.

When properly operated this sterilizer destroys practically all the bacteria in the utensils, including all disease germs, which may be present. It will accomplish the same results as any sterilizer in which steam not under pressure is used. Experiments with it show that the five-minute steaming is, for all practical purposes, as good as the 15 to 30 minute steaming usually recommended.

PATRIOTISM AND GOOD MILK.

Every owner of a dairy herd should consider it his duty to himself and to the community to keep only healthy cows, supply them with wholesome feed and keep them in clean, comfortable quarters. There is not only patriotism in the service to his patrons which results from such management, but there is more profit.

The milkers and all who handle the milk should realize that they have in their charge a food which is easily contaminated and should, therefore, take all reasonable precautions to prevent the milk from becoming a source of danger to themselves and to others.

The consumer should understand that clean, safe milk is worth more and its production costs more than milk which contains dirt and disease germs; therefore he should be willing to pay more for it than for dirty milk, which is dear at any price.

Round about where Sir Julian Byng's heroes are fighting are buried some of the earliest records of the working and battling of mankind. In his last book the late Lord Avebury refers to the scene. It is more than likely that the guns which are plowing deep and bringing the past to life will reveal more buried history.

Modest But Noted Men.

It is not generally known that, before the war, British capital was already being employed in Mesopotamia, under the direction of Sir William Willcocks, and with the sanction of the sultan, to redeem the valleys of the Tigris and Euphrates by irrigation. The name of Sir William does not mean much to the uninitiated. He is the most approachable and unassuming of men. But to his skill Egypt owes her salvation and he is the only Christian for whom the Mohammedans have been known to pray in their mosques. The building of the dam of Assouan was but the concrete outcome of his ideas. As a worker he has Rooseveltian energy. On a round of inspection, it is popularly said by the "Gyppy" officials of his suite, he sets out to walk from Alexandria in the morning, lunches in Cairo, and ends up at Luxor in the evening for a shake down.—Christian Science Monitor.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a son we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interest.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

The ladies in charge of the baby layettes are rapidly cutting and putting them together to send out to be made. In fact they already have a part of them prepared. We expect to make about fifty of these and urge every woman who can to help with this work. A sundry bag accompanies each layette to be filled with necessities for the little new comer, such as safety pins, soap, talcum, etc. We are asking the public to see that these are filled and if you do not sew at all here is an opportunity to help anyway. This part of Red Cross work is essential, as are also all parts. The women all over the world are not directing their energies along this line just to pass the time away. And while we feel that this work for the helpless babies is important yet do not let us neglect making the hospital supplies for our soldiers. If you can and will go to the sewing room each Wednesday afternoon or to the Surgical Dressing Class each Friday afternoon, if you can not take on additional work please do not neglect these departments, but let the women make the layettes who do not make the hospital supplies.

Mrs. Joslin, treasurer of the Newville Class, has turned in to our Branch treasury $47.45. This covers the donations previously mentioned from the Christian and U. B. Bible Schools and the Pythian Sisters lodge. The balance is personal contributions of which Mrs. E. J. Ryan's offering of $5 00 is the largest. We are very glad to receive this sum from the Newville Class.

In addition to her work as Secy. of our Branch, Mrs. Winnie Shook will assist with the cutting of pajamas.

A Thrift Saving Club is being organized in the high school for the purpose of buying and selling of the government thrift stamps.

The high school received a letter last Friday from its former superintendent, Roy E. Maxwell, who is training for army service at Camp Thomas, Kentucky, but expects to leave for France at first order. The letter was a very interesting one indeed to all those having known Mr. Maxwell and also to others.

The St. Joe High School basket ball quintette claimed the game by forfeit from the Hicksville high school team Friday evening on the local's floor. Only ten minutes of the game was played, at which time Coburn, of Hicksville team was put out of the game by the referee for too many personal fouls and also for insulting the referee. Hicksville protested but the protest was not well founded. Play was resumed for six minutes at which time Hicksville forfeited. The score stood 6-2 in favor of St. Joe when Hicksville forfeited the game.

Sometime ago when the St. Joe boys played at Hicksville they were accorded very rough treatment. Not-with-standing this fact, St. Joe prepared to treat Hicksville in a royal manner here, but they couldn't see they were getting a square deal and started to rough it with our boys from the start of the game until the referee called a halt.

During the sixteen minutes that was played the local boys outclassed Hicksville in every way (the only dispute was caused by the fact that the two teams played diferent sets of rules.) The prelimrnary between the Hicksville girls and St. Joe girls ended in a victory for Hicksville, score 30-3. A Fan.

Hathaway Reports.

Reports of the seed corn survey in DeKalb county reaching the office of A. Z. Arehart, county agent, in charge of the work of the county, are anything but encouraging. Up until Monday only one township, Concord, had reported any seed corn for sale. The amount of that township's surplus was fifty bushels and it had not been tested.—Star.

Bulletin No. 31, from the State Food Administrator, and now in the hands of G. M. Barney, township food director, is as follows:—

"See that all places such as groceries, meat markets, fruit shops, bake shops, and all places distributing food will close on Sunday. There is no reason why they should be open on this day and, besides being a violation of the order of the food administration and a violation of the state law. Please arrange with the marshal and constable and see that this order is obeyed. Hotels and restaurants exempt."

I have seen several articles about Germans trying to raise strife in this country. I am a German by birth, and I am an American heart and hand. I will tell you why I left Germany. There were ten in our family, and we were poor, like most of my countrymen who came to the good old United States of America to get away from oppression, and it was a hard matter to keep the wolf away from the door at times. When I landed in this country I secured work at once and received more money for one month's work than I got in Germany for one year's work. I sent for my folks and am proud they are all true American citizens, and will answer the president's call to arms against Germany or any other country when needed. I don't see how my countrymen can go back on Uncle Sam. They came here without a cent and made money here; now they want to fight the country that feeds them. The Kaiser never did anything for them or me. If he had, we would be back there yet. All he did was to start this cruel war and starve all our people there, and make soldiers out of everybody, and force them to work for his dirty 12 cents a day with a fourth of a pound of meat and a loaf of black bread. I hope to see the day when he is kicked out of Germany and a president put in his place. You don't see any Americans going over there for jobs or to any other nation. They are happy here, and they don't owe allegiance to any king or kaiser. I hope Uncle Sam will win. Hurrah for President Wilson!—Jacob Cratts in Auburn (Nebr.) Republican.

Of the two volunteers from St. Joe last week, Merritt Hull passed the examination at Columbus, while Asa Shuff was returned home. Merritt writes that he has enlisted in the Engineer Corps, Co., No 10, and is located at the Columbus Barracks at Columbus, Ohio. He has received his shot in the arm for typhoid and small pox. Insurance to the amount of $10,000 has been taken out. Each letter received contains praise for the Y. M. C. A. and the treatment received at their hands. Approximately 1800 soldiers are there and all are enjoying the reading, writing, smoking, picture show and music privileges. The boys there are all expecting to be sent to some training camp very soon.

Never was sick one time on the trip, so it was very pleasant.

I supppse you have worried very much since your mail stopped but after coming on this ship we knew nothing nor do we know any more now. When we get settled it will be much better and I think I can write often then.

Both Calvin and myself are in the best of health, and will continue the same way if it is possible.

Give my best wishes to all, and don't worry too much about me. I know it is a long way back, but I am coming, and don't think it will be so very long at that. Will I must get these letters in before it leaves the boat, so will close.

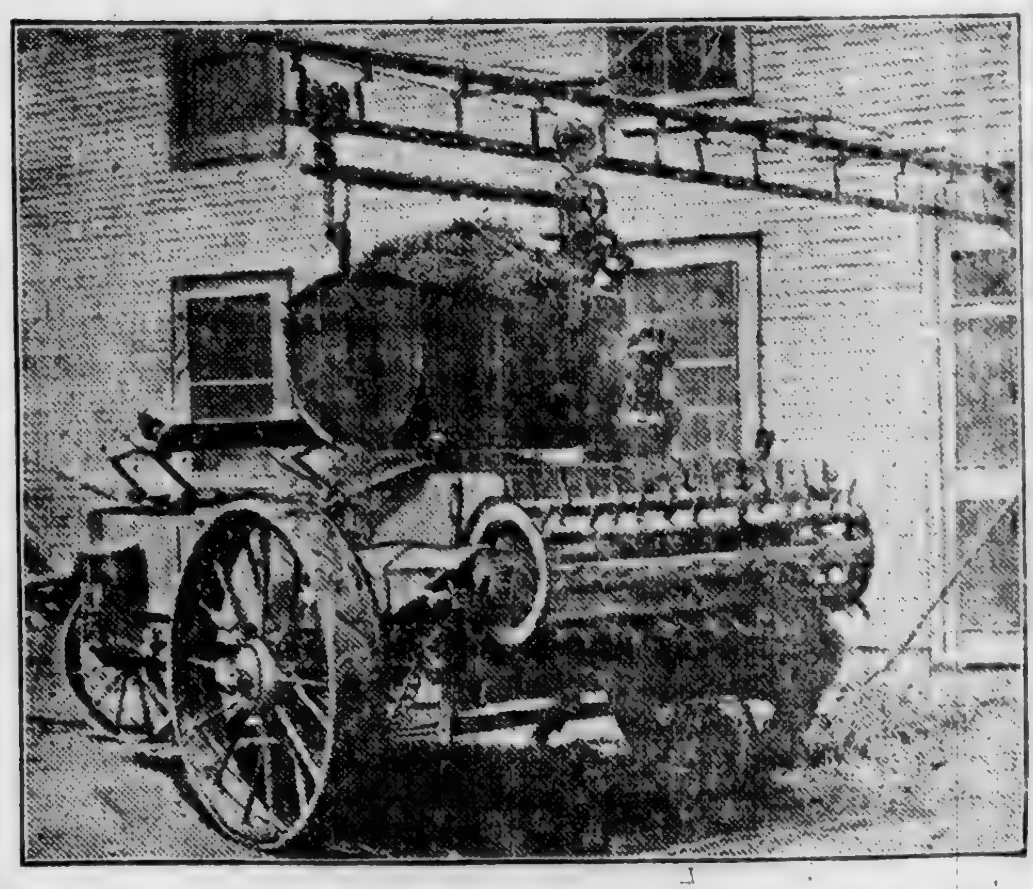
LIVE STOCK FARMING AS A MEANS OF MAINTAINING SOIL FERTILITY



Right Way to Care for Manure Produced on the Farm—Conserve the Plant Food Which It Contains to Increase the Fertility of the Soil.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

No farming people have ever been able economically to maintain the fertility of their soils without the use of live stock. Farming without the use of manures is a waste of energy and results in the exhaustion of soils. The neglect in preserving and increasing the quantity of farm manures has been a great drain on the natural resources of the American farm, especially in the southern portion of the United States. The lack of intelligent care of the waste products and the convenient form of commercial fertilizers have jointly been responsible for the almost general neglect of farm manures.

Value of Fertilizers.

Commercial fertilizers have played and will continue to play a great part in the farm economy of the country. Their full value, however, cannot be obtained by their exclusive use. A much greater value can be had from them when used wisely in connection with manure and green crops. One of the principal reasons for the small value sometimes realized from manure of any kind is that it has not been properly handled and through exposure and neglect has lost a large percentage of its plant food. The chief difference between barnyard manure and other vegetable matter is that the process of passing through the animal has rendered the fertilizing elements of the former more available for absoption in plant growth. The best authorities tell us that from 75 to 90 per cent of the fertilizing value of a crop is left after passing through the animal. This being true and the elements being in a soluble form, we have some idea of why it is of the utmost importance to protect the manure supply from leaching by rains or from other sources of loss.

Loss by Leaching.

The Cornell University experiment station found that as much as 50 per cent of the plantfood constituents in manure was lost by leaching and unnecessary fermentation. The problem is how best and most economically to prevent this loss. The best plan where it is practicable is to haul out the manure regularly, spread it upon the land, and plow it under. The best results are usually obtained by turning under shallow. The next best plan is to keep the stock under sheds or in stables with sufficient litter to absorb all liquids. This treatment will not only take up moisture but the continual trampling of the animal will exclude all air, so that the accumulation may go on without injury to its quality until a convenient time to remove and spread it on the land. The litter or waste matter used for bedding not only serves its purpose in helping to preserve the manure, but adds considerably to it.

When neither of these plans can be advantageously used, a cheap shed conveniently located may be subsituted and all manure carried to it as removed. Care must be taken to prevent heating, which is especially liable to happen when horse manure predominates. This can be remedied by adding water when needed.

We have strict orders from the Fuel Administrator that we are not allowed to sell coal to people outside of St. Joe, Ind., unless they are unable to get wood, either from their own farms, or to buy same. Before we can then sell them we must have a written order from the Town Fuel Administrator which will only be given in severe needy cases. WILSON ATTACKS FOE'S ATTITUDE TOWARD PEACE

Tells Congress Austria Seeks Peace, but That Ally Is Hypocritical.

HERTLING IS FOR CONQUEST

President Sees Militarists Willing to Slaughter Millions for Unjust Cause—Enunciates Points Which Must Be Considered to End War.

Washington, Feb. 13.—President Wilson, in another address to congress on the question of possible peace by negotiation, vigorously attacked Germany's attitude toward peace as voiced by Chancellor von Hertling, characterized Austria's attitude as voiced by Count Czernin as "uttered in a friendly tone" and concluded by saying that this nation would never lay down its arms until peace could be established with justice to all nations, large and small alike.

The president particularly flayed Count von Hertling's proposal that questions of territory and the future of nationalities were matters for discussion between those nations only directly affected instead of by a world congress. In reply he said no permanent peace could come in this way.

Text of Wilson's Address.

The president's address follows:

"Gentlemen of the congress:

"On January 8 I had the honor of addressing you on the objects of the war as our people conceive them. The prime minister of Great Britain had spoken in similar terms on January 5. To these addresses the German chancellor replied on the 24th and Count Czernin for Australia on the same day. It is gratifying to have our desire so promptly realized that all exchanges of view on this great matter should be made in the hearing of all the world.

"Count Czernin's reply, which is directed chiefly to my own address on January 8, is uttered in a very friendly tone.

Sees Basis for Discussion.

"He finds in my statement a sufficiently encouraging approach to the views of his own government to justify him in believing that it furnishes a basis for a more detailed discussion of purposes by the two governments. He is represented to have intimated that the views he was expressing had been communicated to me beforehand and that I was aware of them at the time he was uttering them, but in this I am sure he was misunderstood.

"Count von Hertling's reply is, I must say, very vague and very confusing. It is full of equivocal phrases and leads, it is not clear, where. But it is certain in a very different tone from that of Count Czernin and apparently of an opposite purpose. It confirms, I am sorry to say, rather than removes, the unfortunate impression made by what we had learned of the conference at Brest-Litovsk. His discussion and acceptance of our general principles lead him to no practical conclusion.

Accepts Principle of Diplomacy.

"He refuses to apply them to the substantive items which must constitute the body of any final settlement. He is jealous of international action and of international counsel. He accepts, he says, the principle of public diplomacy, but he appears to insist that it be confined, at any rate in this case, to generalities, and that the several particular questions of territory and sovereignty, the several questions upon whose settlement must depend the acceptance of peace by the twenty-three states now engaged in the war, must be discussed and settled, not in general council, but severally by the nations most immediately concerned by interest or neighborhood.

"He agreed that the seas should be free, but looks askance at any limitation to that freedom by international action in the interest of the common order. He would without reserve be glad to see economic barriers removed between nation and nation, for that could in no way impede the ambitions of the military party with whom he seems constrained to keep on terms. Neither does he raise objection to a limitation of armaments. That matter will be settled of itself, he thinks, by the economic conditions which must follow the war. But the German colonies, he demands, must be returned without debate. He will discuss with no one but the representatives of Russia what dispositions shall be made of the people and the lands of the Baltic provinces; with no one but the government of France the "conditions" under which French territory shall be evacuated; and only with Austria what shall be done with Poland.

Foe for Barter and Concession.

"In the determination of all questions affecting the Balkan states he defers, as I understand him, to Austria and Turkey; and with regard to the agreements to be entered into concerning the non-Turkish peoples of the present Ottoman empire to the Turkish authorities themselves. After a settlement all around, effected in this fashion, by individual barter and concession, he would have no objection, if I correctly interpret his statement, to a league of nations which would undertake to hold the new balance of power steady against external disturbances.

"It must be evident to everyone who understands what this war has wrought in the opinion and temper of the world that no general peace, no peace worth the infinite sacrifices of these years of tragical suffering, can possibly be arrived at in any such fashion.

Peace of World Is at Stake.

"The method the German chancellor proposes is the method of the congress of Vienna. We cannot and will not return to that. What is at stake now is the peace of the world. What we are striving for is a new international order based upon broad and universal principles of right and justice—no mere peace of shreds and patches. Is it possible that Count von Hertling does not see that, does not grasp it, is, in fact, living in his thought in a world dead and gone? Has he utterly forgotten the reichstag resolutions of the 19th of July, or does he deliberately ignore them? They spoke of the conditions of a general peace, not of national aggrandizement or of arrangements between state and state. The peace of the world depends upon the just settlement of each of the several problems to which I adverted in my recent address to the congress. I, of course, do not mean that the peace of the world depends upon the acceptance of any particular set of suggestions as to the way in which those problems are to be dealt with. I mean only that these probems, each and all, affect the whole world; that unless they are dealt with in a spirit of unselfish and unbiased justice, with a view to the wishes, the natural connections, the racial aspirations, the security and peace of mind of the peoples involved, no permanent peace will have been attained.

"They cannot be discussed separately or in corners. None of them constitute a private or separate futerest from which the opinion of the world may be shut out. Whatever affects the peace affects mankind, and nothing settled by military force, if settled wrong, is settled at all. It will presently have to be reopened.

Refers to Reichstag Resolutions.

"Is Count von Hertling not aware that he is speaking in the court of mankind, that all the awakened nations of the world now sit in judgment on what every public man of whatever nation may say on the issues of a conflict which has spread to every region of the world? The reichstag resolutions of July themselves frankly accepted the decisions of that court. There shall be no annexations, no contributions, no punitive damages. Peoples are not to be handed about from one sovereignty to another by an international conference or an understanding between rivals and antagonists. National aspirations must be respected, peoples may now be dominated and governed only by their own consent.

"Self-Determination" Imperative.

"'Self-determination' is not a mere phrase, it is an imperative principle of action, which statesmen will henceforth ignore at their peril. All the parties to this war must join in the settlement of every issue anywhere involved in it, because what we are seeking is a peace that we can all unite to guarantee and maintain and every item of it must be submitted to the common judgment whether it be right or fair, an act of justice rather than a bargain between sovereigns.

"The United States has no desire to interfere in European affairs or to act as arbiter in European territorial disputes. She would disdain to take advantage of any internal weakness or disorder to impose her own will upon another people. She is quite ready to be shown that the settlements she has suggested are not the best or the most enduring. They are only her own provisional sketch of principles and of the way in which they should be applied.

"But she entered this war because she was made a partner, whether she would or not, in the sufferings and indignities inflicted by the military masters of Germany, against the peace and security of mankind, and the conditions of peace will touch her as nearly as they will touch any other nation to which is entrusted a leading part in the maintenance of civilization. She cannot see her way to peace until the causes of this war are removed, its renewal rendered as nearly as may be impossible.

"The war had its roots in the disregard of the rights of small nations and of nationalities which lacked the union and the force to make good their claim to determine their own allegiances and their own forms of political life.

"Count von Hertling wants the essential bases of commercial and industrial life to be safeguarded by common agreement and guaranty, but he cannot expect that to be conceded him if the other matters to be determined by the articles of peace are not handled in the same way as items in the final accounting.

"No Foundation for Peace."

"He cannot ask the benefit of common agreement in the one field without according it in the other. I take it for granted that he sees that separate and selfish compacts with regard to trade and the essential materials of manufacture would afford no foundation for peace. Neither, he may rest assured, will separate and selfish compacts with regard to provinces and peoples.

"Count Czernin seems to see the fundamental elements of peace with clear eyes and does not seek to obscure them. He sees that an independent Poland, made up of all the indisputably Polish peoples who lie contiguous to one another, is a matter of European concern, and must, of course, be conceded; that Belgium must be evacuated and restored, no matter what sacrifices and concessions that may involve, and that national aspirations must be satisfied even within his own empire in the common interest of Europe and mankind.

"Seeing and conceding as he does the essential principles involved and the necessity of candidly applying them, he naturally feels that Austria can respond to the purpose of peace as expressed by the United States with less embarrassment than could Germany. He would probably have gone must further had it not been for the embarrassments of Austria's alliances and of her dependence upon Germany.

"After all, the test of whether it is possible for either government to go any further in this comparison of views is simple and obvious.

Principles to Be Applied.

The principles to be applied are these:

"1. That each part of the final settlement must be based upon the essential justice of that particular cause and upon such adjustments as are most likely to bring a peace that will be permanent.

"2. That peoples and provinces are not to be bartered about from sovereignty to sovereignty as if they were mere chattels and pawns in a game, even the great game, now forever discredited, of the balance of power; but that,

"3. Every territorial settlement involved in this war must be made in the interest and for the benefit of the populations concerned and not as a part of any adjustment or compromise of claims among rival states; and,

"4. That all well-defined national aspirations shall be accorded the utmost satisfaction that can be accorded them without introducing new or perpetuating old elements of discord and antagonism that would be likely in time to break the peace of Europe and consequently of the world.

"A general peace erected on such foundations can be discussed. Until such a peace can be secured we have no choice but to go on. So far as we can judge these principles that we regard as fundamental are already everywhere accepted among the spokesmen of the military and annexationist party in Germany. The tragical circumstance is that this one party in Germany is apparently willing and able to send millions of men to their death to prevent what all the world now sees to be just.

"I would not be a true spokesman of the people of the United States if I did not say once more that we entered this war upon no small occasion and that we never can turn back from a course chosen upon principle. Our resources are in part mobilized now, and we shall not pause until they are mobilized in their entirety. Our armies are rapidly going to the fighting front and will go more and more rapidly.

"Our whole strength will be put into this war of emancipation—emancipation from the threat and attempted mastery of selfish groups of autocratic rulers—whatever the difficulties and present partial delays.

"We Shall Not Turn Back."

"We are indomitable in our power of independent action and can in no circumstance consent to live in a world governed by intrigue and force. We believe that our own desire for a new international order under which reason and justice and the common interests of mankind shall prevail is the desire of enlightened men everywhere. Without that new order the world will be without peace and human life will lack tolerable conditions of existence and development. Having set our hand to the task of achieving it we shall not turn back.

"The power of the United States is a menace to no nation or people. It will never be used in aggression or for the aggrandizement of any selfish interest of our own. It springs out of freedom and is for the service of freedom."

DRIVE FOR SHIP WORKERS ON

Chairman Hurley States Vital Need and Asks but Slight Sacrifices From Men.

Washington, Feb. 13.—Because ships are the primary factor in the winning of this war, and their construction depends upon labor, 250,000 men are to be enrolled during the present week in the United States shipyard volunteers.

"Registration week" has been set aside by proclamation in each state, and the organization for enrollment is complete. The board wants men willing to give a good day's work for a good day's pay, and does not ask them to sacrifice present positions until called upon.

The need is great. The shipping board has the money; the housing of men is being arranged for; the yards are being completed, and the materials are available. All that now is lacking is the spirit in the nation that will send the best mechanics to the yards not to disrupt business

It is planned to make a careful selection of men whose places can be filled without hardship.

Men working in the yards are placed in the deferred class in the draft.

It is urged that mechanics go at once to the nearest enrollment agent of the United States public service reserve of the labor department.

Through the council of national defense an appeal has been made to governors, mayors and other prominent officials to stimulate interest in their communities

FARMERS WARNED OF NEW SWINDLE

MAN IS ADVERTISING THAT HE WILL ORGANIZE FARM LOAN ASSOCIATIONS FOR $500.

SMALL TOWNS MAKE RECORD

Ahead of Cities in Buying the Smileage Books—American Soldiers Lost on Tuscania Protected by Government Insurance.

Washington.—Another scheme for swindling the farmers of the United States has been discovered by the federal farm loan board. A man advertising himself as an authorized organizer of national farm-loan associations is sending out advertising matter emblazoned with the national flag, stating that he will organize such associations at $500 each, and will teach others the trick for a certain sum of money. His advertisements have reached farmers and business men over a large part of the United States. He claims to be so busy organizing national farm-loan associations that he needs help, but will take time to teach others for a monetary consideration.

All such representations are fraudulent. In order to borrow under the farm-loan act, it is necessary for farmers to organize co-operative national farm-loan associations in their local communities. It is a violation of a ruling of the federal farm loan board, published more than a year ago, for a national farm-loan association or a joint-stock land bank to spend any money for promotion purposes. Associations thus organized will not be chartered by the federal farm-loan board. Farmers are warned therefore against anyone asking a fee for his proffered services in connection with applying for a loan under the federal farm-loan act.

Results of the smileage campaign, which put books of theater admission coupons on sale in nearly every town and city in the country, show the small towns and villages far ahead of the cities in overselling their proportionate quotas of books.

Pilot Rock, Ore., was the first town in the country to send in a check. Laurens, Iowa, a town of 900 population, took in $100 before the first smileage book was received. Titonka, Iowa, with 200 population, bought $63 worth of books, the largest sale in proportion to population yet returned.

The coupons in smileage books are exchanged by the soldiers for admission to entertainments in theaters built in the camps by the commission on training camp activities. Admission charges range from 10 cents to 25 cents, or from two to five smileage coupons.

Any American soldiers lost on the torpedoed transport were protected by United States government insurance and government compensation. Those who had not applied for insurance were covered by automatic insurance, which is payable to a wife, child or widowed mother. The automatic insurance aggregates about $4,300, netting $25 a month for 240 months. Insurance that had been applied for is payable to a much larger class of beneficiaries and can go as high as $10,000, netting $57.50 a month for 240 months.

The compensation in case of death, given by the government without charge and regardless of rank or pay, ranges from $20 to $75 a month, based on the number of dependents. Payments under the compensation feature of the military and naval insurance act in case of death are payable to a widow, children, or dependent widowed mother.

The automatic insurance ceased on February 12, but the compensation feature of the act is a separate provision. The scale of compensation in case of death follows:

(a) For a widow alone, $25.

(b) For a widow and one child, $35.

(c) For a widow and two children, $47.50, with $5 for each additional child up to two.

(d) If there be no widow, then for one child, $20.

(e) For two children, $30.

(f) For three children, $40, with $5 for each additional child up to two.

(g) For a widowed mother, $20. The amount payable under this subdivision shall not be greater than a sum which when added to the total amount payable to the widow and children, does not exceed $75.

To meet the shortage of small silver change in Norway a large issue of one-crown notes (at normal exchange the Norwegian crown is worth 26.8 cents United States currency) has been put in circulation.

The United States public health service is carrying on a campaign along sanitary lines in areas adjacent to 28 military camps. Complete sanitary organizations work to prevent the spread of disease from the civilian population to military forces, and to protect civilians from communicable diseases where they have occurred among troops.

The organizations include physicians, sanitary engineers, nurses, attendants and laborers. Methods undertaken include inspection of all establishments handling food supplies.

The committee on public information has received the following excerpts from a speech in the German reichstag by Herr Ledebour, joint leader of the independent socialists:

"Again has an opportunity been neglected to satisfy the world's longing for peace. It is plain that a step backward has been taken and that the political authorities have completely adopted the military views of the conservatives. It is very disquieting for friends of peace to hear the chancellor say that we now have a free hand in the west. Czernin's speech is a striking refutation of Hertling's, for Czernin accepts Wilson's proposals as the basis of understanding, whereas the chancellor rejects them. We hope nevertheless, that we shall soon have the negotiations, which Czernin's action permits us to expect. We cannot agree to Czernin's and Kuehlmann's interpretation of the right of self-determination. We want general peace on a democratic foundation. The pretended popular manifestations in the occupied territory were brought about under the influence of the German administration. The creation of the kingdom of Poland was a tremendous mistake. The German government must give up its false methods, and we shall soon have peace in the east. The true opinions of nations can only be expressed by a referendum after evacuation. The Fatherland party wanted to replace Hertling with Prince Buelow, but that is no longer necessary. Militarism has won the day, and the proletariat must force peace on the basis of the reconciliation of all nations."

Complaints have been made to the pigeon section of the signal corps that carrier pigeons of the racing-homer type, being trained throughout the United States for communication service with the American army, have been shot by persons on hunting expeditions.

Because of the important part carrier and homing pigeons are playing in the war, and the need for their breeding and development in this country, the war department has considerably expanded the pigeon section of the signal corps. Homing pigeons constitute one of the most effective means of communication in the army.

Any pigeon in the air may be a carrier pigeon flying from a loft under government supervision. Its destruction may be a serious loss to the American army. Anyone coming into possession of pigeons labeled "U. S. A.—18," indicating they are being trained for army purposes, is requested to report the fact at once to the office of the chief signal officer, land division, Washington, D. C.

Special courses of training for athletic instructors have been established at Camp Kearney, Linda Vista, Cal. One lieutenant and one noncommissioned officer from each company have been detailed to take the courses which include boxing, wrestling and calisthenics. The classes are held three times each week, and the officers in turn instruct their men.

Two athletic fields have been laid out at Camp Lewis, American Lake, Wash., and stands with seating capacity of from 16,000 to 18,000 persons built at a cost of $3,000 each. The expense was met with funds derived from athletic contests and entertainments given by the men.

Attendance at boxing at Camp Upton, Yaphank, N. Y., to which officers and noncommissioned officers have been assigned, has been made compulsory.

According to a late report, of the 1,800,000 women engaged in agriculture in the United States, 750,000 are under twenty years of age and 1,050,000 are negroes. A majority of the woman workers are found in the Southern states.

The lines of work in which women will be likely to increase their farming activities, according to the report, are vegetable gardening, poultry raising, butter making, hog raising, etc. It is suggested that women who know how to operate motorcars may with little additional training operate tractors.

Now that American troops are taking their places in the trenches, attention is again directed to an estimate by the secretary of war, that the losses up to June 1, 1917, of the British expeditionary forces from deaths in action and from wounds amounted to but 7 per cent of the total of all men sent to France since the beginning of the war.

The ratio of losses of this character today, because of improved tactics, is less than 7 to every 100 men.

It is the opinion of the United States food administration that the gross maximum profit for wholesalers in flour should not exceed from 50 to 75 cents per barrel. The profit to retail dealers in original mill packages should not exceed from 80 cents to $1.20 per barrel, depending upon the character of service performed. Where retailers sell in amounts less than the original mill packages, the gross profit should not exceed 1 cent a pound.

Women with a fluent knowledge of French are being trained in several cities for work in France as telephone operators with the expeditionary forces. They will not be sent over in one unit, but ordered to go in groups from time to time. No information can be given as to the locality in which they will be stationed.

Men who are capable of handling horses are still wanted for the veterinary corps. They must be physically fit and not of selective-service age.

—14—

"Connie must be a precocious younger sister, all in white—she must come in late with a tennis racquet, as though she had just returned from a game. That will be stagey, won't it? Lark must be the sweet young daughter of the house. She must wear her silver mull, her gray slippers, and—"

"What are you going to wear?"

"Who, me? Oh, I have other plans for myself." Carol looked rather uneasily at her aunt. "It'll come to me a little later."

"Yes, indeed," said Connie. "Carol has something extra up her sleeve. She's had the millionaire's son in her mind's eye ever since father introduced his pocketbook into the conversation."

Carol was unabashed. "My interest is solely from a family viewpoint. I have no ulterior motive."

Her eyes sparkled eagerly. "You know, auntie-darling—"

"Now, Carol, don't you suggest anything—"

"Oh, no indeed, dearest, how could you think of such a thing?" disclaimed Carol instantly. "It's such a very tiny thing, but it will mean a whole lot on the general impression of a millionaire's son. We've simply got to have a maid! To open the door, and courtesy, and take his hat, and serve the dinner, and— He's used to it, you know, and if we haven't one he'll go back to Cleveland and say, "Ah, bah Jove, I had to hang up my own hat, don't you know?"

"That's supposed to be English, but I don't believe it. Anyhow, it isn't Cleveland," said Connie flatly.

"Well, he'd think we were awfully cheap and hard up, and Andy Hedges, Sr., would pity father, and maybe send him ten dollars, and—no, we've got to have a maid!"

"We might get Mamie Sickey," suggested Lark.

"She's so ugly."

"Or Fay Greer," interposed Aunt Grace.

"She'd spill the soup."

"Then there's nobody but Ada Lone," decided Connie.

"She hasn't anything fit to wear," objected Carol.

"Of whom were you thinking, Carol?" asked her aunt, moving uneasily in her chair.

Carol flung herself at her aunt's knees. "Me!" she cried.

"As usual," Connie ejaculated dryly.

"Oh, Carol," wailed Lark, "we can't think of things to talk about when you aren't there to keep us stirred up."

"I'm beginning to see daylight," said Connie. She looked speculatively at Lark. "Well, it's not half bad, Carol, and I apologize."

"Don't you think it is a glorious idea, Connie?" cried Carol rapturously.

"Yes, I think it is."

Carol caught her sister's hand. Here was an ally worth having. "You know how sensible Connie is, auntie. She sees how utterly preposterous it would be to think of entertaining a millionaire's son without a maid."

"You're too pretty," protested Lark. "He'd try to kiss you."

"'Oh, no, sir, oh, please, sir,'" simpered Carol, with an adorable curtesy, "'you'd better wait for the ladies, sir.'"

"Oh, Carol, I think you're awful," said their aunt, unhappily. "I know your father won't like it."

"Like it? He'll love it. Won't he, Connie?"

"Well, I'm not sure he'll be crazy about it, but it'll be all over when he gets home," said Connie.

"And you're very much in favor of it, aren't you, Connie precious?"

"But what's the idea?" mourned Lark. "What's the sense in it? Father said to be good to him, and you know I can't think of things to say to a millionaire's son. Oh, Carol, don't be so mean."

But Carol stood firm, and the others yielded to her persuasions. Even Aunt Grace allowed her qualms to be quieted and entered into her part as semi-invalid auntie with genuine zest.

At three they were all arrayed, ready for the presentation. They assembled socially in the parlor, the dainty maid ready to fly to her post at a second's warning. At four o'clock, they were a little fagged and near the point of exasperation, but they still held their characters admirably. At half past four a telegram message was phoned out from the station.

"Delayed in coming. Will write you later. Very sorry. Andy Hedges, Jr."

Only the absolute ludicrousness of it saved Carol from a rage. She looked from the girlish tennis girl to the semi-invalid auntie, and then to the sweet young daughter of the house, and burst out laughing. The others, though tired, nervous and disappointed, joined her merrily, and the vexation was swept away.

The next morning, Aunt Grace went as usual to the all-day meeting of the Ladies' Aid in the church parlors. Carol and Lark, with a light lunch, went out for a few hours of springtime happiness beside the creek two miles from town.

"We'll come back right after luncheon," Carol promised, "so if Andy the Second should come, we'll be on hand."

"Oh, he won't come today."

"Well, he just better get here before father comes home. I know father will like our plan after it's over, but I also know he'll veto it if he gets home in time. Wish you could go with us, Connie."

"Thanks. But I've got to sew on forty buttons. And—if I pick the cherries on the little tree, will you make a pie for dinner?"

"Yes. If I'm too tired Larkie will. Do pick them, Con, the birds have had more than their share now."

After her sisters had disappeared, Connie considered the day's program.

"I'll pick the cherries while it's cool. Then I'll sew on the buttons. Then I'll call on the Piersons, and they'll probably invite me to stay for luncheon." And she went upstairs to don a garment suitable for cherry-tree service. from a rag bag in the closet at the head of the stairs, she resurrected some remains of last summer's apparel. First she put on a blue calico, but the skirt was so badly torn in places that it proved insufficiently protecting. Further search brought to light another skirt, pink, in a still worse state of delapidation. However, since the holes did not occur simultaneously in the two garments, by wearing both she was amply covered. For a waist she wore a red crepe dressing sacque, and about her hair she tied a broad, ragged ribbon of red to protect the soft waves from the ruthless twigs. She looked at herself in the mirror. Nothing daunted by the sight of her own unsightliness, she took a bucket and went into the back yard.

Gingerly she climbed into the tree, gingerly because Connie was not fond of scratches on her anatomy, and then began her task. It was a glorious morning. The birds, frightened away by the living scare-crow in the tree, perched in other, cherryless trees around her and burst into derisive song. And Connie, light-hearted, free from care, in love with the whole wide world, sang, too, pausing only now and then to thrust a ripe cherry between her teeth.

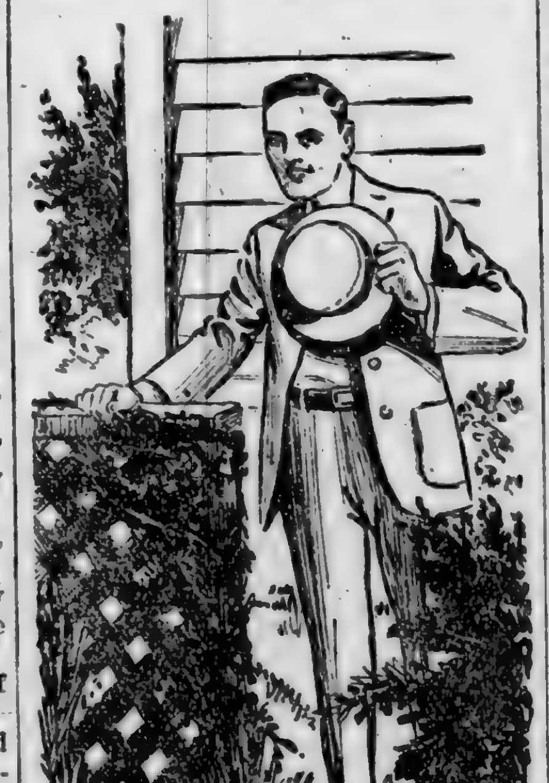
She did not hear the prolonged ringing of the front door bell. She did not observe the young man in the most immaculate of white spring suits who came inquiringly around the house. But when the chattering of a saucy robin became annoying, she flung a cherry at him crossly.

"Oh, chase yourself!" she cried. And nearly fell from her perch in dismay when a low voice from beneath said pleasantly:

"I beg your pardon! Miss Starr?"

Connie swallowed hard, to get the last cherry and the mortification out of her throat.

"Yes," she said, noting the immaculate white spring suit, and the handsome shoes, and the costly panama held so lightly in his hand. She knew the panama was costly because they had wanted to buy one for her father's birthday, but decided not to.



"I Beg Your Pardon! Miss Starr?"

"I am Andrew Hedges," he explained, smiling sociably.

Connie wilted completely at that. "Good night," she muttered with a vanishing mental picture of their lovely preparations the day previous. "I—mean good morning. I'm so glad to meet you. You—you're later, aren't you? I mean, aren't you ahead of yourself? At least, you didn't write, did you?"

"No, I was not detained so long as I had anticipated, so I came right on. But I'm afraid I'm inconveniencing you."

"Oh, not a bit, I'm quite comfortable," she assured him. "Auntie is gone just now, and the twins are away, too, but they'll all be back presently." She looked longingly at the house. "I'll have to come down, I suppose."

"Let me help you," he offered eagerly. Connie in the incongruous clothes, with the little curls straying beneath the ragged ribbon, and with stains of cherry on her lips, looked more presentable than Connie knew.

"Oh, I—" she hesitated, flushing. "Mr. Hedges," she cried imploringly, "will you just go around the corner until I get down. I look fearful."

"Not a bit of it," he said. "Let me take the cherries."

Connie helplessly passed them down to him, and saw him carefully depositing them on the ground. "Just give me your hand."

And what could Connie do? She couldn't sternly order a millionaire's son to mosy around the house and mind his own business until she got some decent clothes on, though that was what she yearned to do. Instead she held out a slender hand, grimy and red, with a few ugly scratches here and there, and allowed herself to be helped ignominiously out from the sheltering branches into the garish light of day.

She looked at him reproachfully. He never so much as smiled.

"Laugh if you like," she said bitterly. "I looked in the mirror. I know all about it."

"Run along," he said, "but don't be gone long, will you? Can you trust me with the cherries?"

Connie walked into the house with great decorum, afraid the ragged skirts might swing revealingly, but the young man bent over the cherries while she made her escape.

It was another Connie who appeared a little later, a typical tennis girl, all in white from the velvet band in her hair to the canvas shoes on her dainty feet. She held out the slender hand, no longer grimy and stained, but its whiteness still marred with sorry scratches.

"I am glad to see you," she said gracefully, "though I can only pray you won't carry a mental picture of me very long."

"I'm afraid I will, though," he said teasingly.

"Then please don't paint me verbally for my sisters' ears; they are always so clever where I am concerned. It is too bad they are out. You'll stay for luncheon with me, won't you? I'm all alone—we'll have it in the yard."

"It sounds tempting, but—perhaps I had better come again later in the afternoon."

"You may do that, too," said Connie. "But since you are here, I'm afraid I must insist that you help amuse me." And she added ruefully, "Since I have done so well amusing you this morning."

"Why, he's just like anybody else," she was thinking with relief. "It's no trouble to talk to him, at all. He's nice in spite of the millions."

He stayed for luncheon, he even helped carry the folding table out beneath the cherry tree, and trotted docilely back and forth with plates and glasses, as Connie decreed.

It was not until they were at luncheon that the grand idea visited Connie. Back to her remembrance flashed the thousand witty sallies of Carol and Lark, the hundreds of times she had suffered at their hands. And for the first time in her life, she saw a clear way of getting even. And a millionaire's son! Never was such a revenge fairly crying to be perpetrated.

"Will you do something for me, Mr. Hedges?" she asked. Connie was only sixteen, but something that is born in woman told her to lower her eyes shyly, and then look up at him quickly beneath her lashes. And she saw in a flash the ruse worked.

Then she told him softly, very prettily.

"But won't she dislike me, if I do?" he asked.

"No, she won't," said Connie. "We're a family of good laughers. We enjoy a joke nearly as much when it's on us. as when we are on top."

So it was arranged, and shortly after luncheon the young man in the immaculate spring suit took his departure. Then Connie summoned her aunt by phone, and told her she must hasten home to help "get ready for the millionaire's son." It was after two when the twins arrived, and Connie and their aunt hurried them so violently that they hadn't time to ask how Connie got her information.

He had arrived! A millionaire's son! Instantly their enthusiasm returned to them. The cushions on the couch were carefully arranged for the reclining of the semi-invalid aunt, who, with the sweet young daughter of the house, was upstairs waiting to be summoned. Connie, with the tennis racquet, was in the shed, waiting to arrive theatrically. Carol, in her trim black gown with a white cap and apron, was a dream.

And when he came she ushered him in, courtesying in a way known only on the stage, and took his hat and stick, and said softly:

"Yes, sir—please come in, sir—I'll call the ladies."

She knew she was bewitching, of course, since she had done it on purpose, and she lifted her eyes just far enough beneath the lashes to give the properly coquettish effect. He caught her hand, and drew her slowly toward him, admiration in his eyes, but trepidation in his heart, as he followed Connie's coaching. But Carol was panic-stricken, she broke away from him roughly and ran upstairs, forgetting her carefully rehearsed: "Oh, no, sir—oh, please, sir—you'd better wait for the ladies."

But once out of reach she regained her composure. The semi-invalid aunt trailed down the stairs, closely followed by the attentive maid to arrange her chair and adjust the silken shawl. Mr. Hedges introduced himself, feeling horribly foolish in the presence of the lovely serving girl, and wishing she would take herself off. But she lingered effectively, whispering softly:

"Shall I lower the window, madame? Is it too cool? Your bottle, madame!"

And the guest rubbed his hand swiftly across his face to hide the slight twitching of his lips.

Then the model maid disappeared, and presently the sweet daughter of the house, charming in the gray silk mull and satin slippers, appeared, smiling, talking, full of vivacity and life. And after a while the dashing tennis girl strolled in, smiling inscrutably into the eyes that turned so quizzically toward her. For a time all went well. The chaperoning aunt occasionally lifted a dainty cologne bottle to her sensitive nostrils, and the daughter of the house carried out her girlish vivacity to the point of utter weariness. Connie said little, but her soul expanded with the foretaste of triumph.

"Dinner is served, madame," said the soft voice at the door, and they all walked out sedately. Carol adjusted the invalid auntie's shawl once more, and was ready to go to the kitchen when a quiet:

"Won't Miss Carol sit down with us?" made her stop dead in her tracks.

He had pulled a chair from the corner up to the table for her, and she dropped into it. She put her elbows on the table, and leaning her dainty chin in her hands, gazed thoughtfully at Connie, whose eyes were bright with the fires of victory.

"Ah, Connie, I have hopes of you yet—you are improving," she said gently. "Will you run out to the kitchen and bring me a bowl of soup, my child?"

And then came laughter, full and free—and in the midst of it Carol looked up, wiping her eyes, and said:

"I'm sorry now I didn't let you kiss me, just to shock father!"

But the visit was a great success. Even Mr. Starr realized that. The millionaire's son remained in Mount Mark four days, the cynosure of all eyes, for as Carol said, "What's the use of bothering with a millionaire's son if you can't brag about him?"

And his devotion to his father's college chum was such that he wrote to him regularly for a long time after, and came westward now and again to renew the friendship so auspiciously begun.

"But you can't call him a problem, father," said Carol keenly. "They aren't problematic until they discriminate. And he doesn't. He's as fond of Connie's conscience as he is of my complexion, as far as I can see." She rubbed her velvet skin regretfully. She had two pimples yesterday and he never even noticed them. The she leaned forward and smiled. "Father, you keep an eye on Connie. There's something in there that we aren't on to yet." And with this cryptic remark, Carol turned her attention to a small jar of cold cream the druggist had given her to sample.

CHAPTER XV.

The Twins Have a Proposal.

It was half past three on a delightful summer afternoon. The twins stood at the gate with two hatless youths, performing what seemed to be the serious operation of separating their various tennis rackets and shoes from the conglomerate jumble. Finally, laughing and calling back over their shoulders, they sauntered lazily up the walk toward the house, and the young men set off in the direction from which they had come. They were hardly out of hearing distance when the front door opened, and Aunt Grace beckoned hurriedly to the twins.

"Come on, quick," she said. "Where in the world have you been all day? Did you have any luncheon? Mrs. Forrest and Jim were here, and they invited you to go home with them for a week in the country. I said I knew you'd want to go, and they promised to come for you at four, but I couldn't find any place. I suppose it is too late now. It's—"

"A week!"

"At Forrests'?"

"Come on, Lark, sure we have time enough. We'll be ready in fifteen minutes."

"Come on up, Auntie; we'll tell you where we've been."

The twins flew up the stairs, their aunt as close behind as she deemed safe. Inside their own room they promptly and ungracefully kicked off their loose pumps, tossed their tennis shoes and racquets on the bed, and began tugging at the cords of their middy blouses.

"You go and wash, Carol," said Lark, "while I comb. Then I can have the bathroom to myself. And hurry up! You haven't any time to primp."

Prehistoric Man Found.

The remains of a prehistoric man have been found near Mexico City buried under three meters of volcanic lava. It is supposed they are at least 10,000 years old as the oldest records of Mexico make no mention of an eruption of the volcano Ajusco.

Hostetter's Bitters

Judge Hostetter, of Evansville, occasioned the state no pained surprise last Saturday when he declared the Indiana prohibition law to be unconstitutional. It was known in advance that he would do so, or at least, the guess was so completely inclined in that direction that you couldn't have placed a bet at odds of ten to one. When the wets selected a court in which to bring their test case, they naturally selected one they had occasion to feel was soulfully sympathetic. They knew their judge. Indeed his finding reads as though it might have been written by that scintillating genius of the Model License League, Mr. Gilmour, whose piquant literary style and road house logic are so strikingly similar that one is prone to speculate as to whether Hostetter is Gilmour or Gilmour Hostetter. But that, of course, is vain and visionary, for we may be assured that Judge Hostetter and Mr. Gilmour never either saw or "heerd tell of" each other. It's simply a case of great minds following the same channel which in this case happens to be a beer tunnel.

However, it is somewhat amazing to hear from one presumably versed in the rulings of American courts on the liquor question, such slap-stick arguments on "confiscation of property" as those with which the Evansville jurist regales us. Apparently he is speaking more for the approving buzz of the bar flies than for the endorsement of the supreme court. As Mr. Bryan would say, with one of his always amiable winks, it was a judgement for home consumption, and no doubt it is eminently satisfying as far as it goes. Almost we can hear the liquor interests of Evansville exclaim with a gleeful chuckle:

"For legislative snake bite use Hostetter's Bitters."

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Notice.

The Message publication for the Women's Christian Temperance Union, contained a letter entitled "The Power of Purity in Art and Literature" signed by a member of the Butler Union. This is a mistake, the piece was written by a member of the Newville Union, and was read at one of the local meetings, and was sent to press by our secretary, Mrs. Ina Traxler. The mistake, no doubt, arose from the fact that Newville has the Butler mail route. We desire to call attention to this at present time, as the Message will not be published again until the first of March, and many subscribers read both papers. Mrs. Belle Miller,

WHAT CATTLE WORKERS DID

Field Agents Gave Advice to 5,300 Farmers, Addressed Meetings and Gave Other Aid.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Field agents in beef cattle extension work, according to the annual report of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture, in the last fiscal year gave specific advice to 5,300 farmers, addressed 589 meetings with attendance of 58,786 people, were instrumental in placing with farmers 2,991 breeding cattle, besides 960 hogs, a number of breeding mares, and 1,432 feeder cattle. Direct assistance was given in building 118 silos, and 25 additional live stock organizations were formed. Demonstrations given included 58 in baby beef, 150 in steer feeding, 42 in cattle pasturing and over 1,000 in hog raising.

MANURE IS MOST VALUABLE

Humus-Making Material of as Much Benefit to Soil as Commercial Fertilizer.

It is difficult to compare the value of stable manure with commercial fertilizer since the fertilizer has its plant food in a more available form than the stable manure; then, on the other hand, the stable manure has a value as a humus-making material which is almost, if not altogether, as valuable to the soil as its content of direct plant food. The stable manure contains much more potash and nitrogen than it does phosphorous, so that, considering the high price and scarcity of both of these in a commercial form, it is more important that the manure be carefully saved and applied to the soil.

CHARACTERISTICS OF A RAM

Male Should Be Selected With Reference to Ewes in Flock—Proper Proportions.

A ram should be chosen having all the characteristics of the breed he represents, and showing character. He should also be chosen with reference to the ewes of the flock. If the ewes are large and coarse, the ram should be small and compact. If the ewes are small and compact, the ram should be of a larger type.

Good Type of Mutton.

FATTENING FEED FOR FOWLS

Cornmeal, Midlings, Beef Scrap and Ground Oats Are Said to Be Advantageous.

A good fattening ration for poultry is two parts cornmeal, one part each of middlings, beef-scrap and ground oats, with the hulls sifted out. These meals should be thoroughly mixed, wet with milk and fed to the penned birds three times a day. Usually, it is not profitable to keep birds in the fattening pen longer than three weeks.

MUSKRAT FOR FOOD

The enormous numbers of carcasses of muskrats which are thrown away after the pelts have been removed is a waste of food. The muskrat is an animal of most cleanly habits, is most discriminating in choice of food, and is a very acceptable addition to the table.

The writer can speak from personal experience to the effect that when cooked as rabbits are cooked the meat of the muskrat is extremely palatable. As a matter of fact, muskrats are sold for food in some of the eastern markets and some hunting clubs in the East have animal banquets in which the muskrat forms the chief dish. In some places this animal is known as the "marsh rabbit."

It is to be hoped that this means of reducing the cost of living, although slight, may not be overlooked.—F. L. Washburn, Minnesota Experiment Station.

RAISING MORE BEEF CATTLE

Thousands of New Breeding Herds Being Established All Over Country With Better Stock.

It is a fact that there are thousands of new breeding herds being established all over the country. It is also a fact that farmers and small ranchmen are using more care in selecting the heifers and cows for these new herds and the additions they are making to the herds they already have on their farms. Better quality has been preached from every hilltop in the land.

Fine Beef Specimen.

The live stock journals and agricultural papers have not let up in their advocacy of pure-bred cattle for the beef herds, and the voice has been heeded.

GRUBS INJURIOUS TO STOCK

Pests Found on Backs of Cattle Develop Into Heel Flies and Do Great Harm to Animals.

The characteristic lumps or swellings which may be found under the skin on the backs of many cattle from January to April contain grubs. If these grubs are allowed to remain, they will complete their growth, drop to the ground and transform to heel flies, which may reinfest the cattle during the spring and summer. The grubs weaken the cattle, cause them to fall off in flesh and milk, and decrease the value of the hide. The beef in the immediate vicinity of a grub becomes slimy and of a greenish color, and is known to the butcher as "licked beef." On an average the damage to the hides is placed at one-third their value and the loss of beef to each infested animal ranges from $3.00 to $5.00.

ARRANGING RATION FOR COWS

Three Things Should Be Borne in Mind—Protein, a Little Fat and to Supply Succulence.

The ration for the dry cow should be formulated with three things in mind, namely, to furnish a sufficient amount of protein to develop the fetus properly and allow a surplus for the needs of the body of the cow; to supply enough carbohydrates that the cow may lay on a little fat; and to supply succulence. Some kind of green feed is very essential in the ration for the cow at all times. It serves the purpose of maintaining the bowels in a loose condition, which is necessary to good digestion and assimilation of food.

COMPOST HEAP IS ESSENTIAL

Leaves, Ashes and Other Refuse Matter Should Be Accumulated for Garden Soil.

With the existing high cost of fertilizers of all kinds it is important that every farmer have a compost heap where leaves, ashes and other refuse matter about the place can be accumulated for use on the garden soil.

GROWTH OF CHEESE MAKING

Twelve New Factories Established in West—Big Improvement Seen in Milk Supply.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Work to develop cheese manufacture in the Western states, begun in July, 1916, has resulted in 12 new cheese factories, says the annual report of the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States department of agriculture. Improvement of the milk supply produced a better quality of cheese and greater yields. One factory reported that the improvement of the milk supply alone increased the net income of cheese at least $3,000 a year. Possibilities for expansion of cheese work in the West are said to be almost limitless, but no effort is being made to encourage the establishment of factories where there are not cows enough or where other circumstances prevent successful operations.

GOOD FEEDS FOR DAIRY COWS

Those Who Can Obtain Fish Meal Should Give It Consideration in Arranging Rations.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Dairymen who can obtain fish meal, a by-product of the fish cannery, should give it consideration in making up the rations for their dairy cows. When used in a ration for milk production fish meal proved to be worth from 20 to 25 per cent more than cottonseed meal and had no ill effect upon the flavor of the milk, says the annual report of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture. Potato silage was found to be as palatable as corn silage and of equal feeding value; peanut meal from unhulled nuts was inferior to cottonseed meal, and 128 pounds of potato meal equaled 100 of cornmeal as a feed for dairy cows, according to experiments conducted by the bureau.

DON'T DISTURB LAYING HENS

Undue Excitement in Poultry House Is Bound to Reduce Egg Yield of Young Fowls.

It pays to be quiet and careful in the houses containing laying hens, especially if they are pullets from the range which have just commenced to lay. Strangers that visit poultry plants should realize that undue excitement is bound to reduce the egg yield and make every effort not to frighten the birds by sudden movements. A strange child running through a poultry house will frighten the hens and seriously reduce the laying for that day.

CAREFULLY LOOK OVER SEED

Corn Should Be Graded Before It Is Shelled to Secure Uniformity in Size and Shape.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Shelled corn is not easily graded and all seed corn should therefore be looked over carefully before the ears are shelled. The grading is done to secure uniformity of size and shape in each lot of kernels, so that they will be dropped evenly from the corn-planter when it is set for special lots of seed.

If the seed ears vary as to size of kernel they should be separated into two or three grades, according to the type of grain they bear. These grades should be shelled separately—always by hand and not by a mechanical sheller—and then tested in the corn planter. After finding the numbers on the planter plates which drop the kernels most uniformly, each lot should be numbered with corresponding figures. All this should be done when work is slack in the winter and before the spring rush begins.

Be sure there is enough for two years' planting. You may need it yourself if the first planting is drowned out; and there never was a time when there was not a demand for seed corn known to be good.

Back-Door Methods

By Helen Gregg

(Copyright, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)

"If you ever expect to make a go as society editor," said the city editor, looking over the top of his horn spectacles and not taking the trouble to take the cigarette from the place where it adhered to his lower lip, "you've got to learn the back-door method. Get the dramatic editor to give you tickets for bum shows that none of us want to see, and hand them out to the telephone operators in some of the swell hotels. In return, they will listen to conversations when the swell dames in their places call anyone up. Kid the ladies' maids in the dressing rooms when you go to charity balls, and get next to the hair-dressers and manicure girls that are employed by the society women who don't have their own maids. Of course, the big-bugs themselves won't take the trouble to talk to you," and there was an emphasis on the "you" that was very belittling to Clarice Daw, newly installed as society editor of the News World.

Sometimes, in spite of the city editor's judgment, the "big-bugs" did talk to Clarice. If they ever mentioned her at all to each other it was to speak of her as a "nice little thing." Very pretty though she was, she managed never to be striking when she attended society functions, and though more than one husband or son would gladly have talked to her instead of the more eligible women of their own set, Clarice knew too much to let them. She preferred the back-door method of getting news. If she were forced to consult the "big-bugs" at all, she had learned that the oldish women when approached with considerable but discreet flattery yielded up the facts she wanted to know better than anyone else. But Clarice had made the discovery that there is no one in the world that is so flattered by the attention of a young and pretty woman as an old woman, especially when that attention is accompanied by complete obliviousness of the existence of that aging one's husband or son.

On the occasion of the big war benefit bazaar that was to be given out at Colonel James Drew's country estate late in the autumn, Clarice was urged to "do her durndest" by the city editor. He promised to give the event the most conspicuous position on the front page, of course, provided there was not another revolution in Russia or a cabinet minister did not resign or something of that sort. "It's to be the biggest social event of the season," he told her, "and, besides, there is a very good reason why we want to have Drew think the News World is the best sheet in town."

"Well, I'm sure there is every reason why he should," protested Clarice whose loyalty to the paper for which she worked was complete.

Clarice circled hurriedly round the large drawing rooms where the various booths had been set up and then roamed through the protected gardens of the old estate and down linden lanes and through hemlock groves and in and out a Japanese garden, where the various money-extracting schemes were established. She noted on the tiny sheets of paper that she held inconspicuously in her hand the gowns of the various distinguished women whose faces had come to be very familiar to her. But, reflected Clarice, gowns wouldn't be enough for a first-page story. She wished that a fire might break out in a wing of the house or that someone would fall into the pool in the Japanese garden so that someone else might make a heroic rescue. But nothing like that happened. Then Clarice remembered the back-door method.

Sheltered in a grape arbor that ran at right angles from the hedge that bounded the kitchen yard was an elaborately set-up bar. Although, perforce, all the drinks there dispensed were of the soft variety. The bar was entirely attended by men, who stood smoking and shivering there in the arbor—apparently their sanctuary from too much femininity. Mayhap behind those bottles of ginger ale were some others not listed on the enormous, facetiously worded list of drinks that was fastened conspicuously over the impromptu bar. Clarice knew, of course, that interesting though such a revelation might be, it would never do to make the interest of her article depend on such information.

What did focus her attention was the presence of two hard-working men in white linen coats who mixed various concoctions with all the expertness of professionals. They were the only servants that Clarice had yet been able to discover. She knew that if she could get hold of one of the servants of the Drew household she could extract what information she wanted. She therefore sidled her way over towards the bar in the arbor taking care that none of the dowagers, whose patronage proved so valuable to her, should see her taking steps in the direction of the group where most every one's husband was standing.

She therefore approached the arbor from the kitchen side of the house and was not perceived. The younger of the two barkeeps saw her approach, and, with the intuitive knowledge of ... disinclination to draw any nearer to the group of men, slipped to the other side of the hedge.

"I know you are very busy," she said. She realized at once that the man knew who she was and guessed her errand. But then most servants of the large establishments did know her and—perhaps because of the "bum theater tickets"—rather liked her. She had never, that she remembered, had any direct transaction with this one. "Is there anything doing here? I'm looking for a scoop for the News World—you know, something that none of the other papers have. How have your drinks been selling?"

The barkeep smiled knowingly and said: "Yes, madam," and "I'll see, madam." Then, cogitating for a moment, "I don't believe as 'ow the colonel wanted it to be published but the men here patronizing this bar—all strictly soft drinks, mind you—have pledged two million dollars among them to build a big American hospital in France. It's rather interesting as 'ow it is 'appened at a dry bar with all such men as J. P. Astorbilt and Lancaster Stevens a standing out and shivering here over their lemon pop. It's almost pathetic, Miss, isn't it?"

Clarice's eyes showed right away that she scented the germ for a sensational story. The amount of money alone was enough to put it on the first page—and then the grim humor of the chilly arbor and the lemon pop would add the touch of local color. "I could give you all the names of the men as are a-doin' it," suggested the barkeep gravely.

A shadow of doubt came over Margaret's face, and she fumbled the small sheets in the palm of her hand. "But if Colonel Drew isn't ready to have it announced?" she faltered. "I don't think I could use it unless he consented."

The barkeep watched her narrowly.

"Perhaps as 'ow I could get 'is consent," he said. "I didn't think a reporter of the News World would hesitate just on account o' not getting consent. It's gratifyin' now and then to find a paper that has such consideration."

"The News World is that kind of paper," said Clarice solemnly.

So it was arranged between Clarice and the barkeep that she should return at the break-up of the bazaar and in the meantime he would see whether or not the colonel would consent to giving the news. She returned and received a favorable verdict which sent the color to her cheeks and the sparkle of success to her pretty eyes. She asked the barkeep whether she could have the big sign with the facetious list of drinks. She thought their artist could copy it for a cut to go with the story and because it was too unwieldy, the barkeep thought, for her to carry back to the office in the street car he arranged with one of the chauffeurs to let him take out one of the cars in which to motor her back to town. Yes, he, the barkeep—a butler in the house—knew how to manage a car, and when Clarice was quite sure that Colonel Drew wouldn't mind having him take the car she consented to go with him. To refuse might have hurt his feelings and after all why should she—poor, ill-paid society reporter that she was—be too proud to sit beside a butler of the establishment of Col. James Drew? She sincerely hoped that none of the approving dowagers would see her thus conducting herself.

The barkeep helped her out of the car and gave her the poster. And as he left her at the curbstone there was a look—an eager, wistful look as she thanked him for his kindness to her—that made her feel that after all social distinctions were an absurdity. After all, thought she, as she was trying to collect her ideas to write the article that was to scoop the other papers and make for herself a name on the News World—why shouldn't she like a butler—it was a dog's life being a reporter. She was sick of the noises of the office. She wondered whether butlers who had wives were permitted to have them live with them on the estate. Perhaps they had snug little cottages. She had heard that Colonel Drew was very generous. Of one thing she was quite sure and that was that the butler would not forget her—"

"So you got a good story, hey?" the city editor asked her. "I know by your expression. You look so happy about it. How d'ye do it?"

"Back-door method of course," retorted Clarice, as she arranged the paper in her typewriter.

It was two months later and there had been great excitement in the office of the News World. The paper had been bought by Col. James Drew—a consummation which had been devoutly wished by the editors for some time. A new society reporter had come and the city editor was giving her instructions.

"In general, I'd say the back-door method is the best," he said. "But I don't know. Our last society reporter went right to headquarters. That's how she met Colonel Drew and made him fall in love with her. She told me at the time a barkeep gave her her story of the big bazaar, but bless my heart it was the colonel himself and he even brought her all the way to the office that first day, driving his own car. But then Clarice was a different sort from the ordinary. I always told her to go to headquarters. Anybody would want to talk to a girl like that."

Not in His Diet.

"Your office girl takes two hours for lunch and you take only 30 minutes."

"Yes."

"Why is that?"

"I guess it is because I can get along without a movie for dessert."

INDIANA STATE NEWS

Evansville.—The Ohio river continues to rise while ice held fast in the gorge between Evansville and Newburg. Flood rescue work is reported from many points above Evansville and farmers were hurriedly fleeing to escape the new flood which will come with the warm weather and thawing snows. The bottom lands around the mouth of Green river are inundated and a Red Cross party from Evansville rescued several persons from their homes which were menaced by the ice, which is following the waters across the cut-off which is now carrying water from the river here past the ice gorge and which empties into the river again near Henderson, Ky.

Jeffersonville.—County sheriffs all over the state are being notified in answer to inquiries that they should hold all prisoners committed to the Indiana reformatory for a time until arrangements may be made. There are some seventy or eighty inmates who have been authorized for parole and are due to go out. These will leave just as soon as clothing can be obtained. When the board of trustees meets a large number more will be paroled and an effort will be made to get these out as quickly as possible, work being plentiful at this time.

Hammond.—Real estate operators here have been informed that the Illinois Central railroad is to build the largest terminal transfer yards in the world on a tract of 2,000 acres of land, situated between Homewood and Harvey, Ill., just across the state line from Hammond. The deal is said to have been closed. The plans call for the construction of ten subways under the yards, and eight gravity pumps. Work on four of the pumps is to be started immediately, and work on clearing the land will begin soon.

Lafayette.—Rumors rife in Indiana the last few weeks that poisonous pollen had been placed in small grain seed supplies or would be put in them before planting time the coming spring by German plotters has caused considerable stir among farmers of the state. While botanists in the agricultural experiment station of Purdue university scout the theory of pollen being spread in the oats or other small grain seeds, they state that smut or other disease germs might be mixed in seed stocks with disastrous effects.

Indianapolis.—All consumers of coal in Indiana will have to depend primarily on coal mined in this state for their supply of fuel next winter. This will result from the establishment of a zone system for the distribution of coal which is being worked out by the federal fuel administration, according to operators of Indiana mines who have returned from Washington, where they attended a conference with H. A. Garfield, federal fuel administrator.

Gary.—Many farmers in Lake and Porter counties after imposing an eight-day milk embargo on Gary and other Lake county cities, have relented. Milk again is available but at the old price. Northern Indiana farmers, however, plan to continue their war with the big Chicago distributors. They stopped the milk famine here, they said, because it was unjust to make war on local dealers who did not protest against price.

Kokomo.—The final verdict of "not guilty," returned by the jury in the Miami circuit court in the case of the State vs. Ruse, ends the only stock poisoning case ever prosecuted in Howard county. The case has been pending nearly three years, the grand jury indictment charging Thomas A. Ruse with poisoning seven dairy cows belonging to his neighbor, Aaron Deardoroff, having been returned in 1915.

Evansville.—The Southern Indiana Electrical association indorsed the use of the trade acceptance, in place of the open ledger account, and urged each member to immediately apply it to his business. The association is composed of members from Evansville, Mount Vernon, Poseyville, Fort Branch, Princeton, Oakland City, Tell City, Cannelton, Huntingburg, Jasper, Vincennes, Washington, Mitchell and Owensville.

Indianapolis.—Stoughton A. Fletcher, president of the Fletcher American National bank here, was appointed by W. A. Heath, chairman of the Federal Reserve bank of Chicago, as a member of a committee to co-operate with the Federal Reserve bank in its relation to the "capital issues committee," created by the treasury department to approve new issues of corporate and municipal securities during the term of war.

Evansville.—A service flag of 16 stars was dedicated at the Simpson M. E. church here, one of the stars being for James Bethel Gresham, one of the first three Americans to die in the fighting in France. The services were largely attended. The flag was presented in a speech by Mayor Bosse and the response was made by Rev. J. W. Lenig, pastor.

Rushville.—The first district meeting in Indiana for the third Liberty loan campaign was held here. Each county in this loan district was represented by a number of enthusiastic workers who pledged their loyal support for their respective counties in the coming campaign.

South Bend.—If it is possible to do so, South Bend will, during the coming summer, store 50,000 tons of coal for use next winter. Arrangements for this storage were started by L. P. Hardy, fuel administrator. The warm weather has relieved the suffering due to the coal famine.

Washington, D. C.—Indiana business interests must look to the West and South for their commercial and industrial activities during the entire year of 1918. This is the advice given by the members of the federal commission on car service to the business men of Indiana. While the firms producing war materials will always receive first consideration in Eastern transportation, the members of the commission express the opinion that it would not be the part of wisdom for Indiana business men to expect to carry on a large civilian commerce with the eastern part of the United States. Several reasons are assigned for this belief. It is pointed out that the unfavorable weather conditions probably will continue for some weeks, but even with this feature eliminated, as it will be with the coming of spring, the outlook for Indiana shipping to the East is not at all bright.

Danville.—Although he bravely fought in the Civil war, has been receiving a pension from the government for many years and is a member of the National Soldiers' home here, Albert Craus, age eighty-nine, finds that he is an alien German enemy and must register as such. At the same time, he says he is one of the most patriotic residents of Danville. Until a few days ago he believed he was in every sense a citizen of this country. Mr. Craus came to America in 1854, settling at Newport, Ind. There he took out his first papers. Following this action, which he believed was all that was required of him, he voted for Lincoln, in 1860. When war broke out, although he had lived here only a short time, he enlisted and fought throughout the conflict. He was once in the German army.

Indianapolis.—Times begin to look bad for dogs in Indiana—especially for those that may arouse suspicion of a sheep owner. Farmers have been called upon to care for about 1,000,000 more sheep this year than ever before, and they say it cannot be done with the dogs running loose. Consequently since it is a wartime necessity to raise sheep both for their wool and mutton a general dog cleanup is in sight. The state council of defense has appointed a committee to enforce the law, and an opinion has been obtained from Ele Stansbury, attorney general. Dogs in Indiana have caused more sheep loss than all of the diseases of sheep combined. Last year 70,000 pounds of wool, or enough to clothe a regiment of soldiers, was lost on account of sheep-killing dogs. Nine thousand sheep were killed with a loss of $68,000.

Indianapolis.—About 5,100 men are included in the final 35 per cent of the first draft quota that will be called to camp from Indiana February 23, according to Adjt. Gen. H. B. Smith. Washington advices said Indiana's quota would be 6,284, but General Smith said the difference in figures probably could be accounted for by the fact that about 5 per cent of the selects had entered the service by special permission. He denied reports that many men of this quota have enlisted.

Evansville.—Henry Ray, a Spencer county farmer and admirer of Senator LaFollette, who waived a preliminary hearing on the charge of obstructing enlistment in the army, has been released on $5,000 bond. The security he presented to United States Commissioner Hull consisted of $5,000 worth of Liberty bonds, which he purchased through a bank by mortgaging his farm. He promised the commissioner always to wear an American flag and to render the government any assistance possible.

Boonville.—Fifteen hundred young men, the selectives of Warrick county who are not in the service, in two big meetings held here, adopted a constitution and bylaws and took an oath of war service. This organization, which is the first of its kind in the country, was proposed by George X. Reed, county agent. He is planning to form a similar organization in every county in the United States.

Columbus.—Rev. Tipton Spurling in the city court here was fined $1 and costs and sentenced to 90 days on the state penal farm on a charge of failure to provide for his wife and children. The case was filed under the lazy husband law. The preacher insisted to the court that he was not lazy, but admitted that he did only such jobs as he was directed by the Lord to do, and left it to the Lord to provide.

Petersburg.—Many of the residents of Petersburg have been eating cheap fish during the last few days. While cutting a hole in the ice on the edge of the government ditch three miles west of here, Harvey Hays found a big fish frozen in the ice. He cleared off the snow, and soon found others. In a few minutes he had chopped out ten big carp and buffalo. All were frozen.

Greensburg.—A corps of extension workers from Purdue university, accompanied by a carload of live stock, charts and other material for demonstrations in the various lectures, were in Greensburg in charge of the farmers' short course. Despite the weather, there was a large attendance at each session, and there was much interest in the various lectures and classes.

Lafayette.—The timely arrival of the fire department prevented the destruction by fire of the $50,000 warehouse of the National Fruit Juice company of this city. The fire was extinguished by chemicals after small damage had been done. The roof of the building was burning when the fire alarm was turned in and an investigation by the firemen and police showed that a large pile of oil-soaked waste had been placed against a large door and fired. The police and sheriff are trying to run down the guilty party. More than 50,000 gallons of apple juice was stored in the building.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1917, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR FEBRUARY 24.

JESUS TEACHES BY PARABLES—THE GROWTH OF THE KINGDOM.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 4:21-34.

GOLDEN TEXT—The earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah, as the waters cover the sea.—Isa. 11:9.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Isa. 11:1-10.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 13:24-50 (vv. 31, 32); Isa. 2:3-4; Ezek. 47:1-12; Rev. 21:1-8; 22-27; Chap. 22:1-5; Rev. 21:1-8.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus telling a story about sowing.

MEMORY VERSE—Jesus advanced in wisdom and stature and in favor with God and man.—Luke 2:52.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—The importance of small beginnings.

Jesus is now revealing to his disciples the kingdom in secret which they were later to reveal in public. Nothing which he now reveals should be hid, and he is also teaching that, if we do not use that what is committed to us, we lose it.

I. Hearing (vv. 21-25). It is an obligation resting upon each of us who has the light of truth that he should so set it before men that it can be seen that men may be enlightened, cheered and served by it (Matt. 5:14-16; Phil. 1:15-16). The secret things of our lives will be brought to light some day. Ears are given with which we are to hear, and possession of hearing involves the responsibility as to what we hear. "The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth" (Rom. 1:16), but believing comes through "hearing" (Rom. 10:17). In this there is a missionary suggestion for our teachers, but there is also a caution as to what and how we hear. "Take heed what we hear." Many today are being swept into all kinds of damning heresies because they do not follow this warning (2 Tim. 3:1-13). Not only are we to be good listeners, but we must be doers as well (Jas. 1:22). This parable of the lamp follows closely upon the parable of the sower in our last lesson. "God, who first created light, and Christ, in whom was life, and the life was the light of men," both together are ones whom we are equally obliged to see, and hear and obey. To impress the duty of this seeing, hearing and using of light upon his disciples, Jesus reminds them of some familiar things. A candle is not placed under a bushel nor under a bed, but on a candle stick, where it may be seen of all. If our virtues go not forth from us, it will be as though we had hidden them from the world. "To him that heareth right shall more be given," (v. 24) but for him that hath not and seeth not, from him shall be taken. He that hath not is he who neglects his opportunities, and "from him shall be taken even that which he hath." In this we see a spiritual multiplication, and also a spiritual subtraction, deterioration.

II. Growing. (1) Secrecy vv. 26-29). This is a parable of faith and hope, found only in Mark. Again the good seed is referred to, but in this case unseen growth receives the emphasis, for the seed will spring and grow up, though we know not how. It is comforting to think that, if we sow the true seed, it grows while we sleep (v. 27.) The best selected seed (the holy word) is essential for results. All of our seed must have this silent period for growth. It is the earth that brings forth the fruit of herself through the energies and powers with which God endows it. These powers are wonderful. We do not understand them, but there is order and symmetry in growth. First the blade, then the ear, and after that the full corn in the ear. Then is the harvest, the purpose of the seed having been accomplished. Mark alone gives us this parable, and it is given in close relation to the parable of the sower and of the wheat and tares. Jesus is the great harvester (v. 29), and knows the right time to reap the grain, the moment when it is "ripe" (v. 29 R. V.). Then he putteth in the sickle.

(2) There is also a marvelous outward growth of the kingdom (vv. 30-32). There is the closest relation between the parable of the mustard seed and the two parables that precede. In Matthew the parable of the mustard seed is used in relation to the kingdom of heaven, which is the sphere of the Christian profession. Here it is used of the kingdom of God, which is spiritual. Why is it used of both? The explanation, according to Doctor Scofield, lies in the fact that the kingdom of God in this age and the kingdom of heaven have this in common, that from an insignificant beginning they had a rapid growth.

If the abnormal growth of this common garden shrub illustrates divine increase, why is it not more glorious? There is not here anything like the greatness of the Assyrian and Babylonian empires. (Ezek. 31:3-6; Dan. 4:20-22). Is the significance of the birds good or evil? Great Babylon, the figure of a professing Christian body in guilty connection with the kings of the earth, becomes "a cage of every unclean and hateful bird" (Rev. 18:2). The "mixed" condition of the kingdom of heaven has brought together diverse elements of good and bad.

Our boys are defending this country on the high seas and on the land. Our own defense against a common enemy is to keep the system clean by ridding the body of the toxins, or poisons, which are bred in the intestines. When you feel tired, sleepy, headachy, when your breath is offensive, or pimples appear on the face and neck, it is time to recognize the danger and protect your bodily health by taking something for the liver such as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets.

The machinery of the body needs to be oiled, kept in good condition, just as the guns or machinery of a ship. Why should a human person neglect his own machinery more than that of his automobile or his guns? Yet most people do neglect themselves. Their tongue has a dark brown color, skin sallow, breath bad, yet they fail to see that their machinery needs attention.

Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets have been known for nearly half a century. They are made of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap, made into a tiny pellet and coated with sugar. They are standard and efficacious. You can obtain them at any drug store in vials for twenty-five cents. Ask for Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets—and get no other.

NOT QUITE WHAT THEY MEANT

Frenchman and German Alike Too Literal in Their Use of an Unfamiliar Language.

The lateral translation of words and grammatical construction of sentences in the different languages is productive of some very amusing situations.

A gentleman whose wife was noted for her domesticity was seated next to a Frenchman at a dinner party. Desiring to compliment his neighbor and enter into conversation, he remarked: "Your wife, she is very homely."

But it remained for a German hotelkeeper to cap the climax. Having taken a trip on a train he was much impressed by the brakeman calling "Next station ——. Don't forget your packages." Desiring to save himself the annoyance of forwarding articles left by departing guests, but mixing his English words with his German grammar, he put up a sign where it could not be missed by them:

"Wait! Look! Have you anything left!"

HEALTH RESTORED

Serious Kidney Trouble Was Removed by Doan's and Results Have Been Permanent.

"Kidney trouble put me in a bad way," says Thomas A. Knight, 624 N. Ninth St., East St. Louis, Ill. "It came on with pain across my back and the attacks kept getting worse until I had a spell that laid me up. Morphine was the only relief and I couldn't move without help. The kidney secretions were scanty, painful and filled with sediment.

Mr. Knight

"I was unable to leave the house, couldn't rest and became utterly exhausted. The only way I could take ease was by bolstering myself up with pillows. For three months I was in that awful condition and the doctor said I had gravel. Doan's Kidney Pills brought me back to good health and I have gained wonderfully in strength and weight."

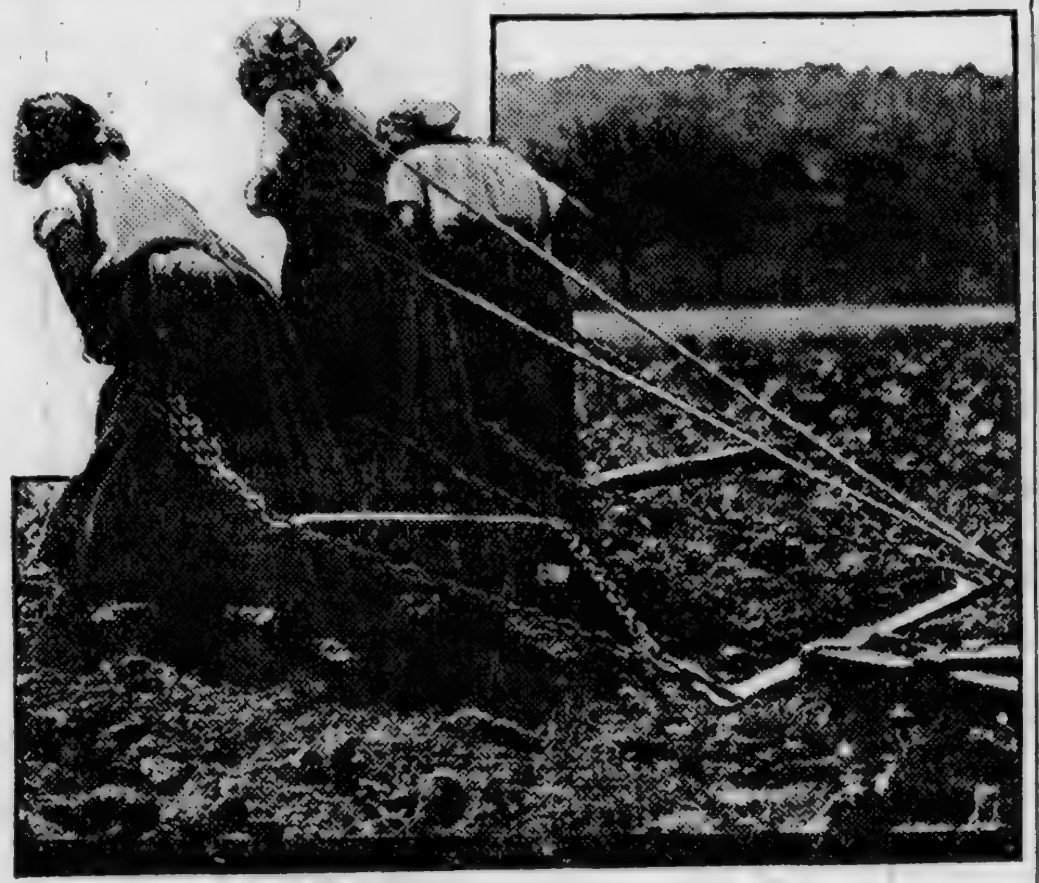
Heroic Women of France

They Have Even Stepped Into the Place of Work Animals

By DR. ALONZO TAYLOR.

My words are not powerful enough to do even scanty justice to the most heroic figure in the modern world, and of ages past—the woman of France. Of the healthy men who are engaged in the military service in France, practically all are engaged either in transportation or in the manufacture of munitions, leaving the agriculture absolutely to the women. Not only this, but they have stepped into the place of work animals; you can go into any section of France today and see women of magnificent, noble womanhood hitched to the plow and cultivating the soil. All of the agriculture rests upon their shoulders. The home, always an extremely efficient home, maintains a few old men, the wounded and the tubercular. Uncomplaining, with high devotion, with an attitude that amounts almost to religious exaltation, the woman of France bears the burden.



Women Doing Work of Horses in the Fields.

Now, conditions being as they are, does it lie within the heart of the American people to preserve and hold to every convenience of our life at the expense of adding an additional burden to the womanhood of France? This is the exact question that is involved in our substitution of other cereals in place of wheat.

The women of France must be enabled to hold up the morale of the French soldier until next spring. The morale of the house decides the morale of the soldier in the fighting line. We can do this by giving to them the greatest possible freedom in their food supply, and of this, wheat is the chief factor.

HINTS FOR THE POULTRY GROWERS

In addition to the grain and the table scraps in feeding chickens for meat and eggs, it is well to feed a dry mash. This dry mash is composed of various ground grains and is placed in a mash hopper or box from which the hens can help themselves. The advantage of feeding such a mash is that the hens always have access to feed, and this tends to make up for any faulty, inexperienced, or insufficient feeding. The hens do not like the dry mash so well that they are likely to overeat, but it will supply a source of feed in case they are not getting enough. The dry mash also provides a suitable medium for feeding beef scrap, a certain amount of which may or may not be necessary, depending upon the amount of meat scraps available in the table waste. If the hens show a tendency to become overfat it may be desirable to close the mash hopper during a part of the day and allow them access to it only during a certain period, preferably the afternoon. A good dry mash is composed of equal parts by weight of cornmeal, wheat bran, wheat middlings, and beef scrap. Another good mash is composed of three parts by weight of cornmeal and one part beef scrap. Still a third mash, which has given excellent results, is composed of one pound of wheat bran, one pound of wheat middlings, 6.5 pounds of beef scraps, and 16.5 pounds of cornmeal. The beef scrap used in the dry mash is usually the most expensive ingredient, but it is a very essential part of the mash and very efficient for egg production. It should not be eliminated or reduced unless the quantity of meat in the table scraps is considerable or unless some other product can be substituted for it. Fish scrap, when available, may replace the beef scrap, or cottonseed meal can be used to replace one-half the beef scrap in the mash. No attempt should be made to replace more than half the beef scrap with cottonseed meal, as the results in egg production and in the quality of the eggs will be unsatisfactory.

Green cut bone can often be purchased from the butcher. This material when procured fresh makes an excellent substitute for beef scrap. It should be purchased in small quantities, as it can not be kept fresh for any length of time and when spoiled may cause severe bowel trouble. It is best fed in a trough not oftener than every other day, allowing about one-half ounce per bird. Should severe or continued looseness of the bowels follow the feeding of green cut bone it should be discontinued or the quantity reduced.

Vegetable tops, parings, and other vegetable refuse supply a valuable and very necessary green feed for the hens. Lawn clippings also are a valuable green feed. They can be fed as soon as cut, or they may be dried or cured, stored in bags, and saved until winter, when they can be soaked in warm water and fed in that condition or be mixed with some of the mash or with the table scraps.

"Buddeized Milk" Can Be Kept Twenty-One Days, Two Physicians Declare

There is a way of preserving milk for 21 days without spoiling it in any way. Health Commissioner John Dill Robertson and Dr. W. A. Evans, former commissioner, testified to this before the Chicago milk commission.

It's called "Buddeized milk," and it's treated to a 1 per cent solution of peroxide, and then heated to 120 degrees Fahrenheit.

The use of this milk would not only bring down the price, Doctor Robinson testified, but it would certainly prevent any possibility of a milk famine when the railroads are stormbound.

The use of the "Buddeized" milk, the two doctors said, permits wholesale buying by the housewife, and permits the bringing of milk from greater distances. It will permit a city to get a price that is determined on a butterfat and cheese factory basis—which is much less, they say, than the present prices.

Illinois Professor Says Acres Must Yield Double —Farmers to Win the War

"We must speed up the farm, making every unproductive acre productive and every productive acre more productive," says Prof. Ten Eyck of Illinois. "To double the acre yield on many fields now being tilled," he says, "is possible by giving the proper attention to the simple fundamentals of crop production, such as drainage, seed selection, more timely and thorough tillage, the proper rotation of crops and the fertilization of the soil.

"Fertilization of the soil means the use of any available plantfood such as manure, legumes and commercial fertilizers. All of these forms should be used this year. The same raw materials used in making fertilizers such as nitrate of soda, potash and sulphuric acid are used in war munitions. It is also difficult to ship many farm supplies on account of the freight car shortage. For these reasons all spring supplies should be ordered now."

"Upon the farmer rests in large measure the final responsibility of winning the war in which we are now involved," says the Birmingham (Ala.) Sentinel; "therefore, the man who tills the soil and supports the soldier in the field and the family at home, is rendering as noble and patriotic a service as the man who bears the brunt of battle."

A Group of Salads.

In sections of our country where cauliflower is reasonable in price it may be served occasionally as a winter salad, making a most attractive one. Wash the cauliflower carefully, tie in a piece of cheesecloth and cook in boiling salted water. When done remove from the cloth and sprinkle with lemon juice and cool. When ready to serve separate into flowerets, arrange on a dish, sprinkle with chopped parsley and serve with French dressing, made by using three tablespoonfuls of olive oil, a tablespoonful of vinegar, half a teaspoonful of salt and a few dashes of cayenne. Beat well and pour over the cauliflower.

Carefully remove canned salmon from the can and arrange in a nest of lettuce, then pour over a spoonful of lemon juice and cover with mayonnaise just when it is ready to serve. Chopped pickle may be sprinkled over the salmon if preferred, omitting the lemon juice.

Herring Salad.

Heat until well-heated through, three smoked herring, then remove the heads and skin, split and take out the back bones and cut in small bits, or shred with a fork. Put into a salad bowl, one small chopped onion, two hard-cooked eggs, chopped, one boiled potato cut fine, a teaspoonful of chopped parsley, salt, pepper and three tablespoonfuls of vinegar with two of oil; serve well-mixed. Boiled beet may be used for decoration.

Nut and Celery Salad.

Boil a cupful of walnut meats in broth, then remove the skins, by letting them stand in cold water a few minutes, dry and rub in a towel to remove the skin. Add a pint of finely cut celery to the nuts, a tablespoonful of grated orange rind or finely-minced rind, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley; serve with French dressing and garnish with celery tips.

Cream Johnny Cake.

Mix and sift one-half teaspoonful of salt, one level teaspoonful of soda, half a cupful of flour and two cupfuls of white cornmeal; add one cupful of sour cream, one cupful of sour milk and two well beaten eggs. Beat to a smooth batter and pour half an inch thick into a greased shallow pan. Bake in a hot oven.

Tomato Salad.

Fresh sliced tomatoes, a thick slice for each serving covered with finely chopped celery and onion mixed, and serve with French or Mayonnaise dressing. This is always a well-received salad.

No Connection Between the Weather and Moon's Changes

People who rely on the moon as a weather indicator (writes a correspondent) must have very short memories, for accurate comparisons prove conclusively that there is no connection whatever between the weather and the moon's changes of phase.

Professor Schuster analyzed a whole century's weather records, and, as a result, was unable to trace any lunar period in them. Several authorities are agreed, however, that there is a tendency for clouds to disperse as a full moon comes to the meridian of any place; but it is a far cry from that to the definite belief that the weather changes with a change in the lunar phases.

These changes, of course, can be predicted for years in advance with perfect accuracy, and if the weather depended on them, weather forecasting would be the simplest of all the sciences, instead of the most difficult.

AND NOW THEY ARE COOKING TOBACCO TO MAKE IT BETTER

For a good many years The American Tobacco Company have been conducting a series of experiments having as their object the improvement of smoking tobaccos.

And it is interesting to know that one of the greatest of their discoveries was one of the simplest, and that was, that cooking or toasting tobacco improved it in every way, just as cooking most foods improves them.

They took a real Burley tobacco, grown in this country; toasted it as you would toast bread; moistened it to replace the natural moisture driven off by toasting; made it into cigarettes, called them "LUCKY STRIKE, the toasted cigarette," and offered them to the public.

The result has been the greatest demand ever created for any tobacco product in a similar length of time.

The change produced by toasting is not only most wholesome, but the flavor is greatly improved, just as cooking improves meat, for example.—Adv.

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 Is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

You Fathers of our Soldier Boys.

Just for a moment
Let's close our eyes
And hold one dollar
In our hand,
And take a journey
Over winter seas
To where your boy
Is billeted
Somewhere in France.
And then lets follow him
Through winter storms
And muddy roads
And sodden fields
And sleepless nights
And thoughts of home.
Let's stand with him
Behind the lines
And listen to the noise of war
That cries its way
And whines its lust
For human life.
Let's go with him
On that dread day
On which he goes
Beyond the line
Into the strife
Where humans sing
And bullets sing
Their "Song of Hate".
And some where
As we travel on
Along the way
That he has gone
There comes a chance
That he may fall
While we are there.
And then
We'll open up our hand,
And hold our dollar
High above
And cry for help
And none will come.
And that's the dream
I'd have you dream,
Back here at home.
And then awake!
And put one dollar
In your hand
And take it
To a Red Cross place
And turn it in.
And then some day
Some where in France
A surgeon,
Or a Red Cross nurse,
May stand
Upon the very spot
You stood upon
While in your dream.
An idle coin
That you had held
They'll hold
In what it bought
At home

A transposition of an article in Red Cross Bulletin from Washington, D. C.

Women!

When "father" donates his dollar, do you want it to stay and mold in our treasury or do you believe it would be better to buy material and make hospital supplies and surgical dressings? Money may pour in to us but if women will not work, of what use is it to the surgeon and nurse? Do you know that more than half of the women locally engaged in this work have no sons, brothers or husbands in the service or draft? Do you know there is quite a per cent of women whose homes are or will be directly affected by the war that are absolutely indifferent to these calls for helpers? A peculiar situation.

We have heard of one woman who does not do this work because the thoughts of what the bandages and hospital supplies will be used for "makes her so nervous". Such twaddle almost takes our patience. Are we, as American women, going to simplify our home life and do this work for our boys as our government expects or are we going to fail in the time of our country's need and be cringing slackers? The choice is ours. This war is showing up the pimples on our population as surely as a search light on a dark night. It is true that we are doing good work, but as long as there is a dollar in our treasury and a woman sitting with folded hands, we might do better. Again we urge you to join us in the sewing-room or the class that makes bandages.

On account of the Farmers' Institute the sewing room will be open this week on Thursday afternoon, and on account of W. C. T. U. Meeting the Surgical Dressing Class will work Saturday afternoon.

The work in the Surgical Dressing Class is moving along in fine shape. We have made eighty odd bandages. This number includes the many-tailed, triangle, abdominal and the T-bandage. This latter, is the most difficult of all muslin bandages. This week the class will make more T bandages and the jaw-bandage.

The home talent drama, for the benefit of our Red Cross, will be given about Mar. 1st.

The Ladies Aid Societies and women individually are taking great interest in the making of layettes. The empty sundry bag, mentioned last week, is supposed to contain 6 large, 6 medium, 6 small safety pins, 1 cake of soap, 1 wash cloth, knit or bath toweling, 1 box talcum powder, a small roll of old linen pieces, 6 needles in a piece of flannel, spool of white sewing cotton and a thimble. Extras such as brush, comb, etc., will be gratefully accepted. Mrs. Arden Imhoff has made a nice donation consisting of one dozen cakes of soap and two dozen cans of talcum.

On Thursday, Feb. 7, the Coburntown Ladies' Aid met with their minister, L. W. Spayd and wife, in their St. Joe home. The day was the finest of the first nice days after the long spell of zero weather. The ladies not only brought their husbands to enjoy the day with them, but provisions for a splendid feast, of which forty or more persons partook. The day proved profitable not alone for the Ladies' treasury, but for the minister's store house also: for the substantial edibles left with him will furnish good living for some weeks to come.

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Company K. 152 Infantry
Camp Shelby, Miss. Range "A"

Dear Parents and Sister:

Just a line this morning to let you know I am feeling fine and dandy, after our very strenuous march from camp to range "A", leaving camp in the rain our 152 infantry with pack of 50 pounds marched ten miles over a swamp road barely passable in dry weather. The boys all came through with true soldier spirit, standing around the camp fire, with nothing to be thankful for but more rain, they made the woods ring with, "Oh boy, oh joy, where do go from here?" But old Sol has appeared in all his glory and today we are having one of the grandest days.

How are you getting along with your work? I am so sorry I cannot be there to shoulder my share, but we can easily see that a higher being shapes our destinies and so it is up to us to take life and consequences as they come, but it surely must be for the best, as it has given me a much higher appreciation of home and friends it has taught me to be a better man, one who can think sanely and strongly how to sacrifice with out grumbling how to save, how to appreciate everything, so in the end it is all for my welfare, giving me the right foundation for my future life.

Does any of the boys from home leave in the next draft? I see by the papers they are all anxious to get out, however I sure don't care personally I am glad I was the first, for not only am I getting the very best treatment and promotions, and they can't ever look down on me as a slacker, I am proud that I am here, and I want you all to be so to. I am learning a good lesson trusting God and leading a clean life. Thank you for my home training. I am coming back a son you need not be ashamed of. I can't think of a thing that would do the boys as mnch good as a year in training. The army is not half as bad as people think it is. The best place in the world for men who have unfortunately conceived the idea that they are better than his associates, for when he claims that idea he has strayed from the fundamental point of ambition, straying from the path of success. I just can't express how glad I am that I am getting this just when I needed it most, but here I have learned that all men are human to have faith in God and your fellow men. Here we have rich men, poor men, educated and uneducated men and in fact men in every walk and position of life and no one is thought of as better than his associates. Of course some of us progress and advance but you earn it by merit, and even with advancement you are still thought of on the same basis.

I think of you all every day and I know you do of me, but this war question is growing more puzzling every day, so it looks as though we are destined to do our share. Don't think that I am a coward and don't want to go, for I do, we all want to go one can't help but feel that way after all the training we are getting, one feels that he would like to put it into action. Our company to a man took out $10,000 life insurance and I have made mine to mother and if anything happens to her, Elizabeth is next to kin.

Give my regards to everybody and my love for yourselves.

George Hart.

J. H. Leighty left St. Joe, Tuesday noon, for Sheridan, Wyoming, where he has work. This makes the third St. Joe young man located at Sheridan, namely Frank R. Leighty and Frank Hamilton.

Camp Shelby, Hattiesburg, Miss.
Sunday eve.

Dear Folks,

At last I have found my calling. The first sergeant come along the company street to day and he asked me if I didn't want to go into camp and take singing lessons. I told him that I was no good and didn't think anymore about it. He said that it would be easy. After dinner he sent a fellow to my tent and told me to get ready to go, so I packed up and four of us came in. There are four from each company. We go at nine, to-morrow, and then I can tell more about it. It is a whole lot nicer than being out on the range for we won't have anything to do but just go over there. We can get up when we please, so think I will sleep a little later for a few mornings. The only other fellows in camp are a few guards and the cripples. We four fellows have a tent by ourselves and are pretty comfortably located. It seems pretty good to get back as we left four weeks tomorrow.

They have finished a good, big library since we went out there and are finishing a Y. M. C. A., only about a block from our company. The one to which I went to get this paper, is perhaps a half mile away. They aim to have a Y. M. C. A. for about every regiment. That means one Y. M. for about every 3,000 men. I will always be a friend of the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross and similar organizations for they certainly do a lot of good for a fellow. When I went to get this paper, I went into the Library for the first time and they have a big fire place, lots of comfortable chairs, and lots of books and reading desks. It is about the coziest place I have seen around here so I think I will spend considerable time there at night.

Third Liberty Loan.

The third issue of Liberty Bonds for DeKalb county goes a soaring up into the figures in fine shape. Our quota being $1,000,000. Of this amount it has been apportioned among the townships in order to meet the goal. This amount is far in excess to the two proceeding issues and will require the efforts of every one in order to meet the requirements.

The apportionment of the townships near here are as follows:—

Jackson	$64,800
Concord	31,000
Spencer	38,000
Newville	23,000
Wilmington	60,000
St. Joe	11,500

The sale of bonds will be in charge of a chairman in each township.

Wilmington—T. J. Knisely
Concord—S. W. Tustison
Spencer—C. E. Reetenwall
Jackson—Phillip Carper
Newville—Wallace Abel

The third issue will bear four and one-half per cent interest and this liberal rate will be of great aid in the sale of the bonds. The definite date for the next issue has not been determined upon as yet but it will be some time between now and the second week in April.

Are Wedded.

Miss Anna I. Purviance, daughter of Mrs. Anna Purviance of North VanBuren St., and P. W. Haifley, a former resident of Auburn, now living near Spencerville, were quietly married at the Presbyterian manse on South Jackson street, by the bride's pastor, the Rev. A. P. Bourns, Monday. The ceremony was performed at 11 o'clock and the bridal couple was unattended. The bride is one of Auburn's well known young ladies and has many friends in this city. The groom at one time owned the Swineford hotel and is also well known in Auburn. They will live on a farm near Spencerville.-Star.

The total for 1916 was $756,997. The fees collected for the last half of 1917 will shortly be distributed among the ninety-two counties of the state, and DeKalb will receive $559. The apportionment is made, one-third equally among the counties, one-third according to license fees from each county, and one-third according to the number of gravel road miles.

ASK BIG ACREAGE OF SPRING WHEAT

Government Calls on Farmer to Increase Food Supply.

SOUTH SHOULD FEED ITSELF

Agricultural Program for 1918 Urges Necessity for Producing Large Supply of Foods and Feedstuff to Feed America and Its Allies.

Washington, D. C.—The planting of an increased acreage to spring wheat and the production of an increased supply of other food products and of live stock, especially hogs, is recommended in a supplementary food production program issued by the United States department of agriculture.

This program re-emphasizes and amplifies the food-production program for 1918 issued by the department in August, 1917, and other suggestions made in the fall and the first of this year regarding increased pork production and increased production of foodstuffs in the South. Taken in connection with the recommendations previously made, it suggests in full the proposals which the department thinks it desirable to offer with a view to secure enough meat and dairy products, cereals, sugar and other staple and perishable foods, wool and cotton for the nation, its armies, and the allies. It gives suggestions for the approaching spring operations, based upon the latest available information as to the condition of the fall-planted crops of winter wheat and rye and as to the number of meat and dairy animals reported for 1917. They represent the best thought of the specialists of the department who have had the benefit of advice from agricultural leaders throughout the country.

Our Best Efforts Required.

"Notwithstanding an increased production of staple crops in the United States in 1917, there is need for more food," the program states. "Taking into account our own needs, the needs of the nations associated with us in this war, and the needs of friendly neutral nations, our best efforts will be required to provide enough food in 1918. Whether the war continues or not, the demands on this country, because of the increasing population and the needs of Europe will be great. An especially strong demand will be made on this country for meats and live stock. In 1917, notwithstanding the many difficulties encountered, the farmers planted the largest acreages in the history of the nation, harvested record crops of most things except wheat, and succeeded in greatly increasing the number of live stock."

"The situation is such that chief emphasis should be given to the production of the great staple food products, with special stress on wheat and hogs, the leading war foods."

The South is urged to provide food for its own people and feed for its live stock and then to plant as much cotton as can well be cultivated and harvested. To raisers of hogs and beef animals the world need for meats and fats is made clear. Farmers are urged to join with the men on the ranges in providing sheep whose wool is needed to equip soldiers.

The program discusses the farm labor problem, points out the lines of effort for relief, and outlines the activities of the federal and state agencies to furnish assistance.

Spring Wheat.

In dealing with the question of spring wheat, the program states:

The acreage of spring wheat should be increased in order to make certain that we shall have an adequate supply of wheat for our own uses and to meet the needs of the allies.

"While the area of winter wheat sown in 1917 was the largest on record, the condition of the crop, as reported on December 1, was the lowest ever recorded, indicating a probable production of only 540,000,000 bushels. Whether the actual production will be greater or less than the estimate will depend upon conditions prevailing between now and the time of harvest. If there were planted to spring wheat in the United States this year an acreage equal to the sum of the record planting in each spring wheat state within the last ten years, there would be sown approximately 23,300,000 acres. If there should be planted an acreage equal to the sum of the record planting for each state within the last five years there would be sown approximately 21,000,000 acres. The record planting for any year was 20,381,000, in 1911. The acreage for 1917 was 18,511,000.

"The department of agriculture has carefully studied all these records and other data in connection with the present war conditions and needs, and believes that it will be possible this year to secure an acreage in excess of the record acreage which was planted in 1911. It is believed that increased acreages can be secured in states and sections where spring-wheat production is known to be reasonably promising, and that such increases can be made without upsetting farm plans.

It is hoped that many farmers, especially in the northern part of the corn belt, will find it possible to plant five to ten acres additional in wheat. In some cases they will plant more. In a number of states in the eastern and central portions of the country where spring wheat has not been grown in recent years, the crop is now being re-established and it is recommended that this movement be encouraged.

To a small extent the acreage in oats, if necessary, could be reduced in the interest of wheat. Likewise, a very small portion of the acreage which normally would be planted to corn in the northern part of the corn belt might be sown to spring wheat.

If the acreage of spring wheat indicated for some of the states cannot be planted, the barley acreage, which is known to grow better in some localities, might be increased. The use of barley for food is increasing in this country and it is a welcome food in Europe.

Summary of Other Recommendations.

Following is a summary of other important recommendations regarding cereals, meat, poultry, and perishables.

Hogs. The number of hogs should be increased by at least 15 per cent during the year 1918.

Sugar. Effort should be made to maintain the acreage of sugar cane and sugar beets, and to increase these areas in so far as these crops are well established or are necessary to sound agricultural practice.

Production of satisfactory substitutes for sugar, including sorghum, corn and cane sirup, maple products and honey can and should be increased.

Dairy Products. The supply of dairy products should be maintained to meet the needs of this country and to help supply the increasing demands of the allies.

Poultry. Poultry production should be increased greatly, especially in back yards and on farms where waste material is available and the purchase of expensive grains and other material is not required.

Corn. An acreage of corn approximately equal to that of 1917 should be planted, with possible slight reductions in certain sections to free areas for spring wheat.

Oats, Barley, Rice, Buckwheat and Flaxseed. The area in oats should be maintained, especially in regions and on soils which are not so well adapted to other grains, but with a small reduction to provide for increasing the wheat acreage. Barley production should be increased in regions where it grows best, especially in the northern edge of the corn belt and in sections north and west of the belt; and rice, buckwheat and flaxseed production should be maintained and, if possible, increased.

Potatoes. The normal acreage of Irish and sweet potatoes should be maintained in 1918, notwithstanding the large crops in 1917.

Hay, Forage and Pastures. Wherever feasible, the area devoted to hay, forage and silage crops should be increased and these products should be used to a greater extent in place of grains and other concentrates.

Beef Animals. The number of beef animals should be maintained and, in areas where it is clearly the best range and farm practice, should be increased.

Beans, Peas and Peanuts. The production of beans and peas should be increased in regions to which they are adapted, because of their high food value, keeping qualities, and availability for domestic or export trade. Soy beans and peanuts should be increased in order to supplement beans and peas as human food, as a source of much needed oil, and as animal feeds.

Perishables. (a) Market gardens near large consuming centers should be increased so as to meet, as nearly as possible, the needs of the community, and in order to obviate the necessity of transporting such products from distant points.

It is important to do all that is possible to relieve the strain upon transportation facilities.

(b) The planting of home gardens, especially for family needs and for preserving food for future use, again should be emphasized.

(c) The commercial production of perishables generally should be increased above normal wherever it is reasonably clear that transportation and marketing facilities will be available.

What Was in Him.

"Children," said the teacher while instructing the class in composition, "you should not attempt any flights of fancy, but simply be yourselves and write what is in you. Do not imitate any other person's writings or draw inspiration from outside sources."

As a result of this advice Johnny Wise turned in the following composition:

"We should not attempt any flites of fancy, but rite what is in us. In me thare is my stummick, lungs, hart, liver, two apples, one piece of pie, one stick lemon candy and my dinner."—Baltimore Bulletin.

Reached His Capacity.

The first floor of the home was reached at the rear by climbing a flight of stairs. One evening the family came from town with a good many parcels, which the father, mother and son, Eugene, proceeded to carry into the house, Eugene going up the steps first. As they neared the top step the father said, forgetting momentarily that the youngster's arms were full, too, "Open the screen door, son," to which the youngster replied: "I can't papa, I'm all used."

True Gospel of Work.

Work is the glory and delight of life, and the only acceptable excuse for being in this world, and the object of all practical investigations of the principle of fatigue and recovery is to find out, not what is the least possible amount of work that a human being can get along on, but what is the greatest amount that he can do without decreasing his working capacity. Such is the gospel of work, which many of us not of the elect may regard as hard doctrine.—Exchange.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

OUNCE OF PREVENTION—BUCKET OF WATER

Fire on an Unprepared Farm Usually Makes a Clean Sweep.

PREVENT BLAZES ON EVERY FARM

Fire Buckets Should Be Handy in Buildings Not Otherwise Protected.

LOSS ANNUALLY IS IMMENSE

Salt in Water Keeps Emergency Supply From Freezing—Special Fire Pails With Rounded Bottom Are Most Favored.

Millions of dollars' worth of agricultural wealth—much of it food—is destroyed by fire in the United States every year. At normal prices and with an average crop it would take the value of the greater part of the potato crop of the country to offset all that is lost annually through the fires on farms.

This is a dead loss to the nation—for the fact that most individual losers are partially reimbursed through insurance does not in the least reduce the drain on our national resources—and it is a loss that is largely preventable. Simple ways to reduce this great waste are suggested in Farmers' Bulletin 904, "Fire Prevention and Fire Fighting on the Farm," issued for free distribution by the United State department of agriculture.

The fire bucket, according to the writers of the bulletin, is the oldest, simplest and cheapest fire extinguisher, and should be in every farm building and home not equipped with more elaborate fire-fighting equipment.

Round Bottom Buckets Best.

Any kind of bucket filled with water and placed handily is good, but special fire buckets with rounded bottoms like a kettle are best. There is no temptation to use such buckets for ordinary purposes and they are much more likely to be left hung on the brackets or in the round holes cut for them in shelves. Any kind of fire buckets should be specially painted or labeled and never used for any purpose other than fire fighting. They should be placed near entrances and near the top of stairways or ladders where they can easily be reached on entering the building or loft. Several buckets nested in a barrel of water are an effective device.

Needless to say, the fire buckets should always be kept filled by replacing the water lost by evaporation.

If the buckets are covered, water will not evaporate so rapidly nor get full of dust and dirt and become offensive. Water can be kept from freezing in all except very low temperatures by adding a couple of pounds of common salt to each bucketful. A single bucket of water may check a fire when the delay in getting water from a pump would allow the blaze to become uncontrollable. In buildings a long way from a water supply, a cask or tub of water from which to refill buckets is very desirable.

There is a right and a wrong way to throw water on a fire. Don't become excited. Spread the water with a sweeping motion all over the flaming material. Water thrown hastily may miss the blaze or fail to spread properly over the burning material. A fire chief of an eastern city at a demonstration put out an angry fire of oil-soaked material by calmly applying ten cupfuls of water where they would do the most good.

SAWDUST CHOKES OIL BLAZE.

Have a bucket of sawdust ready to choke an oil blaze—especially in the garage or around the gas engine. Adding two or three pounds of common soda to a bucket of sawdust improves it as an extinguisher. Spread it with a scoop. Water is of little use where oil is blazing—it may spread the flame. Sand, while good to smother fires, is a bad thing to pour on machinery.

STORE GASOLINE UNDERGROUND.

Gasoline is never safely stored until it is in an underground tank. The vapor from a single pint will render the air in an ordinary sized room explosive. Heavier than air, the gasoline vapor rests near the floor or ground, and a person standing may be unconscious of the danger until he places a lantern in the danger zone.

Examine Beans for Poisons.

The port laboratories of the bureau of chemistry of the United States department of agriculture are giving special attention to detecting poisonous beans offered for import to this country. According to the annual report of the bureau of chemistry, the high price of beans has led to shipment of so-called Burma or Rangoon beans from Asia and tapiramos beans from South America, which are known to yield hydrocyanic acid under some conditions. Shipments indicating the presence of hydrocyanic acid were therefore excluded as being dangerous to health. These poisonous beans are varieties of lime beans of various colors, and in shape may not be unlike the common navy bean. On careful inspection they may be distinguished from the common bean by the fact that, unlike the common bean, they show distinct striations, or stripes, radiating from the eye to the edge. There are also other less noticeable differences.

AMERICA'S AGRICULTURAL ARMY.

In the field of agriculture we have agencies and instrumentalities, fortunately, such as no other government in the world can show. The department of agriculture is undoubtedly the greatest practical and scientific agricultural organization in the world. Its total annual budget of $46,000,000 has been increased during the last four years more than 72 per cent. It has a staff of 18,000, including a large number of highly trained experts, and alongside of it stand the unique land-grant colleges, which are without example elsewhere, and the 69 state and federal experiment stations. These colleges and experiment stations have a total endowment of plant and equipment of $172,000,000 and an income of more than $35,000,000, with 10,271 teachers, a resident student body of 125,000, and a vast additional number receiving instruction at their homes. County agents, joint officers of the department of agriculture and of the colleges, are everywhere co-operating with the farmers and assisting them. The number of extension workers under the Smith-Lever act and under the recent emergency legislation has grown to 5,500 men and women working regularly in the various communities and taking to the farmer the latest scientific and practical information. Alongside these great public agencies stand the very effective farmers themselves which are more and more learning the best methods of co-operation and the best methods of putting to practical use the assistance derived from governmental sources.—From President Wilson's message to farmers, January 31.

Hoosier News Briefly Told

Indianapolis.—Word has come to Rollin A. Bennett, extension secretary of the Children's Aid association, and to Mrs. Albion Fellows Bacon of Evansville, head of the child welfare department of the woman's section, Indiana state council of defense, that Indiana will be expected to save 2,592 children during children's year, which will begin April 6. A campaign to save 100,000 babies and young children during the year was recently announced by the children's bureau, United States department of labor, and the child welfare department of the woman's committee of the council of national defense.

Wabash.—Oscar Frosell, a Swedish-German chemist, who has been doing governmental experimental work here for some time, announced that he has succeeded in making the first American magnelith, a material used for deck floors of battleships. The material has been given rigid tests and cannot be checked or cracked by bullets. Magnesite, a magensium cement, the base from which magnelith is manufactured, was obtained from the Pacific coast. At the time Frosell was engaged in the manufacture of magnelith in Germany.

Shelbyville.—Residents are to be permitted to raise hogs in their own yards, provided an ordinance which was presented at the meeting of the city council is passed. The ordinance was passed on its first reading. It provides that any family may raise at least two pigs for its own use as meat, but that the porkers are not to be marketed or sold for profit. The pigs are to be kept scrubbed and clean, and are not to be closer than 40 feet to an occupied residence. The ordinance is to be effective during the period of the war.

Indiapolis.—The Marion county council passed a resolution declaring it was in favor of appropriating money for the building of three state highway roads in the county. The estimated maximum cost is $650,000, and the resolution proposed that the council appropriate the sum at a meeting to be called before March 15. L. H. Wright, chairman of the Indiana highway commission, urged that the action be taken, declaring that the national and state governments were desirous of building these roads as a military preparednes measure.

Indianapolis.—Twenty-five million tons of coal have been produced in Indiana in the last 12 months, an increase of 25 per cent over the corresponding period. For the coming year the outlook is for an increase of 3,000,000 or 4,000,000 tons, making a total of about 29,000,000 tons. These figures came out at a conference of the state public service commission with representatives of the coal operators and the railroads.

Evansville.—The local flour mills have closed on orders from the national government, but they will be permitted to grind wheat substitutes such as rye and barley. They have been getting liberal supplies of rye from the Northwest. John K. Inglehart, vice president of one of the largest mills here, expresses it as his opinion that the mills will not be permitted to grind wheat before the first of July or until after the new crop comes in.

La Fayette.—The military department of Purdue university will soon give a course of small arms firing regulations. It will be a voluntary course and meet the requirements of the United States government R. O. T. C. The course will include the effect of fire, the influence of the ground and windage, the adjustment of fire and distance estimation.

South Bend.—Food Administrator A. Frank Eby, accompanied by a squad of police, raided the building of Nicholas Badowski and confiscated 1,000 barrels of flour, one-fourth of the supply which it is alleged Badowski has been hoarding for several months. The administrator is preparing to raid other places, in which are stored 950 barrels of flour.

Indianapolis.—"Indiana coal will produce the right results if it is properly burned." This statement was made by Horace H. Herr, director of conservation in the office of Evans Woollen, federal fuel administrator for Indiana, who, since the organization of the state office has given his time and attention to work of this nature.

Indianapolis.—Prison labor contracts in Indiana will expire in 1920. The state-use system, which already has gained some headway, by that time will be enlarged greatly, and the industries will be co-ordinated under the law of the 1917 legislature applying to the state reformatory, the state prison and the state farm.

Evansville.—Twenty-six dairymen of Vanderburg county have been testing their cows during the last year. The purpose is to assist in the more economical feeding of those that show a profit.

Hammond.—Rigid investigation is being made in the ruins of the Republic Iron and steel plant at East Chicago, where the explosion of a twin battery of boilers caused the death of five men and injured 35, some of them so badly their death is feared.

Muncie.—Five days after he had called the grand jury together for an investigation of moral conditions in Muncie, Judge William A. Thompson of the circuit court called the grand jurors before him in open court and discharged them because he believed that no good faith efforts would be made to return indictments.

Indianapolis.—Applications for surcharge rights, rate readjustments or authorization of an extension contract proposal affecting all or some of 28 Hoosier cities or towns were filed with the public service commission by five kindred utility corporations operating in Indiana. The surcharges are for electrical energy for power purposes only. It is proposed to add five mills a kilowatt to each bill for such service given in Elwood, Alexandria, Orestes and adjacent territory served by the Indiana General Service company and for such service in Marion, Jonesboro, Gas City, Fairmount, Gaston, Upland, Matthews, Sweetser, Summittville, Fowlerton and adjacent territory served by the Marion Light and Heating company.

Chicago.—The alleged swindling of his former pastor is responsible for Edward C. Wooddell, formerly manager of the Illinois Securities company, with offices in Chicago being in jail, according to Rev. F. W. Grossman, Presbyterian synodical superintendent of Indiana. Rev. Mr. Grossman told Post Office Inspector C. N. Moore that Wooddell, who represented himself as a former Sunday school pupil of the clergyman in Iowa, induced him to place $997 in Wooddell's hands for investment. The pastor declared that subsequent investigations developed the fact that Wooddell spent part of the money at a hotel from which he was evicted owing $1,123, including "bar items."

Indianapolis.—Inability of the jurors to agree on the question of whether there was or was not a conspiracy in Indianapolis, with reference to the campaign and general election of 1914, caused a disagreement to be reported in the United States district court in the case of Joseph E. Bell and 21 other defendants. They had been on trial for almost three weeks for alleged illegal acts in connection with the election. Following the report Judge Ferdinand A. Geiger of Milwaukee, who presided at the hearing, discharged the jurors.

Columbus.—Officials of the central Indiana fair circuit have decided that the high cost of things in general will have to bring about a reduction in the purses offered for early entry events this year. In the past the purses in these harness races have been $500. This year the purses will total but $400. All of the fair associations in the central circuit have agreed on six stake races. They will be the 2:15, 2:20 and 2:30 trots and the 2:10, 2:15 and 2:25 paces.

Indianapolis.—Carl Sims of Frankfort, former president of the Indiana Millers' association, has been appointed special representative of the milling and baking interests of the state, and will take a place in the office of Dr. Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana. Sims, who for years has been an authority on questions relating to the milling and baking industries, will have charge of the price and milling division of the state food administration.

Evansville.—Judge Fred M. Hostetter of the superior court, in the cases of the F. W. Cook Brewing company, the Evansville Brewing association and Henry Gerganrath, a West side saloonkeeper to test the constitutionality of the state-wide prohibition law that is scheduled to go into effect on April 2, overruled the demurrer of Lane R. Osborn, prosecuting attorney, and lone defendant in the case, and decided the act to be unconstitutional and void.

Anderson.—The Hill Pump company of this city has obtained a $2,500,000 contract from the government to manufacture steam turbines and gears for naval vessels. The company will increase its capital stock from $250,000 to $750,000 and build several new buildings at once to take care of the contract.

Laporte.—Thirty-four out of forty counties in northern Indiana have voted to accept federal and state aid for the construction of a main market highway, according to word sent the Laporte chamber of commerce by William S. Moore, state highway engineer. Laporte and Whitley counties are the only ones that have taken no action.

Jeffersonville.—The increased use of motor trucks at the quartermaster's depot here, where more than 100 are now in use, is making it difficult to obtain chauffeurs, and notice has been given that there are 100 vacancies to be filled under civil service, the rate of pay being $66 a month, plus 10 per cent.

Indianapolis.—An appeal to boards of county commissioners and superintendents of county infirmaries, signed by Gov. James P. Goodrich, chairman, and Amos Butler, secretary of the board of state charities, has been sent out asking them to co-operate in the production of food to win the war.

Evansville.—With the resumption of navigation on Green river, it is expected that during the next few days much tobacco will be brought here by boat. The river was closed to navigation for more than ten weeks.

Bloomington.—A representative of the United States government was here in conference with owners of stone plants in regard to turning these plants into war industries.

Lafayette.—The week of March 4 to 9 has been set aside as farm machinery equipment and repair week, and in those six days every farmer in the state is urged by Food Director G. I. Christie to look over all his farm implements and see what repairs and what new machinery he needs.

Terre Haute.—Maple sugar camps have opened with the first thawing since November. Boiling will begin in southern Indiana and southern Illinois, and a greater quantity of sirup and sugar is expected than ever before. The sirup will sell for from $2 to 2.50 a gallon.

"Pack the suitcase and the bag, will you, Auntie, and—"

"I already have," she answered, laughing at their frantic energy. "And I put out these white dresses for you to wear, and—"

"Gracious, auntie! They button in the back and have sixty buttons apiece. We'll never have time to fasten them," expostulated Carol, without diminishing her speed.

"I'll button while you powder, that'll be time enough."

"I won't have time to powder," called back Carol from the bathroom, where she was splashing the water at a reckless rate. "I'll wear a veil and powder when I get there. Did you pack any clean handkerchiefs, auntie? I'm clear out. If you didn't put any in, you'd better go and borrow Connie's. Lucky thing she's not here."

Shining with zeal and soap, Carol dashed out, and Lark dashed in.

"Are there any holes in these stockings?" Carol turned around, lifting her skirts for inspection. "Well, I'm sorry, I won't have time to change them. Did they come in the auto? Good!" She was brushing her hair as she talked. "Yes, we had a luncheon, all pie, though. We played tennis this morning; we were intending to come home right along, or we'd have phoned you. We were playing with George Castle and Fritzie Zale.—Is it sticking out any place?" She lowered her head backward for her aunt to see. "Stick a pin in it, will you? Thanks. They dared us to go to the pie counter and see which couple could eat the most pieces of lemon pie, the couple which lost paying for all the pie. It's not like betting, you know; it's a kind of reward of merit, like a Sunday-school prize. No, I won't put on my slippers till the last thing; my heel's sore, my tennis shoe rubbed the skin off. My feet seem to be getting tender. Think it's old age?"

Lark now emerged from the bathroom, and both twins performed a flying exchange of dresses.

"Who won?"

"Lark and George ate eleven pieces, and Fritzie and I only nine. So Fritzie paid. Then we went on the campus and played mumble-te-peg, or whatever you call it. It is French, auntie."

"Did they ask us to stay a whole week, auntie?" inquired Lark.

"Yes. Jim was wearing his new gray suit and looked very nice. I've never been out to their home. Is it very nice?"

"Um, swell!" This was from Carol, Lark being less slangily inclined. "They have about sixteen rooms, and two maids—they call them 'girls'—and electric lights, and a private water supply, and—and—horses, and cows—oh, it's great! We've always been awfully fond of Jim. The nicest thing about him is that he always takes a girl home when he goes to class things and socials. I can't endure a fellow who walks home by himself. Jim always asks Larkie and me first, and if we are taken he gets someone else. Most boys, if they can't get first choice, pike off alone."

"Now, Carol," said Aunt Grace, smiling. "Be easy on him. He's so nice it would be a shame to—"

Carol threw up her eyes in horror. "I'm shocked," she cried. Then she dimpled. "But I wouldn't hurt Jim for anything. I'm very fond of him. Do you really think there are any—er—indications—"

"Oh, I don't know anything about it. I'm just judging by the rest of the community."

Lark was performing the really difficult feat of putting on and buttoning her slippers standing on one foot for the purpose and stooping low. Her face was flushed from the exertion.

"Do you think he's crazy about you, Carol?" she inquired, rather seriously, and without looking up from the shoe she was so laboriously buttoning.

"Oh, I don't know. There are a few circumstances which seem to point that way. Take that new gray suit for instance. Now you know yourself, Lark, he didn't need a new gray suit, and when a man gets a brand-new suit for no apparent reason, you can generally put it down that he's waxing romantic. Then there's his mother—she's begun telling me all his good points, and how cute he was when he was born, and she showed me one of his curls and a lot of his baby pictures—it made Jim wild when he came in and caught her at it, and she tells me how good he is and how much money he's got. That's pointed, very. But I must confess," she concluded candidly, "that Jim himself doesn't act very loverly."

"He thinks lots of you, I know," said Lark, seriously. "Whenever he's alone with me he praises you every minute of the time."

"That's nothing. When he's alone with me he praises you all the time, too. Where's my hat, Lark? I'll bet Connie wore it, the little sinner! Now what shall I do?"

"You left it in the barn yesterday—don't you remember you hung it on the harness hook when we went out for eggs, and—"

"Oh, so I did. There comes Connie now." Carol thrust her head out of the window. "Connie, run out to the barn and bring my hat, will you? It's on the harness hook. And hurry! Don't stop to ask questions, just trot along and do as you're told."

Carol returned again to her toilet. "Well, I guess I have time to powder after all. I don't suppose we'll need to take any money, auntie, do you? We won't be able to spend it in the country."

"I think you'd better take a little. They might drive to town, or go to a social, or something."

"Can't do it. Haven't a cent."

"Well, I guess I can lend you a little," was the smiling reply. It was a standing joke in the family that Carol had been financially hard pressed ever since she began using powder several years previous.

"Are you fond of Jim, Carol?" Lark jumped away backward in the conversation, asking the question gravely, her eyes upon her sister's face.

"Hum! Yes, I am," was the light retort. "Didn't Prudence teach us to love everybody?"

"Don't be silly. I mean if he proposes to you, are you going to turn him down, or not?"

"What would you advise, Lark?" Carol's brows were painfully knitted. "He's got five hundred acres of land, worth at least a hundred an acre, and a lot of money in the bank—his mother didn't say how much, but I imagine several thousand anyhow. And he has that nice big house, and an auto, and—oh, everything nice! Think of the fruit trees, Larkie! And he's good-looking, too. And his mother says he is always good-natured even before breakfast, and that's very exceptional, you know! Very! I don't know that I could do much better, do you, auntie? I'm sure I'd look cute in a sunbonnet and apron, milking the cows! So, boss, so, there, now! So, boss!"

"Why, Carol!"

"But there are objections, too. They have pigs. I can't bear pigs! Pooooey, pooooey! The filthy little things! I don't know—Jim and the gray suit and the auto and the cows are very nice, but when I think of Jim and overalls and pigs and onions and freckles I have goose flesh. Here they come! Where's that other slipper? Oh, it's clear under the bed!" She wriggled after it, coming out again breathless. "Did I rub the powder all off?" she asked, anxiously.

The low honk of the car sounded outside, and the twins dumped a miscellaneous assortment of toilet articles into the battered suit-case and the tattered hand bag. Carrol grabbed her hat from Connie, leisurely strolling through the hall with it, and sent her flying after her gloves. "If you can't find mine, bring your own," she called after her.

Aunt Grace and Connie escorted them triumphantly down the walk to the waiting car where the young man in the new sentimental gray suit stood beside the open door. His face was boyishly eager, and his eyes were full of a satisfaction that had a sort of excitement in it, too. Aunt Grace looked at him and sighed. "Poor boy," she thought. "He is nice! Carol is a mean little thing!"

He smiled at the twins impartially. "Shall we flip a coin to see who I get in front?" he asked them, laughing.

His mother leaned out from the back seat, and smiled at the girls very cordially. "Hurry, twinnies," she said, "we must start, or we'll be late for supper. Come in with me, won't you, Larkie?"

"What a greasy schemer she is," thought Carol, climbing into her place without delay.

Jim placed the battered suitcase and the tattered bag beneath the seat and drew the rug over his mother's knees. Then he went to Lark's side, and tucked it carefully about her feet.

"It's awfully dusty," he said. "You shouldn't have dolled up so. Shall I put your purse in my pocket? Don't forget you promised to feed the chickens—I'm counting on you to do it for me."

Then he stepped in beside Carol, laughing into her bright face, and the good-bys rang back and forth as the car rolled away beneath the heavy arch of oak leaves that roofed in Maple avenue.

The twins fairly reveled in the glories of the country through the golden days that followed, and enjoyed every minute of every day, and begrudged the hours they spent in sleep. The time slipped by "like banana skins," declared Carol crossly, and refused to explain her comparison. And the last day of their visit came. Supper was over at seven o'clock and Lark said, with something of wistfulness in her voice, "I'm going out to the orchard for a farewell weep all by myself. And don't any of you disturb me—I'm so ugly when I cry."

So she set out alone, and Jim, a little awkwardly, suggested that Carol take a turn or so up and down the lane with him. Mrs. Forrest stood at the window and watched them, tearful-eyed, but with tenderness.

"My little boy," she said to herself, "my little boy. But she's a dear, sweet, pretty girl."

In the meantime, Jim was acquitting himself badly. His face was pale. He was nervous, ill at ease. He stammered when he spoke. Self-consciousness was not habitual to this young man of the Iowa farm. He was not an awkward, ignorant, gangling farmhand we meet in books and see on stages. He had attended the high school in Mount Mark, and had been graduated from the state agricultural college with high honors. He was a farmer, as his father had been before him, but he was a farmer of the new era, one of those men who takes plain farming and makes it a profession, almost a fine art. Usually he was self-possessed, assertive, confident, but, in the presence of this sparkling twin, for once he was abashed.

Carol was in an ecstasy of delight. She was not a man-eater, perhaps, but she was early romance-mad.

The callow youths of Mount Mark, of the Epworth league, and the college, were almost unanimous in laying their adoration at Carol's feet. But Carol saw the elasticity, the buoyancy, of loves like these, and she couldn't really count them. She felt that she was ripe for a bit of solid experience now, and there was nothing callow about Jim—he was solid enough. And now, although she could see that his feelings stirred, she felt nothing but excitement and curiosity. A proposal, a real one! It was imminent, she felt it.

"Carol," he began abruptly, "I am in love."

"A-are you?" Carol had not expected him to begin in just that way.

"Yes; I have been for a long time, with the sweetest and dearest girl in the world. I know I am not half good enough for her, but—I love her so much that—I believe I could make her happy."

"D-do you?" Carol was frightened. She reflected that it wasn't so much fun as she had expected. There was something wonderful in his eyes, and in his voice. Maybe Lark was right—maybe it did hurt! Oh, she really shouldn't have been quite so nice to him!

"She is young—so am I—but I know what I want, and if I can only have her, I'll do anything I—" His voice broke a little. He looked very handsome, very grown-up, very manly. Carol quivered. She wanted to run away and cry. She wanted to put her arms around him and tell him she was very, very sorry and she would never do it again as long as she lived and breathed.

"Of course," he went on, "I am not a fool. I know there isn't a girl like her in ten thousand, but—she's the one I want, and—Carol, do you reckon there is any chance for me? You ought to know. Lark doesn't have secrets from you, does she? Do you think she'll have me?"

Certainly this was the surprise of Carol's life. If it was romance she wanted, here it was in plenty. She stopped short in the daisy-bright lane and stared at him.

"Jim Forrest," she demanded, "is it Lark you want to marry, or me?"

"Lark, of course!"

Carol opened her lips and closed them. She did it again. Finally she spoke. "Well, of all the idiots! If you want to marry Lark, what in the world are you out here proposing to me for?"

"I'm not proposing to you," he objected. "I'm just telling you about it."

"But what for? What's the object? Why don't you go and rave to her?"

He smiled a little. "Well, I guess I thought telling you first was one way of breaking it to her gently."

"I'm perfectly disgusted with you," Carol went on, "perfectly. Here I've been expecting you to propose to me all week, and—"

"Propose to you! My stars!"

"Don't interrupt me," Carol snapped. "Last night I lay awake for hours—look at the rings beneath my eyes—"

"I don't see 'em," he interrupted again, smiling more broadly.

"Just thinking out a good flowery rejection for you, and then you trot me out here and propose to Lark! Well, if that isn't nerve!"

Jim laughed loudly at this. He was used to Carol, and enjoyed her little outbursts. "I can't think what on earth made you imagine I'd want to propose to you," he said, shaking his head as though appalled at the idea.

Carol's eyes twinkled at that, but she did not permit him to see it. "Why shouldn't I think so? Didn't you get a new gray suit? And haven't I the best complexion in Mount Mark? Don't all the men want to propose to a complexion like mine?"

He laughed again, then he sobered. "Do you think Lark will—"

"I think Lark will turn you down," said Carol promptly, "and I hope she does. You aren't good enough for her. No one in the world is good enough for Lark except myself. If she should accept you—I don't think she will, but if she has a mental aberration and does—I'll give you my blessing, and come and live with you six months in the year, and Lark shall come and live with me the other six months, and you can run the farm and send us an allowance. But I don't think she'll have you; I'll be disappointed in her if she does."

Carol was silent a moment then. She was remembering many things—Lark's grave face that day in the parsonage when they had discussed the love of Jim, her unwonted gentleness and her quiet manners during this visit, and one night when Carol, suddenly awakening, had found her weeping bitterly into her pillow. Lark had said it was a headache, and was better now, and Carol had gone to sleep again, but she remembered now that Lark never had headaches! And she remembered how very often lately Lark had put her arms around her shoulders and looked searchingly into her face, and Lark was always wistful, too, of late! She sighed. Yes, she caught on at last, "had been pushed on to it," she thought angrily. She had been a wicked, blind, hateful little simpleton or she would have seen it long ago. But she said nothing of this to Jim.

"You'd better run along then and switch your proposal over to her, or I'm likely to accept you on my own account, just for a joke. And be sure and tell her I'm good and sore that I didn't get a chance to use my flowery rejection. But I'm almost sure she'll turn you down."

Then Carol stood in the path and watched Jim as he leaped lightly over fences and ran through the sweet meadow. She saw Lark spring to her feet and step out from the shade of an apple tree, and then Jim took her in his arms.

After that, Carol rushed into the house and up the stairs. She flung herself on her knees beside the bed and buried her face in the white spread.

"Lark," she whispered, "Lark!" She clenched her hands, and her shoulders shook. "My little twin," she cried again, "my nice old Lark." Then she got up and walked back and forth across the floor. Sometimes she shook her fist. Sometimes a little crooked smile softened her lips. Once she stamped her foot, and then laughed at herself. For an hour she paced up and down. Then she turned on the light and went to the mirror, where she smoothed her hair and powdered her face as carefully as ever.

"It's just a good joke on me," she said, smiling, "but it's just as good a one on Mrs. Forrest. I think I'll go and have a laugh at her. And I'll pretend I knew it all along."

She found the woman lying in a hammock on the broad piazza where a broad shaft of light from the open door fell upon her. Carol stood beside her, smiling brightly.

"Mrs. Forrest," she said, "I know a perfectly delicious secret. Shall I tell you?"

The woman sat up, holding out her arms. Carol dropped on her knees beside her, smiling mischievously at the expression on her face.

"Cupid has been at work," she said softly, "and your own son has fallen a victim."

Mrs. Forrest sniffed slightly, but she looked lovingly at the fair, sweet face. "I am sure I cannot wonder," she answered in a gentle voice. "Is it all settled?"

"I suppose so. At any rate he is proposing to her in the orchard, and I am pretty sure she's going to accept him."

Mrs. Forrest's arms fell away from Carol's shoulders. "Lark!" she ejaculated.

"Yes—didn't you know it?" Carol's voice was mildly and innocently surprised.

"Lark!" Mrs. Forrest was plainly dumfounded. "I—I thought it was you!"

"Me!" Carol was intensely astonished. "Me? Oh, dear Mrs. Forrest, whatever in the world made you think that?"

"Why—I don't know," she faltered weakly, "I just naturally supposed it was you. I asked him once where he left his heart, and he said, 'At the parsonage,' and so of course I thought it was you."

Carol laughed gayly. "What a joke," she cried. "But you are more fortunate than you expected, for it is my precious old Larkie. But don't be too glad about it, or you may hurt my feelings."

"Well, I am surprised, I confess, but I believe I like Lark as well as I do you, and of course Jim's the one to decide. People say Lark is more sensible than you are, but it takes a good bit of a man to get beyond a face as pretty as yours. I'm kind o' proud of Jim!"

* * * * * * *

After Fairy's wedding Carol naturally felt lonely. They had been such constant companions that the parting was sorrowful for both. Carol's thoughts frequently dwelt on their days of mischief in the old parsonage before Prudence was married, remembering especially one April fool joke that was decidedly on the twins.

Makes Eggs Tell Their Age.

A novel and rapid way whereby to determine the age of an egg has been developed by M. Grossfeld, a French investigator. He has supplemented the usual method by one dependent on specific gravity, notes the Boston Transcript. The existing way whereby to determine the age of eggs is by candling them and taking note of the "mirage which forms about the yolk." Mr. Grossfeld has determined that specific gravity of normal eggs in the way attributed to Archimedes, and there has been figured out the loss in gravity for each week of keeping. For quick inspection of qualities of eggs, he has devised a form of hydrometer. The egg takes the place of the weighted bulb and the scale indicates the specific gravity and at the same time the age of the egg. A little cage has been arranged to hold the egg and is capable of quick handling. Big eggs and little eggs are subject to errors in the readings, but with eggs in the vicinity of 55 grammes the indication is instantaneous.

GREAT DRIVE FOR SHIPYARD HELP

Call for 250,000 Volunteers to Aid in Speeding the New Merchant Fleet.

TO BE READY WHEN CALLED

Reserve Organization Formed to Complete Gigantic Program to Win War—Good Pay and Living Conditions.

The United States Shipyard Volunteers of the Public Service Reserve, a reserve organization of American mechanics, skilled workers in many lines of trade, has been formed to bring to completion the gigantic shipbuilding program necessary to win the war. Two hundred and fifty thousand workmen are to be enrolled and they will stand ready, when called to go to the shipyards and speed America's merchant fleet to completion.

An appeal for volunteers has been made by the department of labor, the council of national defense, the shipping board, the 20,000 four-minute men, governors of the various states, organized labor and business men. The aim is to fill all the present and future needs of the government's shipyards.

Pay of volunteers will be in accordance with the prevailing wage in the shipyards at the time they are called. Construction of houses for the workers is being pushed with energy, and the necessary homes will be ready when the men are called.

Preliminaries Are Arranged.

All preliminary work, such as the building of shipyards and shipways, construction of housing facilities, preparation and transportation of material, and the training of workmen, is being rushed to completion. Thus the organization of the shipyard volunteers is being hastened with energy and enthusiasm.

Volunteers are requested to go to the nearest enrollment agent of the public service reserve or state council of defense and sign up. Should there be no enrolling agent in the vicinity, they are asked to write to Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States shipping board, Washington.

Cards are issued to all applicants, bearing statements of the purpose of the shipyard volunteers, classifying them according to trades and asking signers to respond when called. Buttons will be given to volunteers bearing the inscription, "U. S. Shipyard Volunteers." This button is to be an honorary recognition of the wearer's willingness to sacrifice personal desires for public need. In addition, the worker will receive a certificate signed by Chairman Hurley, which reads:

> "This is to certify (name of volunteer) of (city, state), has enrolled in the United States Shipyard Volunteers of Public Service Reserve to aid the nation in its imperative needs for merchant ships with which to overcome the submarine menace and maintain our forces at the front."

Life's Inspirations.

There is no greater joy than the feeling that some act of ours has inspired another to be brave and strong. One of the beautiful things about right doing is that it is an inspiration to others. No life is a real success which has not scattered inspiration along the way.

American Women No Slackers

We can well be proud of our American girls and women. In France and England women are taking up the work of men resolutely, and have shown their ability to do almost all kinds of work. When it becomes necessary women will show their worth in countless shops, stores, factories and offices. No one hears them complain of their hard work. These are the days when American men have cause to respect, love and honor their mothers, wives and sisters. If a woman is borne down by the weakness and sufferings of womankind, she should be helped by a herbal tonic made with glycerin which has had such uniform success during the past half century. She should be well, instead of sick and suffering; healthy and vigorous, instead of worn-out and weak; bright eyes, clear skin, rosy cheeks—you wouldn't think it was the same woman, and it's all due to the use of a few bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. All druggists. Tablets or liquid. Tablets, 60c.

What this medicine has done for thousands of delicate women, it will do for you. If you're over-worked and debilitated, it will build you up—if you're borne down with the chronic aches, pains and weaknesses peculiar to your sex, it relieves and cures. It regulates and promotes the proper functions of womanhood. This old and tried Prescription of Dr. Pierce's invigorates the system, purifies the blood, improves digestion, and restores health, flesh and strength. The Food Administration Says:

How to save wheat:—Have a "Wheatless Monday" and a "Wheatless Wednesday" every week and have one meal a day without using any wheat at all. Use corn oats, rye, barley instead.

Wheatless now means "wheatless." Use no wheat in anything at wheatless meals. Cut the bread at the table. Use all the stale bread for toast or cooking.

A Question Answered.

Several times a day, I am asked if a farmer or anyone else who has his flour on hands for the entire season is hoarding flour and if so what should he do. My answer to this is: that he should eat as much substitute as anyone else and possibly when flour gets very scarce, (which I think will be the case) then he will have some left that he can put on the market if he wants to do the right thing by his neighbors and friends.

I can think of no more unloyal act than for anyone to go ahead at this time, the same as he has always done, eating all he pleases and what he pleases. We are fortunate indeed that we live in a county that is self-sustianing but if we don't do our best in saving what the government asks us to do, we will in a measure, be responsible for suffering in our own country. Farmers by the scores tell me they are using their share of substitutes when they have flour on hands. If everybody will do as well we will help more than most people realize to win this war.

I wish that every farmer would take stock of all his wheat and rye, and be in position to make a complete report of all such grains on hand when called for. This call is not very far distant and the farmer with a full (not very full either) granary, will have to explain why he don't get this wheat on the market. We have no more right to surplus wheat than we do to surplus coal. Herman L. Brown, Federal Food Adm. for DeKalb Co.

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Live Stock Meetings for Community.

A letter from County Agent A. Z. Arehart requesting us to please announce to our readers that the week of March 5 to 8 will be "Live Stock Week in DeKalb County." We shall have with us at that time three good speakers on different phases of live stock production, care and management, such as are particularly suited to the present situation and conditions.

T. W. Logan, of Lafountain, Indiana, will be the speaker on Hog Production, and is one of the best speakers available on this line. He will have some good information and counsel for the DeKalb County farmers on this vital question.

Mr. Claude Harper, who will talk on sheep, is a Purdue graduate and has for some time been connected with the University of Illinois, but recently has been called back to take charge of sheep work in Indiana, and is eminently fitted for this position.

A Patriotic Session.

A most interesting meeting of the W. C. T. U., was held at the home of Mrs. Mattie Bowman, Friday afternoon. The program was opened by an instrumental solo "The Spirit of America" by Mrs. Leighty. Mrs. Eva Sheffer led the devotional by reading Solomon's prayer given at the dedication of the Temple found in I Kings fifth chapter. Prayer was offered by Mrs. Alice Warner. Song, "The Star Spangled Banner" by all. Recitation, "Coming Across" by Mrs. Belle Barney. Vocal solo by Mrs. Ella Patterson, "If I had a Son for each Star in Old Glory". Reading by Mrs. Nora Kinsey. The subject of which was "A Terrible Charge". The story of a man who had murdered his wife while crazed by drink who when the judge asked if he had anything to say before sentence was passed told judge, jury and witnesses, that they were guilty with him in the murdering of his wife because they had all voted for the licensed saloon. Vocal solo by Mrs. Bessie Tustison, "Don't Bite the Hand that Feeds You." The secretary's report and roll call with quotations from George Washington by 22 members present followed. Three guests, Mesdames Frank Scholes, Abe Culbertson and Tim Agler were present. At the short business session, one of the things decided upon was to have an attendance contest; the members being equally divided in two parts with Mesdames Lora Leighty and Chloe Hart, as captains. The program did not have a dull moment in it, and each meeting is proving that the committee plan is working out fine, and the meetings are fresh surprises. The committee who had charge of this patriotic meeting were Mrs. Amanda Spayd, chairman, and the Mesdames Arline Koch, Maude Jenkins, Winnie Shook, Lillian Buckingham and Arminta Northrup. The meeting next month will be held at the home of Mrs. Bessie Tustison. The meeting was dismissed by all repeating the Lord's Prayer.

MODERN FARMING

Modern farming is reaching into what but a few years past we spoke of as scientific farming. The modern farmer of this age has to deal with principles as well as facts to succeed in competition with his neighbor, Who has already availed himself of the working principles that govern the production of his crops. Much of the credit for this condition must be given to the painstaking practical research work of the colleges, which has demonstrated cause and effect in practical agriculture. An experiment that does not demonstrate the principles that govern the results is not complete and should not be accepted as reliable evidence on which to establish farm practice. You cannot make a "silk purse out of a sow's ear," no matter how much it may be made to resemble it, and we cannot long keep up the deception.

SUMMARY FOR SWINE SUCCESS

Among Other Things Indiana Experiment Station Says Breed for Early Litters.

The Indiana experiment station gives the following summary for success: First, breed for as early litters as conditions on the farm will permit; second, have sows bred as close together as possible; third, it pays to keep a record of farrowing dates; fourth, to avoid failure with the male use common hog sense; fifth, feed balanced rations; sixth, keep the sows gaining in flesh; seventh, see that the sows have an abundance of exercise; eighth, the hoghouse should be clean, roomy and comfortable; ninth, do not feed ice water; tenth, be on guard against lice and disease.

Money Makers on Any Farm.

TO PRODUCE BETTER CATTLE

Improvement Made by Breeders Never More Rapid Than at Present—Poor Cows Not Wanted.

The tendency to produce better cattle has gained the ascendency in the minds and efforts of cattle breeders and improvement has never been more rapid than now. A very poor grade of heifers or cows would find a very slow sale under the present influence of quality and growth.

The farmer, who has had the rough feed believes this kind of an investment cannot help but result profitably. It is this belief that is going to be the salvation of the meat problem of the country, in the matter of general meat supply. The big, growthy animal may consume a little more grass and rough feed, but its pounds of growth and gain will pay the bill and leave a balance in its favor when the feed yard period has passed.

Two more of Concord township young men are on their way to the camp. Argil Jacob Sechler left early Tuesday morning to make the trip to Fort Oglethorpe, where he will enter the medical training camp. DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

THE BANDED OCELOT.

"Far down in South America and Central America lives the banded ocelot," said Daddy.

"Gracious!" exclaimed the children. "What in the world is the banded ocelot? Is it an animal, a fish, fowl, or what? We've no idea. We've never heard of one."

"Mr. Banded Ocelot's name was Tommy."

"Sounds as though he might be a cat, if only he hadn't such a peculiar name," said Nick.

"He never could be a cat with a name like that," said Nancy, shaking her head. "Why in the world was he named Tommy?"

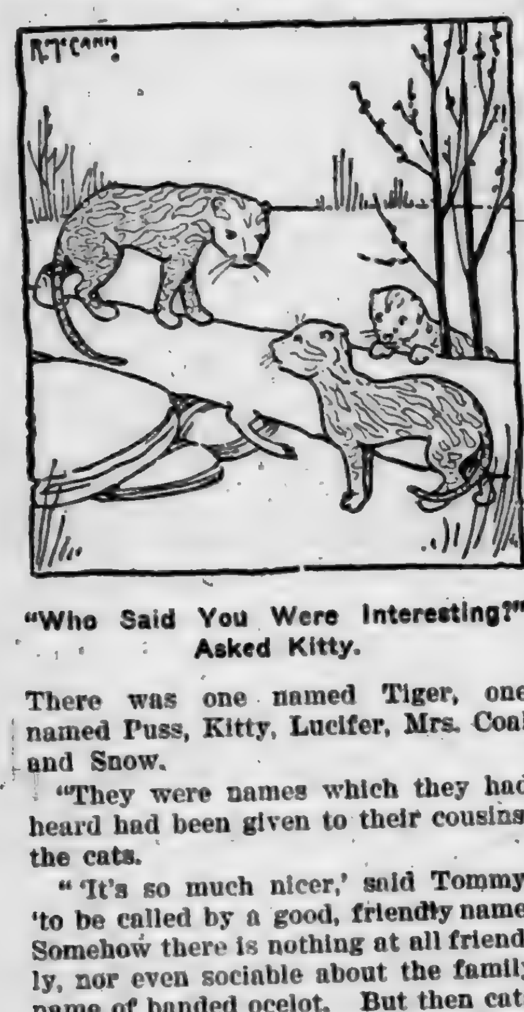
"He is a cousin of the cat family," said Daddy.

"Really!" exclaimed the children. "And with that awfully big, queer name. Not that it's so big but it's so queer."

"Of course not the Tommy part," added Nick, "only the other name—banded ocelot. It's mighty hard to say, I think."

"That's just what the banded ocelot thought," said Daddy, "and so he had all his friends and relations call him Tommy.

"Soon the friends and relations chose names like his which were simple and which they liked very much.



"Who Said You Were Interesting?" Asked Kitty.

There was one named Tiger, one named Puss, Kitty, Lucifer, Mrs. Coal and Snow.

"They were names which they had heard had been given to their cousins, the cats.

"'It's so much nicer,' said Tommy, 'to be called by a good, friendly name. Somehow there is nothing at all friendly, nor even sociable about the family name of banded ocelot. But then cats are always called by special names, and not just called cat, so we should be allowed nice extra names anyhow.

"'I'm really rather an interesting animal, when one comes to think of it,' he continued.

"'Who is coming to think of it?' asked Kitty.

"'I mean when I come to think of it,' said Tommy.

"'You've been here all the time. What do you mean by saying you have come to think of it? From where have you come? From where? I repeat. You're putting on airs and pretending you've been away for a journey when you've not moved from home.'

"'Don't get so excited, Kitty, you remind me of our other cousins. When a creature says he has come to think of a certain thing he means that he has just arrived at the point where it is thinking about it, that's all.'

"'A lot of senseless words about nothing at all,' said Kitty, snarling.

"'Purr, my love, purr,' said Tommy. 'There's nothing to get excited about. Have a cat-nap.'

"'What's that?' asked Kitty. She liked the sound of the word nap.

"'It's a sort of sleep enjoyed by our honored cousins, the cats.'

"'Haven't we any ocelet naps?' asked Kitty.

"'To be sure,' said Tommy, 'but it's so much easier to say cat-nap. It means a nice little snooze with one eye half-open ready for anything that may happen—from a morsel of food or a bowl of milk or an adventure and a wild chase.'

"'I know about such naps,' said Kitty, as she purred. 'I've had many a one myself.'

"'I haven't told you why I was an interesting animal,' said Tommy.

"'Who said you were interesting?' asked Kitty.

"'You'd better say so, for if you don't you are saying you're not interesting. You belong to the same family. If you say I am interesting, you are saying you are, too.'

"'Then I will say so,' said Kitty, who loved to be admired.

"'I am half-way between a tiger and a cat, and no other creature is just like me—except all my banded ocelot cousins. I purr and me-ow like a cat; I am wild at times like a tiger. I am a mixture of both and so I am very interesting. I belong to a wild, wild family and to the most domestic of all creatures—the household cat.'

"And all the banded ocelots who were listening purred as they agreed with Tommy, and said 'Me-ow, what you say is true.'"

YOUR DAIRY OPEN TO INSPECTION, OR CRITICISM.

The Way to Get Clean Milk: Clean Milkers, Clean Cows, Clean Barn, Small-Top Pail.

CLEAN MILK IS MOST DESIRABLE

Various Methods of Milking Should Stand Eye Test of Customers.

KEEP OUT HARMFUL BACTERIA

Ordinary Common-Sense Rules of Cleanliness Will Do Much to Prevent Contamination—Clean Stable Before Milking.

Suppose, Mr. Dairyman, your customers should step into your dairy barn unannounced at milking time—would you be likely to lose some of them as a result of things they saw? Would they see cleanly dressed milkers in a clean barn, milking from clean cows into clean pails? Or would they see another picture which need not be drawn but which is all too common, even in these days of improved dairy methods—a picture whose reflection is the layer of sediment which the consumer will see if he holds up a bottle of milk from such a dairy and looks at the bottom of it?

Keep Out the Germs.

Ordinary common-sense rules of cleanliness at milking time will do much to prevent contamination of milk by the easiest ways. Unless considerable care is taken, large numbers of bacteria may find their way into the milk during the process of milking. Cows should be milked in clean, well-lighted stables. By taking great pains it may be possible to produce good milk in a dark or dirty stable, but it is extremely improbable that the average dairyman will obtain a desirable product under such conditions.

Grooming and feeding the cows, as well as cleaning the stable and removing the manure, should not be done just before milking, as these operations fill the air with odors, dust, and bacteria which may contaminate the milk.

After grooming and before milking, the udders, flanks and bellies of the cows should be carefully wiped with a damp cloth to remove any dust or loose hairs which might fall into the pail. In some dairies where milk containing an exceptionally small number of bacteria is produced, the cows' udders are washed twice in clean water and then wiped with a clean cloth. Only those persons who are free from communicable disease should be allowed to handle or even enter the stable or dairy house.

SMALL-TOP MILK PAILS KEEP OUT HARMFUL GERMS.

In modern dairies where clean milk is produced the small-top milk pail is a necessity, as it presents only a small opening into which dust and dirt may fall from the air or from the cow's body. It has been found by experience that the use of a pail of this kind greatly reduces the number of bacteria in milk from dairies where it is used. Many types of milk pails are for sale, but any tinner by the addition of a hood can convert any ordinary pail into a small-top pail.

Clean Clothes for Milker.

After the cows are prepared for milking, each milker should thoroughly wash his hands and put on clean overalls and a jumper or wear a suit, preferably white, which is used for no other purpose. The suit must be kept clean and occasionally sterilized with steam or hot water. Sanitary small-top milk pails should be used.

Milkers should be allowed to milk only with dry hands. The practice of wetting the hands with milk is a filthy one and in the winter is likely to cause the teats to chap. Milking should be done quickly and thoroughly with no violent jerking of the teats. After each cow's milk is drawn it should be removed immediately to the milk house.

The milker should remember always that he is handling a human food which is very easily contaminated. Soap, clean water, and towels must be readily accessible and the hands should be washed after milking each cow; this is commonly done on many first-class dairy farms. The use of a clean milking stool will do much to prevent soiling the hands.

Poison Stock's Fly Enemies.

By poisoning with arsenic the carcasses of large animals which cannot be promptly burned or buried, large numbers of flies which are capable of serious injury to meat-producing animals can be killed. Dead carcasses should be partly skinned, the flesh slashed, and a solution of one pound of white arsenic boiled in five gallons of water should be applied freely. After a few days the carcass may be turned over and the other side treated similarly. After it has thus served as a poisoner, the carcass should be burned or buried.

GIVE PIG PLACE IN THE SUN.

Remember this in making your piggery ready for the spring war litters: A little pig loves sunshine and needs it almost as much as he needs food. No piggery is fit for the purpose unless it admits direct sunshine onto the floor of every pen at the time the pigs are farrowed, furnishes plenty of fresh air and provides exercise in the open air. Dryness, sunshine, warmth, fresh air, freedom from drafts and exercise are of primary importance in raising pigs. These secured, the job is half done. In putting up buildings the six requirements just mentioned must be kept constantly in mind. Not one can be neglected.

Ideal Site for Dairy.

Whenever possible the cow stable should be on high ground with good natural drainage. Poultry houses, hog sheds, manure piles or surroundings which pollute the stable air and furnish breeding places for flies should not be near the cow stable. The silo may be connected with the stable by a feed room, but it should be shut off by a tight door. This is convenient and also prevents silage odors in the stable except at feeding time. After the silage has been fed, the stable can be thoroughly aired before the next milking period.

An ideal site for a barnyard is a south slope which drains away from the stable. If the barnyard is inclined to be muddy, it should be improved by drainage and by the use of cinders or gravel. A clean yard is a great help in keeping the cows from becoming dirty with mud and manure.

Pure Air for Pure Milk.

Every cow stable should have a system of ventilation to keep the air fresh and pure and the cows comfortable without exposing them to injurious drafts. Bad odors in the stable indicate that the ventilation is deficient. At least 500 cubic feet of air space should be provided for each cow. Farmers who desire to provide proper ventilation in cow stables can obtain information on this point by applying to the dairy division of the United States department of agriculture.

Loss From Lightning.

By far the greater part of an annual loss in the United States of $8,000,000 from lightning is in the rural districts, points out a farm fire prevention bulletin of the United States department of agriculture.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

PROHIBITION TRIUMPHS.

Time was, says the Union Signal, when we were hilariously happy over one new prohibition state gained as the result of 12 months' effort. A half dozen or more congressional victories in one year now cause hardly a ripple of excitement, so accustomed have we become to prohibition's triumphal march."

The record for 1917 included statewide prohibition for Indiana, Utah, New Hampshire, New Mexico and Porto Rico.

Measures passed by congress were:

Prohibition for Alaska.

Prohibition for District of Columbia.

Antiliquor advertising law, forbidding the sending of advertisements and letters soliciting liquor orders into states in which liquor advertising is unlawful.

A law prohibiting the shipment of alcoholic liquors through the channels of interstate commerce to individuals in prohibition states.

A law prohibiting absolutely the production of distilled spirits for beverage purposes.

An army bill, prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor, including beer, ale or wine, to any officer or member of the military forces while in uniform.

A resolution providing for the submission to the state legislatures of an amendment to the federal constitution prohibiting the manufacture, sale, transportation, importation or exportation of alcoholic beverages.

THE SCIENTIFIC ARGUMENT.

It is the day of the economic argument against the liquor traffic, says the Union Signal.

The appeal to the "bank account nerve" is undoubtedly tremendously convincing and should not be minimized. However, we believe that for all ages and classes of people the basic, fundamental argument presented by science as to the real nature of alcohol, if rightly understood, settles the liquor problem with a finality that silences our opponents and awakens the indifferent as does no other presentation of the subject. When you have once convinced an intelligent human being that alcohol in any form or quantity is a deadly protoplasmic poison to all the living tissues; that it stops the processes of evolution in the human race; that it not only retards but destroys those faculties which make for intellectual and moral ability, you have closed his mouth absolutely, and he does not attempt to cavil or indulge in sophistries on personal liberty, revenue, or states' rights.

Some forty years ago the women of the W. C. T. U. set out to put scientific temperance teaching into every public school in the United States. They succeeded. The result was that a generation grew to manhood and womanhood to whom the evils of alcohol were as real as death. It is this that has sealed the doom of the drink traffic.

HOW THE DRINK TRAFFIC "HELPS BUSINESS."

Judge Wilbur F. Bryant of Hartington, Neb., voted against state-wide prohibition when the amendment was before the people of that state. Now, he says, nothing could induce him to vote for its repeal. "So far," he says, "we see nothing but its good effects. If bad effects appear later, our children may be trusted to settle the business. . . . The claim that the traffic in alcohol drinks is an economic benefit is an empty and barren absurdity. It helps business in the same way that a fire helps business. Suppose that all of Harrington, west of Broadway was burned down. What a flood of insurance money would rush into the banks! Think of the lumber which would be sold at the yards! Think of the nails and hinges which would be sold at the hardware stores! Every carpenter, plumber, brickmason, stonemason, and laboring man would have a job in rebuilding the town. Let us set the town on fire!"

THEODORE ROOSEVELT ON PROHIBITION.

When we must feed our army and help the armies of our allies, not a bushel of grain should be permitted to be made into intoxicating liquor. Neither the men in the army nor the men engaged in doing vital work for the army in connection with railroads, factories, mines and shipyards should be allowed to waste strength and health in drink at this time. The same reasons that render it necessary to prohibit the sale of liquor to soldiers in uniform, or within a given number of miles from a military camp, and to stop its use on battleships, apply to extending similar protection for all citizens engaged in the work of railroads, factories, mines and shipyards.

HATS OFF TO CONGRESS.

For the first time in history of any country at war, the great national legislative body made it a criminal offense to sell liquor to a soldier or sailor, and also made it a crime for any house of ill fame to be near a soldiers' cantonment. This congress had the wisdom, the vision and the grit to cut aside all formal ideas and remember that if you have a man at the front to shoot straight he must think straight and live straight.—Hon. Josephus Daniels.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MARCH 3

JESUS BRINGING PEACE.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 4:35—5:20.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jehovah hath done great things for us whereof we are glad. —Ps. 126::3.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Ps. 147:1-5, 14-18.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 8:23-34; Luke 8:22-39; Matt. 14:22-33; Luke 9:37-43A.

PRIMARY LESSON MATERIAL—Mark 4:35-41.

MEMORY VERSE—Even the wind and the sea obey him.—Mark 4:41.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Telling the good news about the Prince of Peace.

MEMORY VERSE—Mark 5:19.

This lesson is a most dramatic one. Surprise and revelation, rebuke and encouragement are rapidly interchanged. Leaving the multitude to whom he had been preaching, Jesus asks the disciples to pass over with him to the other side of the lake (v. 35). "Let us pass over;" Jesus never asks his disciples to go where he will not go. How vivid is the touch in v. 36: "They took him as he was." He was tired and weary, he whose invitation is to "all who are weary and heavy laden." He who "had not where to lay his head," is carried by loving hands into the boat, and is soon lost in restful slumber. Both Master and friends are soon to meet a great sinner but first they must encountered a great storm.

I. The Great Storm. The Master of forces sleeps calmly on. Why not? Who else could afford to be so apparently indifferent! Not so these disciples. They have yet to know him perfectly, and hence it is natural that in their alarm they should awaken him as they view the rapidly filling boat, and exclaim, "Master, carest thou not that we perish?" Weary and unconcerned as he appears to have been, he arose and rebuked the wind and the waves. Wind and waves are material things and therefore not susceptible to rebuke. Jesus fronted the intangible cause; he rebuked the devil who was responsible for this turbulence; and the calm was commensurate with the storm. The Psalmist says, "Great peace have they that love thy law." Individuals and nations are now in the midst of a "great storm," a day of crime, stress, distress and tragedy; struggle, temptation, grief and loss, and the cry "Lord save us!" is growing louder and more insistent. Some of us look for the early return of the king, but all should listen for his words "Peace be still" for it is the peace which he alone can give that has power to calm the growing turbulence of this age.

II. The Great Sinner. Reaching the other side, they entered the land of Gadara and there met a demoniac who is, we believe, a type of the great sinner, for he was, (a) without restraint; "no man could bind him" (v. 3); (b) he was injuring himself, "cutting," etc. (v. 5); (c) he was separated from his friends, "dwelt among the tombs" (v. 3); (d) he was "unclean" (v. 2). There was also evidence of the futility of human resolutions and the vainness of attempt at control or reformation (v. 4). "No man had the strength to tame him." Note the torment of his life (v. 7). As he healed this man, the people saw their illegal gain interfered with, and hence the selfish request that Jesus should "depart out of their coasts" (v. 17), and this even in the face of what had been done for the stricken one. Selfishness knows no law. The Jews could not eat pork but they were raising it to sell to the Gentiles of the land, which amounted to an insult to their God, and an evasion of their law. Jesus "permitted" the demons to enter the swine thereby rebuking the avarice of the people and conclusively showing that they had left the demoniac. Luke tells us (8:37) that the Gadarenes were "taken with a great fear." Fear of what? Surely no fear of the Galilean teacher, but rather of the effect of the restored man's testimony on their material prosperity. Big business will have many sins to account for in the face of greed for gain while ignoring the cry of the afflicted amid unsuitable and unsanitary living conditions. Church members have no right to condemn the liquor traffic, while they rent stores to carry on this destructive business.

A suggested outline for this lesson would be as follows:

I. A Great Storm—Ch. 4:35-41.
  The command of Jesus—v. 35.
  The weariness of Jesus—v. 36.
  The alarm of the disciples—v. 38.
  The indifference of Jesus—v. 38.
  The great calm—v. 39.

II. A Glorious Cure—Ch. 5:1-20.
  The Gadarene a type of the sinner—vv. 1-5.
    (Unclean, separated, no restraint, self injury).
  The Gadarene cleansed—vv. 6-15.
    (He recognized purity—desired communion—was assigned to service).

MOTHERS TO BE

Should Read Mrs. Monyhan's Letter Published by Her Permission.

Mitchell, Ind.—"Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound helped me so much during the time I was looking forward to the coming of my little one that I am recommending it to other expectant mothers. Before taking it, somedays I suffered with neuralgia so badly that I thought I could not live, but after taking three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I was entirely relieved of neuralgia, I had gained in strength and was able to go around and do all my housework. My baby when seven months old weighed 19 pounds and I feel better than I have for a long time. I never had any medicine do me so much good."—Mrs. PEARL MONYHAN, Mitchell, Ind.

Good health during maternity is a most important factor to both mother and child, and many letters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., telling of health restored during this trying period by the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Names of Days of the Week.

The modern German names of the days of the week correspond tolerably well with the ancient Saxon: Sonntag, Sunday; Montag, Monday; Dienstag, Tuesday; Mittwoche, mid week day (this does not correspond, but Godensdag, which is less used, is Woden's day); Donnerstag, Thursday (this term, meaning the Thunderer's day, obviously corresponds with Thorsdaeg); Freitag, Friday; Samstag or Sonnabend, Saturday (the latter term means eve of Sunday). The French names of the days of the week, on the other hand, as befits a language so largely framed on a Latin basis, are like those of ancient Rome, Dimanche (the Lord's day), Lundi, Mardi, Mercredi, Jeudi, Vendredi, Samedi.

GREEN'S AUGUST FLOWER

has been a household remedy all over the civilized world for more than half a century for constipation, intestinal troubles, torpid liver and the generally depressed feeling that accompanies such disorders. It is a most valuable remedy for indigestion or nervous dyspepsia and liver trouble bringing on headache, coming up of food, palpitation of heart and many other symptoms. A few doses of August Flower will immediately relieve you. It is a gentle laxative. Ask your druggist. Sold in all civilized countries.—Adv.

The Upper Atmosphere.

An agitated neighbor had just informed Mrs. Warren that her son was at the top of a telegraph pole in the vicinity. When the boy had been coaxed back to earth again, his mother remonstrated. "Tad, I've told you how dangerous that is; now why will you persist in climbing those poles?"

"But ma," exclaimed the boy in an aggrieved tone, "I have to have some fresh air!"—The Christian Herald.

RECIPE FOR GRAY HAIR.

To half pint of water add 1 oz. Bay Rum, a small box of Barbo Compound, and ¼ oz. of glycerine. Any druggist can put this up or you can mix it at home at very little cost. Full directions for making and use come in each box of Barbo Compound. It will gradually darken streaked, faded gray hair, and make it soft and glossy. It will not color the scalp, is not sticky or greasy, and does not rub off. Adv.

T. e hotel men, it is understood, are giving three cheers for wheatless and meatless days. There is a reason.

There were never enough railroad cars for peace times, and with a war to supply something was bound to give way.

All indications are to the effect that the only place where the eligible man of draft age will be made to feel at home is in the army training camp.

There seems to be nothing that can do so many things at one time that shouldn't be done any time as our old friend car shortage.

Corset factories are to turn their attention to making powder bags—huh? No, not that kind. The kind they use in the army and navy.

It's a fine commentary on German efficiency and German diplomacy when they couldn't make peace with Russia, a people that wanted to quit.

Some way should be devised to rule out as nonessentials the manufacture of blizzards, snow, zero weather, coal shortage and crippled transportation.

An inventor has discovered a way to make fuel out of sugar. We presume he burns coal to do it, thus reducing the supply of both useful commodities.

YOU NEED NOT SUFFER WITH BACKACHE AND RHEUMATISM

For centuries GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been a standard household remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and stomach trouble, and all diseases connected with the urinary organs. The kidneys and bladder are the most important organs of the body. They are the filters, the purifiers of your blood. If the poisons which enter your system through the blood and stomach are not entirely thrown out by the kidneys and bladder you are doomed.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins, and lower abdomen, gall-stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine" nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue this treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day. They will keep you in condition and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not delay a minute. Delays are especially dangerous in kidney and bladder trouble. All reliable druggists sell GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They will refund the money if not as represented. In three sizes, sealed packages. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL. Accept no substitutes.

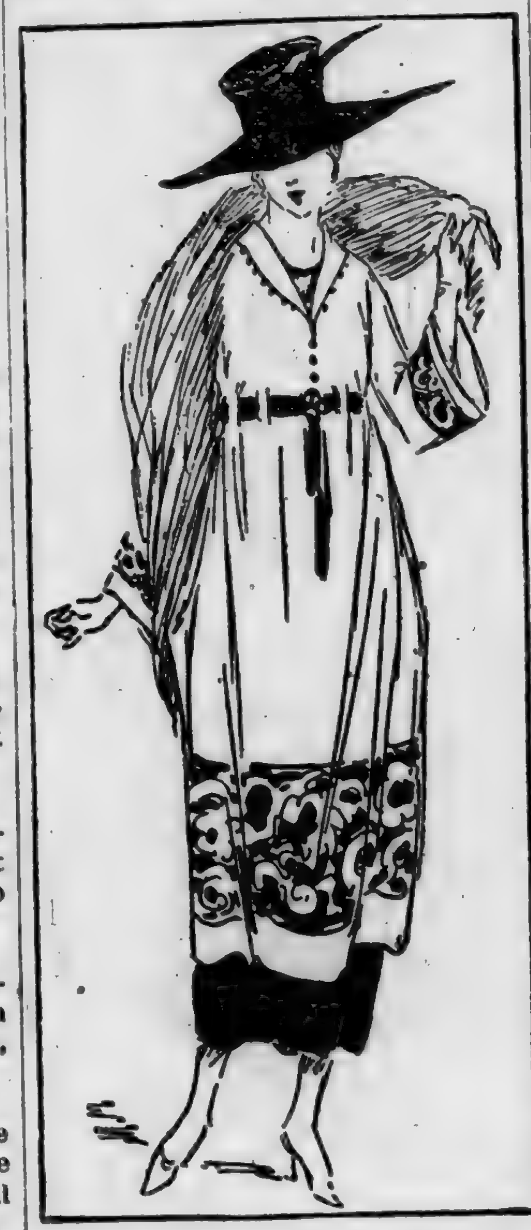
Woman's Apparel and War Period

New York.—The conservation of wool is an established fact in France and America. It is a fact that will entirely change our conception of apparel.

Silk will rule. The world has a surplus of other materials, it would seem, from statistics, and yet the foundation stone of conservation will extend throughout the fashionable clothes "for the period of the war."

The fundamental idea of saving has so penetrated the consciousness of our people, the propaganda is so widespread and vital, writes Aime Rittenhouse, that the historian of the future will surely look with extraordinary interest upon the psychological change that took place in 100,000,000 people in eight months.



Jersey frock for young girl. It is of black and white silk jersey with bands of black velvet embroidered in silver. There are long, loose sleeves.

There are changes in a nation that do not create surprise when they are thrust upon it by an invading army in war, but the change in America is one of spirit. There is money a-plenty, men by the millions, industries at full speed, and yet, with wealth and resources, 100,000,000 people have turned a somersault in their attitude toward material possessions.

Slim Little Clothes.

The passion for conservation wiped out of existence the fashion for flowing robes made of plenteous material. Whenever a slim silhouette has been thrust into the fashions, whenever an extremely short and narrow skirt has been offered to women, critics galore have risen in their bickerings and denounced women as immodest, indecent and vain to the uttermost degree.

There is no such bickering today, however. The critics of women's clothes remain silent. A man looks appraisingly at a woman gowned in a conservation costume and nods his head in approval, as though she carried a flag.

There is no more talk about indecency. The talk hinges upon the patriotism shown in the slenderness of silhouette and in the scarcity of materials won. Therefore, fashion and national approval go hand in hand. Unless we are mockingly indecent and there is no chance of that today, there is none to rise and call us outrageous.

The excessive decolletage of two years ago would create a storm of protest in any public place. Giggling, painted women with mere belts held over their shoulders by slipping bands of rhinestones, would be frowned down by men in khaki and by those in civilian clothes.

And yet women may go on the street with skirts so short and narrow that they closely resemble trousers, and laced army boots or puttees that reach well above the calf of the leg, and not a glance is given them that expresses contempt or disapproval.

The new suits in Paris, as well as those that are launched in America, show these skirts. Some are so narrow that they might cause discomfort if it were not that their shortness gave freedom of movement.

Coats are short when they belong to suits. Army capes ripple down the figure when warmth is needed.

The cape will be exceedingly smart this season, so you who have one of these garments tucked in the closet, mind it well, for in a few weeks you may be able to swing it on with the bravado adopted by all those women who are in war activities or would like to be.

The Exaggerated Waistcoat.

Capes, and long waistcoats that reach half way to the knees, are substitutes for coats in the absence of suits, although the really smart thing is the Eton or the bolero jacket, as far as the American fashions are concerned.

The early French clothes sent to this country before the present exhibitions in Paris showed the short jacket cut much after the manner of those worn by the French soldiers in Algiers, and often supplemented by the brilliant scarlet or yellow sash or an immense suede belt pulled through several buckles in front.

The Eton jacket is not for the woman with hips, however, and unless she has been able to reduce her figure to the proportions of a planked shad, it is wiser for her to look upon other models with more approval.

There are short coats that hang straight from the shoulders to a finger length below the waist and are slightly belted in such a manner that the waistline is casually defined.

Because of its limitations, this short jacket cannot be the ruling fashion. None know that better than the French artists, so they have sent over loose coats of silk poplin, and the American designers have turned out a new cape which reaches to the hips, is slim in outline and fastens at the neck with a high rolling collar.

The Revival of Lace.

Starting out with the foundation stone of the new Paris fashions, which are based on the conservation of other materials than wool, and remembering well that you must not bulge or flare or to provoke discussion as to your extravagance in the usage of fabric, then it is wise to go on to the minor adjuncts of fashion.

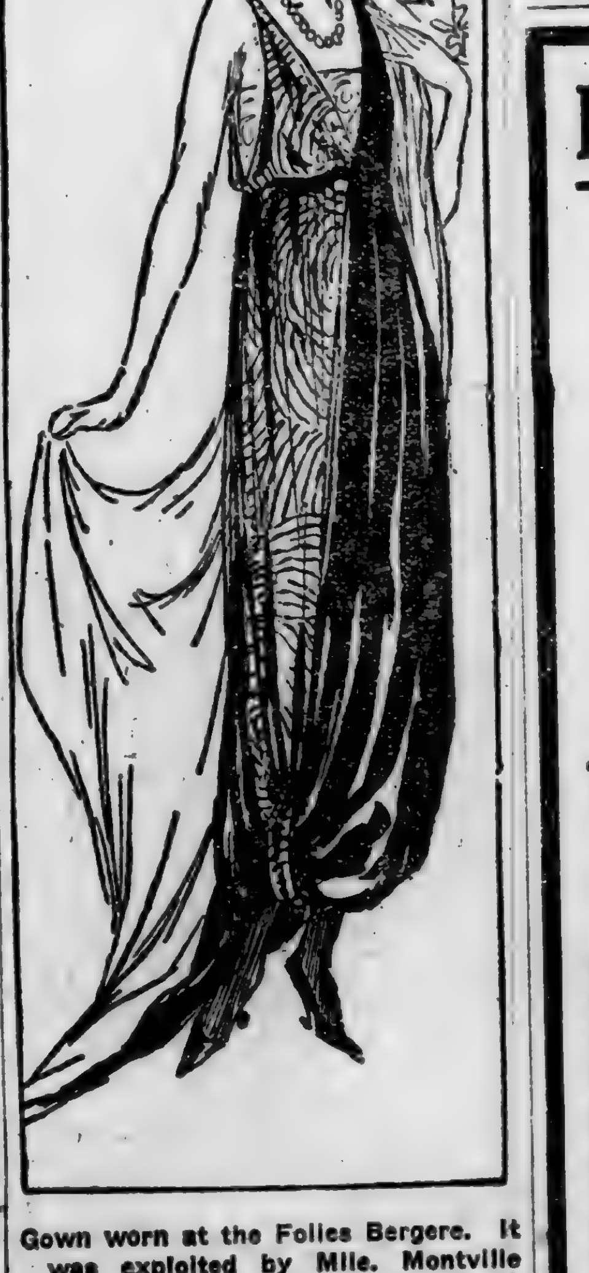
The revival of silk poplin is a bit of news that appeals to the majority of women. You know, this fabric makes admirable coat suits, and with the modern activity of nearly every woman in this country, there will not be such a wide demand as usual for frocks that need constant cleaning and laundering.

The late spring and summer will probably usher in a vast array of women dressed in silk poplin. Shantung, the thinnest gaberdine, satin and dark foulard.

The tailored suit which is adopted by such numbers of women doing active relief work, has already set its impress upon the fashions, and it is quite probable, despite the talk of the dressmakers, that coat suits of silk poplin in black, beige, brown and blue will rise to unusual heights of popularity. Let us hope this may come about.

Dinner gowns are of black, white and cream lace, and they are elaborately touched up with threads of silver and gold.

Scant lace flounces are draped over slim linings of satin and taffeta.



Gown worn at the Folies Bergere. It was exploited by Mlle. Montville and is of midnight blue satin with paillettes of satin. Note how it is caught at the ankles.

Lace bodices will be returned for usage under coat suits, and blouses that fall below the waist and are girdled with vividly colored ribbons, will be added to suits of white flannel, matelasse and jersey.

By the way, white flannel has sidled into the limelight. Palm Beach approves of it. Smart women say they like it better than jersey. Once upon a time, it was the accepted summer garb of our leisure millionaire class of men, but we have no such class today, and the decks of yachts and other pleasure craft have been placed in the category of things that were.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

The diet of the Russian peasant is to all intents and purposes vegetarian—not from choice, however. It is the coarsest and simplest of the poorest man on the face of the earth. Day in and day out Ivan sees nothing on his rickety table except black bread, made of rye flour, often mixed with weeds, acorns, and oak bark, and ground in his own quern. This is moistened and washed down with tschee, which is made of finely cut cabbage, and, in season, bits of cucumbers. Add potatoes, not always plentiful, and his menu is made up for every week day in the year.

FARM TOOLS READY

Make Needed Repairs on Machinery Before Spring Rush.

ACTUAL LOSS CAN BE SAVED

Farmers Who Wait Until Last Minute Before Examining Implements Often Encounter Trouble. —Place Orders Early.

(Prepared by the United States Department of Agriculture.)

Much time, trouble and actual loss in the operation of the farm can be saved if the implements and machines are well cared for and needed repairs made before the spring rush of work begins. Some farmers wait until it is time to use the implements then haul them out of their winter quarters. The man who follows this practice may find that important implements need repairs, and although the season is ripe for plowing or seeding, which should be done without delay, it is necessary for him to drop—all other work and attend to the repair job which could have been done earlier in the season. Orders for repair parts and new machines should be placed as soon as possible. This will acquaint manufacturers and their agents with the demand in different sections and enable them to make the best possible distribution. At the same time, it will eliminate expensive delays in transportation at the busy season.

Preserve All Machinery.

All practicable steps should be taken to preserve machinery now on hand. Needless exposure to the weather should be avoided, and in cases where it is not practicable to house machinery when idle, all bearings should receive a thorough application of heavy oil or grease to keep out moisture and prevent rust. It is believed that on many farms machinery could be more adequately sheltered in the buildings available by exercising card in placing them so as to economize space.

Importance of Oiling.

More damage can be done to a machine in half an hour through lack of oil or grease on some bearings than by a whole season's exposure to the weather, specialists of the United States department of Agriculture declare. For this sort of neglect there can be no excuse, it is said. Operating a machine without lubrication, especially when the bearings are slightly rusty, will quickly result in the wearing away of the metal, often to a considerable depth, in a very few minutes. Expensive breakages, as well as serious delays, also may be caused by operating machines on which nuts have worked loose or have come off entirely, allowing bolts to loosen or drop out.

Some consideration in the use and care of farm machinery are:

Orders for new equipment and re—pair parts should be placed as soon as possible.

To produce maximum results with a minimum of labor, new and modern, machinery in large sizes should be used wherever possible.

Serviceable equipment, not needed, should be sold or made available to others.

Useless machinery should be returned to the channels of trade as junk.

Thorough lubrication and proper care when in use will materially lengthen the period of service of farm equipment.

More care should be given to protecting farm implements from the weather.

Best Plan to Select Choice Ears and Plant in Separate Rows—Discard Large Cobs.

(R. B. COGLON, Idaho Station.)

No matter how inferior the seed corn may be, some of it is better than the rest.

The tendency is for seed of any kind to produce after its likeness.

If the best ears are selected and planted in separate rows, the rest of the field, one ear to a row, this will constitute a seed plot, where the best seed for next year can be secured.

Splendid Seed Corn Ears.

The average yield of corn in Iowa last year was less than 35 bushels per acre. Yields were secured in Idaho above 125 bushels per acre.

Buy seed corn on the ear, then you will know whether the rows were straight or crooked. You can discard the ears with large cobs and those that are immature or otherwise undesirable.

Test each ear for germination; then you won't be cultivating puny stalks this summer and cultivating and watering hills where no corn grew at all.

Gives Up Second Son

The following item appeared in a Grand Radids Daily of February 19:–"Rev. Delphos L. Berry, pastor of Joy Memorial Church, Monday, received instructions from the War Work Council of the Y. M. C. A., ordering him to report March 1, at San Antonio, Texas, prepared to go overseas at once. Rev. Berry was an active worker in both Liberty Loan and Red Cross campaigns."

Rev. Berry during the Spanish-American war served as a lieutenant and is well acquainted with the needs of the soldiers. The news of his call was a complete surprise to his people here as they had no intimation of his intention of entering the work.

He is the son of W. S Berry and wife, of Jackson township, and is known to many of our readers. Mr. Berry has been located at Grand Rapids about two years and been a success in his church. This is the second son of the Berry family that has lined up for the war; the last one being Howard, who left DeKalb County on Monday of last week, for Camp Oglethorp, Ga.

To Every Patriotic Citizen of St. Joe

Do you know that our Government wants the people of St. Joe and DeKalb county to save $500,000 during the rest of this year by buying War Saving Stamps? That means about $20 per capita. That means that we must all save. If we have not as individuals begun already, begin now, and keep it up throughout 1918.

THIS WAR MUST BE PAID FOR OUT OF THE SAVINGS OF THE PEOPLE.

Have you bought a thrift stamp yet? Sixteen 25c stamps and 13c will buy a "Baby Bond"—a War Saving Certificate during February. This will be worth $5.00 January, 1923.

You do not give the Government this money, only loan it, and United States is your security and pays you 4% interest compounded quarterly.

Many cannot buy Liberty Bonds so the Government offers small bonds within the reach of all. Every patriotic person must buy War Stamps.

It is the settled plan of the Government, following the experience of England, to establish sales stations all over St. Joe. Experience shows that a large number is essential to this saving scheme.

Please take notice that your Government asks you to help sell these stamps. To do this it is necessary for you merchants, yourselves, to purchase the stamps, especially Thrift Stamps, and keep them on hand for sale.

The Government asks you to do this Patriotically and Loyally all through this year. The merchants nation wide are asked to do this. Do this and help win the war!

DeKalb county must furnish about $1,500 a day to meet our apportionment of $500,000. At present we are only running between one third and one half of our daily quota. It will cost much more than our present twenty billions to run this war. Have you bought a stamp.

A $30,000.00 LOSS BY FIRE.

St. Joe is Again Hard Hit by the Destructive Fire Demon, when at 4:10, Early Tuesday Morning the H. L. Dunkle Brick Block was Lowered to the Ground. Origin not Known.

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Through the courtesy of the K. of P. lodge we reproduce the following:

Feb. 3, 1918.

Dear Brothers:—

It has been some time since my last letter to you, but conditions have changed a few thousand miles, and it has only been a very few days that we have been able to write.

Everyone in our company came across in fine shape, and all are working every day, building railroads, telephone lines and barracks. Yes, we do a little of everything, and six days of each week.

Long and tiresome trip on the boat, and the feeling one has when first turned loose in some of the small towns of France, you feel yourself slip back in the day of our forefathers and start living over. Some of the members will know just how one feels.

Watch the two wheeled carts driven by an old lady; and the highest class rides bicycles or painted carts.

I meet many K. of P's. in the other companies here and every place we go, so it makes one feel nearer home.

The railway trains are some of the most peculiar cars with four compartments, and three grades of passengers cars, 1st. 2nd. and 3rd. class: small locomotive, but they go right along at that, especially down hill.

Our meals are good and our quarters much better than I expected, so you may know we are well taken care of. Sincerely,

Clark F. Scholes,

Dear Mother and All:—

I recieved your letters and that one from papa. Tell papa I was surprised to hear from him; and that was sure a fine letter. I also got one from Ray, and one from Harry Shuff. I am feeling fine, and hope you are all the same. I am feeling a little weak, that is from being in here so long, and have not got any exercise. And we have not had anything to do. I am not in bed only when I want to be. We get to go any place in this ward. Everybody is feeling fine so I think that I will get back to school soon; at least I hope so, as this laying around is getting to be an old thing. Tell Ray, that it would not pay him to come out here to see me, as when I am in school I would not have only two or three hours a day, and he would not be allowed to stay here in camp after 9 o'clock at night, as they keep this place well guarded.

I will get a pay about the 25th. of next month, which I will send about $50 of it home. I have taken out an insurance of $10,000. I had taken it out before I got your letter, but that was good advise for me to do. That will leave me $23.50 a month, but that will be enough for me in the army. I have about everything that I want at present but a looking-glass; the one you sent me was all broken.

I do not know when we will move from here, as I have not heard a word about it; some of the rest are moving out, getting ready for the drafted men. Here is where I would come in if I had not enlisted, which I am sure glad I did. I do not like to have them say that they had to come and get me. I like the army life fine and dandy, I get plenty to eat and a good bed with springs and a good tick full of straw to sleep on; and I do not have to sleep with anybody.

I suppose that the old town is dead, and everybody getting ready to join the army. O yes, Mother, you asked me why they moved me: Because they had 12 men in Ward 33, and 12 in Ward 22, so they put them together and made another ward. Well Mother, as I cannot think of any more to write I will close for this time, hoping that you are all well and happy. With love to all. From your son,

Zay Sailer,

H. L. LAWRENCE
AUBURN

Again St. Joe is caused to suffer the results of a fire, which broke out in the wareroom of the H. L. Dunkle drug store, about 4:10, Tuesday morning, resulting in a loss of $30,000 to those occupying the building.

The fire was first noticed by a man and woman driving thru town, and seeing a light at the Bleeks home, gave the alarm and Jay responded at the fire bell, and soon the crowd was sufficient to begin action. When the boys arrived on the scene the flames were belching forth at the rear from the double doors in the Dunkle ware rooms. In a short time the flames were under control, when a barrel of turpentine exploded, throwing the flames completely beyond control of the firemen. The fire seemed to be seated in the paints and oils and had undoubtedly been smouldering for some time as to have been under such headway.

The flames spread rapidly to the north in the drug store making it impossible for Mr. Dunkle to get in at the front door and secure his books, making a total loss to him. In a very short time the rooms to the west occupied by Imhoff & Co. were in flames, and only a part of the shoes, notions, and dry goods were removed, valued at perhaps $1,000. Many dollars worth of goods were in boxes, having just arrived and not a thing could be reached from the rear.

The bank building on the east was the last part to burn and the furniture was removed making their loss practically nothing outside of the vault.

The I. O. O. F. lodge on the second floor suffers a total loss. They occupied the entire second floor over drug store and bank, and their rooms were nicely furnished besides having expensive paraphernalia to the value of $900.

The insurance carried on the different rooms were as follow:—

H. L. Dunkle
Drug Stock	$5,000
Building	$4,500
I. O. O. F. lodge
Piano	$ 200.00
Building	$1,050.00
Contents	$ 400.00
Imhoff & Co.
Stock	$2,000

The estimated loss above the insurance will be many thousand dollars.

The bank has opened business in the Wm. Curie rooms, while Mr. Imhoff moved his goods to his home awaiting adjustment.

The origin of the fire still remains a mystery as every precaution possible was taken to prevent fire by Mr. Dunkle. His store room was clean and goods were stored in good shape, so as to give no cause for fire and the risk was considered a good one by the insurance companies.

Arden Imhoff has not decided as to what steps he will take in regard to the opening of a store here, but the people are anxious that he do so at once. Mr. and Mrs. Imhoff are fine young folks and the people are demanding that they again open up for business, while their loss is heavy and high prices prevailing yet they are willing to stand by them even better than in the past. Mr. and Mrs. Imhoff are liked by everyone and their patronage was increasing daily.

The estimated losses are given at near $15,000 besides insurance for Imhoff at $2,000 or more, I. O. O. F. lodge $2,000 and H. L. Dunkle at $11,000, a total of $13,150.

This is the second big fire for St. Joe in the past four years. Three years last July the business block across the street from the Dunkle block burned to the ground. The buldings destroyed Tuesday morning were among the best in St. Joe, and were of brick construction.

Wednesday morning the vault of the bank was opened and every thing was O. K. The safe proper was moved to the Curie building where the banking business will be carried on. A night watchman will be employed.

Live Stock Week.

Sheep, Hogs, Housing---Should Interest every Farmer.

This is Live Stock Week in DeKalb County, and Friday is the day for this end of the county. The meeting at Coburn's Corners will be held at 9:30 and the one at St. Joe will be at 1:30 p m. at the Town Hall.

County Agent Arehart deserves much credit for bringing the talent to DeKalb County that will be with us at this time. Every farmer should be interested in more and better sheep and hogs and the best possible housing for his live stock.

Don't fail to attend one of these meetings. The old saying that "you can't get something for nothing" does not hold good in this case. You are welcome and you are urged to be present and hear these experts. They come to do us good at this time when more production is necessary.

Southern Customs.

As described by Mark Murphy in a letter to his step-father Alva Coburn of Coburntown.

Camp Sheridan,
Feb. 23, 1918.

Dear Pop:—

Hello "Pop" how are you? I am feeling fine and fat as ever or a little fatter. It is nice and warm down here now in the day time. The little coons are all running around bare-footed, shining boots and selling papers.

The older coons are plowing for cotton; which would be very interesting to you perhaps. They have their little mule teams and a plow which looks much like a potato digger and turns a furrow both ways at once. They plow up between the corn rows a furrow 3 or 4 inches deep and 8 inches wide, they then plant their cotton seed and plow another furrow in between the other furrows to cover the seed. O yes, and the trees are green and the cherry blossoms are out in bloom.

Well, to-day was inspection and I passed it like a whistle. Believe me, everything has to be up to the snuff or it is a good (bauling out) coming. Well, I must close so be good.

From Mark Murphy.

Indiana News Tersely Told

Indianapolis.—To prevent a loss of corn due to incapacity of dryers in Indianapolis to care for all the grain that has been shipped to this market, the public service commission has telegraphed to Secretary McAdoo, director general of railroads, as follows: "Shippers have flooded this market with wet corn. Our dryers are unable to handle it. Unless an outlet can be had at once thousands of bushels will be a total loss. Buffalo offers best facilities for drying corn. Can your order be modified so shippers here can reconsign to Buffalo to avert this loss?" Telegrams were also sent to Senator New and Senator Watson. The higher price offered for corn on the Indianapolis market is thought to have had something to do with the heavy shipments.

Indianapolis.—Resolutions protesting to H. A. Garfield, United States fuel administrator, against the adoption of a proposed policy involving a general increase in mine prices, which would ostensibly be for the protection of coal jobbers, on the ground that it will penalize all buyers of coal who have made their purchases direct from the mines, and protesting against the "placing in positions of final authority in the distribution of coal men intimately associated with and interested in the coal industry," were adopted at a meeting of the directors and executive committee of the Indiana state chamber of commerce. A suggestion that a schedule for summer prices for coal be established was also submitted for Mr. Garfield's consideration.

Lafayette.—Professional dairy women will be at work in Indiana for the first time, if the plans announced by Purdue university agricultural department are carried out. Announcement was made that a course in dairying for women would be given April 11 to May 4. It is said to be the first course of its kind in the United States and will enable women to act as cream station operators, milk and cream testers, ice cream and cheese manufacturers. It will enable women to take the place of men who have gone to the front.

Indianapolis. — Indiana's statewide Liberty loan conference of all agricultural organizations, which will be held in Indianapolis at the statehouse March 12, was definitely organized when a letter was sent out from the office of Gov. James P. Goodrich to the executive heads of all the agricultural associations in the state, calling them to attend the conference with the governor, G. I. Christie, state food director, and the Indiana state committee on food production and conservation.

Seymour.—Residents of suburbs outside the corporate limits of a city, who have a garden and a chicken lot, are not "farmers," according to an interpretation placed on the new flour sale ruling by the federal food administration for Indiana. The order received here said "persons who live in the country" might buy the maximum allowance of 12½ pounds of flour a week, while those who "live in the cities" would be limited to one pound a week per capita.

Noblesville.—Noblesville has two chiefs of police. One is Edward Cade, who was appointed by former Mayor Loehr, and who was reappointed the first of the year by Mayor McCoun, and the other is Charles Rambo, who has been serving as night patrolman since the present administration went into office 60 days ago. At the meeting of the city council Cade was discharged from the force on the ground of "inefficiency."

Terre Haute.—More than 90 saloon keepers, on being arraigned in circuit court before Clarence Royse, special judge, on indictments charging them with operating slot machines, filed answers in abatement, charging irregularities in connection with the grand jury which indicted the saloonkeepers. Only one saloonkeeper entered a plea of guilty. He was fined $25 and costs.

Lafayette.—Sixty Purdue men have been chosen by the commandant of the military department at the university to represent Purdue in the engineers' reserve corps of the United States army. The chemical department contributes 16 men, the civil engineering department seven, the electrical engineering department 18 and the mechanical engineering department 28.

Evansville.—Arguments in the suit of the F. W. Cook Brewing company against Lane B. Osborn, prosecuting attorney, were postponed in superior court after evidence had been introduced by the plaintiffs. The case involves a test of the state prohibition law, which goes into effect April 2.

Lafayette.—Patriotic service was the keynote of the third annual convention of the Farmer Grain Dealers' association of Indiana, which was held here. The organization is made up of farmers interested in grain elevators throughout Indiana.

Petersburg.—The Ohio Oil company, at a depth of 960 feet, drilled in a 50-barrel oil well on the Fair lease, six miles southwest of Petersburg. The Ohio Oil company, at a depth of 1,280 feet drilled in a 70-barrel well on the Gladish heirs' lease, three miles west of here. The same company succeeded in casing off a well on the W. H. Gladish lease four miles west of here that was drilled in a depth of 1,070 feet, and it pumped 136 barrels the first day. The well on the Barker lease continues making 200 barrels daily. New locations are being made almost daily.

Indianapolis.—Motortrucks to ply over 20 routes, carrying goods from wholesalers to retailers in 17 terminal cities within a radius of 50 miles of Indianapolis, will be placed in operation on April 15, according to plans of the Intercommunities Transfers Terminal company, which was incorporated with a capital stock of $50,000. The directors are E. E. Kelsey, J. T. Elliott, O. B. Ent, J. G. Marshall and H. J Alsop, all of Indianapolis. Mr. Kelsey said the terminal cities on the routes radiating from Indianapolis are Cambridge City, Rushville (two routes), Greensburg, Columbus, Nashville, Bloomington, Gosport, Brazil, Greencastle, Bainbridge, Crawfordsville (two routes), Frankfort, Tipton (two routes), Elwood, Kokomo, Anderson and Newcastle.

Indianapolis.—To learn how Indiana highway construction projects stand under the fifty-fifty plan of the federal law since the United States government has adopted a policy of restricting large expenditures to improvements regarded necessary for winning the war, L. H. Wright, chairman of the Indiana state highway commission will soon go to Washington. He regards prompt action necessary to save for the use of this state the $812,000 of federal funds that have accumulated in the last three years, and he fears that the policy of the federal government may put a serious limitation on highway improvements, except on a relatively few roads that would be of special value in the promotion of the war.

Columbus.—Bloodhounds from Bedford, followed by Sheriff Shaw and a posse of 25 farmers, trailed thieves who stole a beehive containing a gallon of honey belonging to Robert A. Coy, a farmer ten miles north of here. The dogs led the posse to the home of William McKinney, twenty-six, who with his brother-in-law, Dale Smith, sixteen, confessed the theft and produced the honey. Sheriff Shaw arrested the man and youth. When the sheriff and his prisoners and posse returned to the Coy home, Coy served the stolen honey in a lunch to all present. The service of the dogs cost $50.

Seymour.—Rev. L. T. Freeland of this city, superintendent of the Seymour district of the Methodist Episcopal church, who has taken an active part in the removal of Moores Hill college to Evansville, believes the agitation in Evansville for the repeal of the statewide prohibition law will be detrimental to the college cause. He says prominent Methodists throughout the state who have favored the removal of the college to Evansville are keeping in close touch with the action taken by the public there regarding the prohibition enactment.

Terre Haute.—The Ohio Valley Veterinary Medical association, in annual convention here, elected the following officers: Dr. C. B. L. Strohl, Oblong, Ill., president; Dr. C. T. Howard, Sullivan, vice president; Dr. C. M. F. McClean, Morgansfield, Ky.; vice president; W. G. Hassell, Graysville, Ill. vice president; S. V. Ramsey, Terre Haute, secretary, and F. C. Shake, Huntsville, Ill., treasurer.

Evansville.—The coal operators and dealers of Evansville who are asking for an increase in price have taken an appeal to H. A. Garfield, national fuel administrator. The coal men recently asked George S. Clifford, Vanderburg county fuel administrator, for a flat rate, and failing in this they asked an increase, on the ground that coal prices in Evansville are lower than in any other part of the state.

Fort Wayne.—Cattle poisoners are at work in Allen county. Three head of valuable cattle on the farm of Paul and Nathan Kucher have died as a result of lead poisoning. The poison was administered through the medium of paint scrapings. That the stuff was intentionally put on the Kucher farm to kill the cattle is believed certain. The place where it was found is fully 400 feet from the road.

Brazil.—Eleven drivers at the mine of the Cleveland Coal company, west of this city, went on strike out of sympathy for their mules. The drivers contend that the mules need a rest, in order to cure their legs, the mineral water in the mine having had a chemical effect on the flesh. The drivers say the animals' legs have been bleeding.

Houston, Tex.—Beaten to death evidently for the purpose of robbery, the body of Clyde E. Scott of battery C, One Hundred Twenty-third field artillery, was found in the railroad district of the city. Beside Scott's body was his Bible and other personal effects removed from his pockets. Scott enlisted at Fairmount, Ind., ten days after war was declared.

Princeton.—In accordance with the order of the food administration Henry Tichnor, Gibson county food administrator, took charge of the entire wheat flour supply in the county for distribution. There was no complaint from grocers.

Sullivan.—R. L. Ladd, Jackson township leader in the seed survey, reported that there were 1,806 acres of corn planted last year and the acreage this year will be 1,451, a deficit of nearly 400 acres, due largely to seed scarcity.

Muncie.—Preparations are being made by a number of oil operators holding leases in the Muncie field to begin drilling as soon as the weather permits. A few wells have been drilled in the last few weeks. George Roberts, Muncie operator, has brought in a small producer on the Levi Holloway farm, six miles northeast of Muncie. Most of the wells are to be drilled in the territory between Muncie and Parker.

Greencastle.—An epidemic of mumps and measles has spread over the campus in the last few days. Five cases have already been reported.

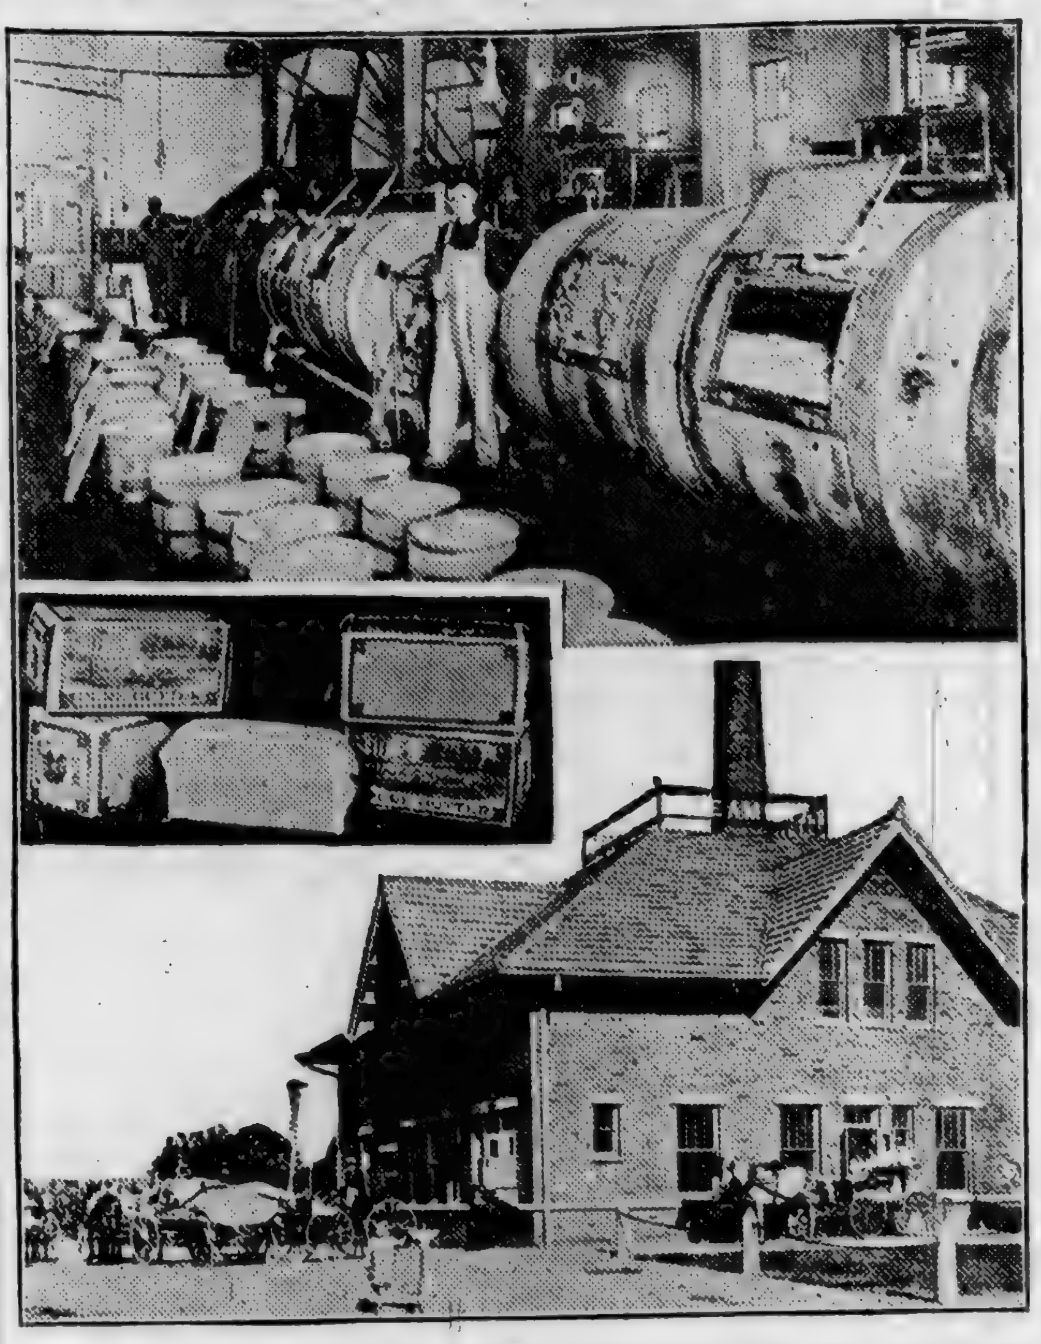
BUTTER—MAKING IT GOOD AND SAFE FOR YOU.



It May Take $100,000 Worth of Creamery Equipment to Produce Your Pound of Butter.

BUTTER MAKING IS EXPERT WORK

Process Is Just as Technical as Manufacture of Piece of Cotton Cloth.

MILK IS SKIMMED ON FARM

Cream Is Tested, Pasteurized, Cooled and "Ripened" Before Churning—Disease Germs and Bacteria Destroyed.

> This is the story of creamery butter—the steps in the manufacture of the high-grade product which comes to your table each week. Taking this food for granted, you probably have not realized the rather intricate and technical process through which it passes from milk to the finished product. If this story will inspire a sympathy which leads to a more careful and conservative use of butter it will have served its purpose.

The process of manufacturing creamery butter in a modern factory is just as technical as the manufacture of a piece of cotton cloth. In most instances the milk is skimmed on the farm by means of a hand-operated centrifugal separator, which extracts the cream much more efficiently than the old-time gravity system. The cream may be hauled to the creamery by the farmer or it may be shipped in from a farm 100 or more miles away.

As the cans of cream arrive they are inspected and sampled in order to determine their value for buttermaking. The cream is then poured into huge vats holding 300, 600, or more gallons, in each of which is a coil, or similar device, that when put in motion agitates the cream and thoroughly mixes it. Hot water and steam can be turned into these coils to heat the cream. In many creameries the cream is heated in this way to a temperature of about 145 degrees F., held at that temperature for about 30 minutes and then cooled. The process is known as pasteurization. The object is to kill any disease germs that may be in the cream and to destroy nearly all other bacteria. This protects the health of the consumer, improves the keeping properties of the butter, and enables the creameryman to control the ripening of the cream and develop the proper flavor; it also insures a uniform flavor in the butter.

A Starter Produces Flavor.

By running cold water through the coils in the vat the cream is cooled to a temperature of between 60 and 70 degrees F., and then a quantity of starter is added to produce the flavor. The starter is a culture containing many millions of lactic-acid bacteria grown in pasteurized skim milk until the milk has soured and curdled. The lactic-acid bacteria produce the desirable flavor in ripened-cream butter. When the cream is sufficiently ripened or soured it is cooled to a temperature of between 40 and 60 degree F. and held at that temperature for two hours or more, after which it is run into one of the huge churns which have a capacity of 1,000 or more pounds of butter. Although commonly called churns, they really are combined churns and workers, because, unlike home buttermaking, the butter is both churned and worked in the machine.

The churn is filled only one-third or one-half full, so that when revolved the cream which is carried up by the motion of the churn has plenty of room to fall. The concussion thus produced causes the minute globules of butterfat to gather into granules of butter. When the churn is stopped after having been run for about an hour granules of butter about the size of grains of wheat or corn will be floating on the surface of the buttermilk. Then the buttermilk is drawn off through a hole in the bottom of the churn and the butter granules washed with pure, cold water. After draining, salt is added to the granular butter which is still in the churn.

The big wooden rollers are then put into gear, the churn started and the butter worked in the churn until the salt is all dissolved and the butter has a waxy body. The butter is removed and packed into tubs or made into pound prints and put into cartons in the form in which it goes to the consumer.

Many Scientific Tests Made.

Many creameries have well-equipped laboratories in which the numerous scientific tests that are a part of the creamery business are made. A sample of every can of cream that is received is tested by means of the Babcock test in order to determine the per cent of butterfat. By this means the pounds of butterfat for which the farmer is to be paid is determined. The sourness or acidity of the cream or milk is determined by means of another test which involves the use of carefully calibrated glassware. In order that the buttermaker may be able to turn out butter having approximately the same composition day after day he tests a sample of butter from each churning for moisture and salt. Both of these tests require skillful workmanship and the use of delicate scales. Because of the highly specialized and technical apparatus used in a creamery the operator of the factory must necessarily be a technically trained man, and in fact many are graduates of special courses at the state agricultural colleges. On account of the large and expensive machinery required the creamery business demands the investment of considerable capital. The small country creamery may possibly be built and equipped for less than $10,000, but many of the larger plants cost more than $100,000.

MAKE THE SOWS EXERCISE.

One of the biggest hindrances to the farrowing of good, strong, vigorous litters is lack of exercise for the sows. During cold and snowy weather hogs like to lie around the sleeping quarters and be comfortable. That, however, is not what they should do all of the time. The proper exercise for a brood sow is that which she will take voluntarily and not through force. She should get her corn ration by hustling for it in the stalk fields and not by getting it around the sleeping quarters, on feeding floors, or in troughs. Protein feeds in the form of shorts, tankage, oil meal, or alfalfa hay should be supplied.

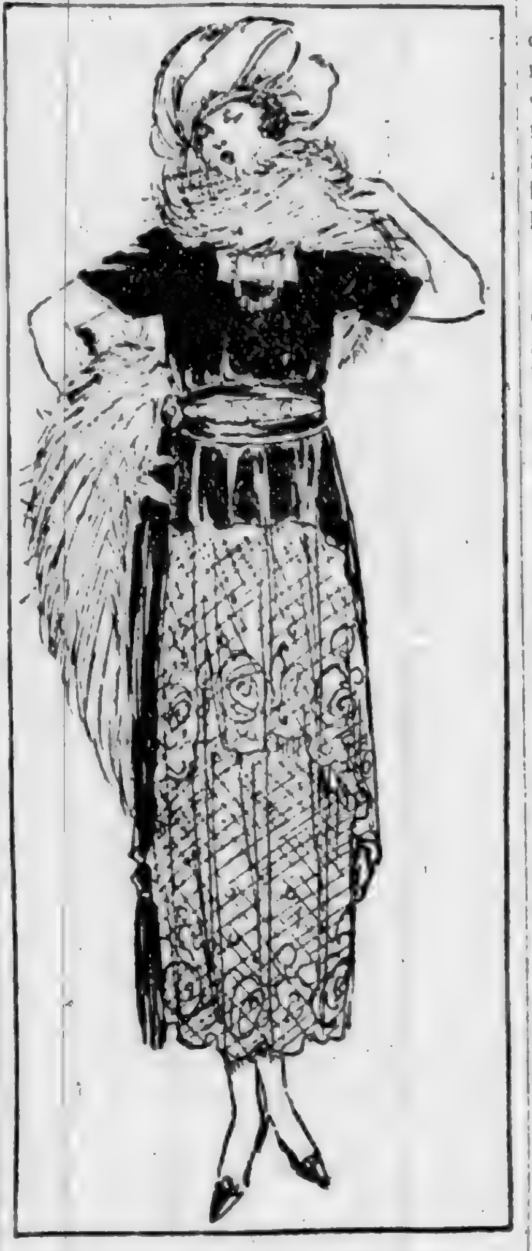
GOWNS SHOW AN ALGERIAN SKIRT

New York.—The persistence shown by France in the dressmaking houses in continuing a certain trick for several years, deserves more attention than is usually accredited it, writes Aime Rittenhouse.

A study of the obstinate way in which Paris designers have held on to a thing they liked might go far toward convincing a vast number of the critics of women's apparel that fashions are not as flighty as they seem. The weather vane turns, it is true, but it swirls back into the same quarter so frequently that at times there is a feeling that it changes little.

The American shops, it is claimed, constantly convince their patrons that an old gown must be replaced by a new one by showing a revolution in silhouette.

We have millions of women to dress where France has thousands, and we have a population that is quite capable of indulging in its desire for new clothes from the rim of the arctic circle to a line above the tropics.



This dinner frock is of black taffeta and the sturdy black silk tulle which is embroidered in a rose design in colored silks. The skirt is made of two flounces of this tulle, and it shows again at the girdle. There is a knotted sash of taffeta that hangs at one side.

It is a well-known fact that the American buyers who go to Paris to get new clothes often refuse lovely gowns if they bear a close kinship to those that were sold the year before.

Now the Zouave Skirt.

This line happens to be, at the present moment, that tucked-in effect at the hem of the skirt, which is suggestive of the trousers, of the Algerian troops.

Nobody would remember, probably, the exact date of the beginning of this idea, but it was evolved long before the war. It has been brought out in various kinds of skirts.

The house of Callot was probably the first to bring out the idea in a narrow skirt, but it did not take. Poiret, who has a devotional attitude toward anything that comes out of the East, used the skirt throughout his years of success.

Last autumn the immense bulk of the American public looked with a shrug of the shoulders at the pink and blue taffeta skirts that were tucked up at the hem and caught here and there with a formal little bouquet of roses. How stale and stupid Paris is! was the comment. Can't she ever get it into her head that America does not want that loose, overfull skirt with its ungraceful line about the ankles? Debutantes and young girls continued to dance in this kind of skirt wherever the fiddles sounded, but women of more mature years dismissed it as a fashion from the start.

Now, here it is again, not only here, but very much accentuated and accepted as the leading silhouette among certain houses that establish fashions.

The first French gowns that come over show it; the American dressmakers who are preparing for a brisk spring trade speak of it as a powerful factor in the shaping of the new fashions. And the interesting part of it is that it entirely changes the silhouette.

This seems to be in contrast with the stated fact that France is persistent in certain things and maintains a certain line for a longer period of time than America. The truth is that France persists with a trick, but changes the silhouette and still uses the trick, and that is what she has done in the new Algerian skirt.

It is difficult to say whether the trousers of the French troops in Algiers give the clew to this new skirt or whether it was the entire array of men in baggy trousers which curve in below the knees to fit the legs.

Here Is the Silhouette.

The waist is normally large, the line down the hips is either straight or slightly bulging through the fullness of the material, and the hem is exceedingly narrow and tucked under. A woman wearing the most fashionable of these skirts, with high boots added thereunto, will look at a slight distance as though she wore baggy trousers and army boots.

To the majority of women this news may not be welcome. They will fancy a far more sensational garment than what actually exists. That mild revolution against the sheath and the hobble skirt may also crop up against this Algerian skirt, but both the other features of fashion were incorporated in our ordinary apparel after a while, without creating disturbance.

There is so little fullness in this new skirt that it does not seem to be even a first cousin to the skirt of Jenny with its tucked-up hem. That skirt, which pervaded the continent for two years, had a tendency to flare out, to fling itself away from the ankles; this skirt goes in so rapidly from knees to hem that it does not need to undergo the same treatment that was accorded the other skirt.

For instance, to be technical—the fullness at its hem is not caught up and gathered to a short, narrow lining. This is not considered necessary. It is merely turned under and run into the conventional hem, allowing its fullness, slight as it is, to fall against the shoetops and accentuate the trousered effect.

This extreme skirt has brought about the narrowest silhouette we have had in years. When the hem is not tucked under, it is only wide enough to provide free movement in walking. The skirts are necessarily short, for their narrowness would greatly impede progress if they were long.

SOME OF FASHION'S FANCIES

Flower on Veil Matches Color of Brim Facing of Hat—Some New Collars —Coats With Muff Effects.

The boutonniere has a rival! Now it's the flower on the veil! This odd fashion whim is really quite lovely. The flowers match in color the brim facing of the hat and are caught at the right side of the veil toward the back.

There are all sorts of twists and turns to the new collars. Truly, it is often the collar that makes the gown! Something novel and something new is the big turnover collar of velvet or fur with long scarf ends. These cross in front, come around to the back, where they are knotted, and hang down in long tasseled ends.

Coats with muff effects are quite the smart thing this winter—perhaps for economy's sake, and perhaps just for style. A three-quarter coat of taupe duvetyn has two straight pocket slits on either side of the front concealed by bands of kerami mole (the fabric which imitates moleskin). Between these bands, which really form the ends of the simulated muff, the coat is fulled a trifle.

Narrow soutache braid is one of the fashionable trimmings of the hour. Both chalk-white and cream satin collar and cuff sets are soutached in color. Brown is a favorite, also reseda green. Georgette blouses are also lavishly soutached. One in basque effect, navy blue in color, has a fitted bodice closely soutached in dark red.

Long Shoulders in Coats.

Long shoulders identify some of the newest high-class coats, and sleeves may be set in regular armholes dropped to give the effect or have the seam projecting with bodice on jumper lines. One model has the shoulder seam shirred to give a softer effect.

Hat Crowns of Flowers.

Hats this spring frequently show crowns of flowers. A large purple hat is made with a crown of violets. A hat of georgette crepe shows a crown of geranium blossoms.

Gypsy Sash.

Everyone knows that the so-called gypsy sash which has been taken from the Roumanian vagabonds is apt to increase the size appearance of the hips, and yet it has come into fashion as quickly as a thunder shower comes up in August. There is a strong belief among the designers that this Roumanian hip girdle, which is as old as Nineveh and Tyre, will not prove popular, but all the designers believe that the bias movement, which is creeping into all the fashions and which expresses itself in long, oblique lines, will soon take the place of the straight, Indian and Alexandrian silhouette.

Ginghams for Collars and Cuffs.

Silk gingham is used for collar and cuff sets on frocks or serge and other heavy fabrics. The gingham used is usually in small checks. The collars and cuffs are edged with a tiny pleated frill.

Blue for Lingerie.

Pale blue lingerie is coming into vogue since women seem to have tired of so much pink. Pale blue is not a very satisfactory tint for underwear—after the first washing—for the color turns a dingy drab.

The first of April in the Mount Mark parsonage was a time of trial and tribulation, frequently to the extent of weeping and gnashing of teeth. The twins were no respecters of persons, and feeling that the first of April rendered all things justifiable to all men, they made life as burdensome to their father as to Connie, and Fairy and Prudence lived in a state of perpetual anguish until the twins fell asleep at night well satisfied but worn out with the day's activities. The twins were bordering closely to the first stage of grown-up womanhood, but on the first of April they swore they would always be young! The tricks were more dignified, more carefully planned and scientifically executed than in the days of their rollicking girlhood—but they were all the more heartbreaking on that account.

The week before the first was spent by Connie in a vain effort to ferret out their plans in order that foreknowledge might suggest a sufficient safeguard. The twins, however, were too clever to permit this, and their bloody schemes were wrapped in mystery and buried in secrecy. On the thirty-first of March Connie labored like a plumber would if working by the job. She painstakingly hid from sight all her cherished possessions. The twins were in the barn, presumably deep in plots. Aunt Grace was at the Ladies' Aid. So when Fairy came in, about four in the afternoon there was only Prudence to note the vengeful glitter in her fine, clear eyes. And Prudence was so intent upon feather-stitching the hems of pink-checked dish towels that she did not observe it.

"Where's papa?" Fairy asked.

"Upstairs."

"Where are the twins?"

"In the barn, getting ready for THE DAY."

Fairy smiled delightedly and skipped eagerly up the stairs. She was closeted with her father for some time, and came out of his room at last with a small coin carefully concealed in the corner of her handkerchief. She did not remove her hat, but set briskly out toward town again.

Prudence, startled out of her feather-stitching, followed her to the door. "Why, Fairy," she called. "Are you going out again?"

Fairy threw up her hands. "So it seems. An errand for papa." She lifted her brows and pursed up her lips, and the wicked joy in her face pierced the mantle of Prudence's absorption again.

"What's up?" she questioned curiously, following her sister down the steps.

Fairy looked about hurriedly, and then whispered a few words of explanation. Prudence's look changed to one of unnaturally spiteful glee.

"Good! Fine! Serves 'em right! You'd better hurry."

"Tell Aunt Grace, will you? But don't let Connie in until morning. She'd give it away."

At suppertime Fairy returned, and the twins, their eyes bright with the unholy light of mischief, never looked at her. They sometimes looked heavenward with a sublime contentment that drove Connie nearly frantic. Occasionally they uttered cryptic words about the morrow—and the older members of the family smiled pleasantly, but Connie shuddered. She remembered so many April Fool's days.

The family usually clung together on occasions of this kind, feeling there was safety and sympathy in numbers—as so many cowards have felt for lo these many years. And thus it happened that they were all in the dining room when their father appeared at the door. He had his hands behind him suggestively.

"Twins," he said, without preamble, "what do you want more than anything else?"

"Silk stockings," was the prompt and unanimous answer.

He laughed. "Good guess, wasn't it?" And tossed into their eager hands two slender boxes, nicely wrapped. The others gathered about them with smiling eyes as the twins tremulously tore off the wrappings.

"A. Phoole's Pure Silk Thread Hose—Guaranteed!" This they read from the box—neat golden lettering. It was enough for the twins. With cries of perfect bliss they flung themselves upon their father, kissing him rapturously wherever their lips might touch.

"Oh, papa!" "Oh, you darling!" And then, when they had some sort of control of their joy, Lark said solemnly, "Papa, it is a gift from heaven!"

"Of course we give you the credit, papa," Carol amended quickly, "but the thought was heaven-prompted."

Fairy choked suddenly, and her fit of coughing interfered with the twins' gratitude to an all-suggesting Providence!

Carol twisted her box nervously. "You know, papa, it may seem very childish, and—silly to you, but—actually—we have—well, prayed for silk stockings. We didn't honestly expect to get them, though—not until we saved up enough money enough to get them ourselves. Heaven is kinder to us than we—"

"You can't understand such things, papa," said Lark. "Maybe you don't know exactly how—how they feel. When we go to Betty Hill's we wear her silk stockings and lie on the bed —and—she won't let us walk in them, for fear we may wear holes. Every girl in our class has at least one pair—Betty has three, but one pair's holey, and—we felt so awfully poor!"

The smiles on the family faces were rather stereotyped by this time, but the exulting twins did not notice. Lark looked at Carol fondly. Carol sighed at Lark blissfully. Then, with one accord, they lifted the covers from the boxes and drew out the shimmering hose. Yes—shimmering—but—they shook them out for inspection! Their faces paled a little.

"They—they are very—" began Carol courageously. Then she stopped.

The hose were a fine tissue-paper imitation of silk stockings! The "April Fool, little twins," on the toes was not necessary for their enlightenment. They looked at their father with sad but unresentful reproach in their swiftly shadowed eyes.

"It—it's a good joke," stammered Carol, moistening her dry lips with her tongue.

"It's—one on us," blurted Lark promptly.

"Ha, ha, ha," laughed Carol, slowly, dryly, very dully.

"Yes—ha, ha, ha," echoed Lark, placing the bitter fruit carefully back in its box. Her fingers actually trembled.

"It's a—swell joke, all right," Carol said; "we see that well enough—we're not stupid, you know. But we did want silk stockings so—awfully bad. But it's funny, ha, ha, ha!"

"A gift from heaven!" muttered Lark, with clenched teeth. "Well, you got us that time."

"Come on, Lark, we must put them sacredly away—silk stockings, you know, are mighty scarce in a parsonage—"

"Yes, ha, ha, ha," and the crushed and broken twins left the room, with dignity in spite of the blow.

The family did not enjoy the joke on the twins.

Mr. Starr looked at the others with all a man's confused incomprehension of a woman's notions! He spread out his hands—an orthodox, ministerial gesture!

"Now, will someone kindly tell me what there is in silk stockings to—" He shook his head helplessly. "Silk stockings! A gift from heaven!" He smiled, unmerrily. "The poor little kids!" Then he left the room.

Aunt Grace openly wiped her eyes, smiling at herself as she did so.

Fairy opened and closed her lips several times. Then she spoke. "Say, Prue, knock me down and sit on me, will you? Whatever made me think of such a stupid trick as that?"

"Why, bless their little hearts," whispered Prudence, sniffing. "Didn't they look sorry? But they were so determined to be game."

"Prudence, give me my eight cents," demanded Connie. "I want it right away."

"What do you want it for?"

"I'm going down to Morrow's and get some candy. I never saw a meaner trick in my life! I'm surprised at papa. The twins only play jokes for fun." And Connie stalked grimly out of the parsonage and off toward town.

A more abashed and downcast pair of twins probably never lived. They sat thoughtfully in their room, "A. Phoole's Silk Thread Hose" carefully hidden from their hurt eyes.

"It was a good joke," Lark said, now and then.

"Yes, very," assented Carol. "But silk stockings, Larkie!"

And Lark squirmed wretchedly. "A gift from heaven," she mourned. "How they must be laughing!"

But they did not laugh.

Connie came back and shared her candy. They thanked her courteously and invited her to sit down. They they all ate candy and grieved together silently.. They did not speak of the morning's disaster, but the twins understood and appreciated the tender sympathy of her attitude, and although they said nothing, they looked at her very kindly and Connie was well content.

The morning passed drearily. The twins had lost all relish for their well-planned tricks, and the others, downstairs, found the usually wild and hilarious day almost unbearably poky. Prudence's voice was gentle as she called them down to dinner, and the twins, determined not to show the white feather, went down at once and took their places. They bore their trouble bravely, but their eyes had the surprised and stricken look, and their faces were nearly old. Mr. Starr cut the blessing short, and the dinner was eaten in silence. The twins tried to start the conversation. They talked of the weather with passionate devotion. They discussed their studies with an almost unbelievable enthusiasm. They even referred, with stiff smiles, to "papa's good joke," and then laughed their dreary "ha, ha, ha," until their father wanted to fall upon his knees and beg forgiveness.

Connie, still solicitous, helped them wash the dishes. The others disappeared. Fairy got her hat and went out without a word. Their father followed scarcely a block behind her. Aunt Grace sought all over the house for Prudence, and finally found her in the attic, comforting herself with a view of the lovely linens which filled her Hope Box.

"I'm going for a walk," announced Aunt Grace briefly.

"All right," assented Prudence. "If I'm not here when you get back, don't worry. I'm going for a walk myself."

Their work done irreproachably, the twins and Connie went to the haymow and lay on the hay, still silent. The twins, buoyant though they were, could not so quickly recover from a shock like this. So intent were they upon the shadows among the cobwebs that they heard no sound from below until their father's head appeared at the top of the ladder.

"Come up," they invited hospitably but seriously.

He did so at once, and stood before them, his face rather flushed, his manner a little constrained, but looking rather satisfied with himself on the whole.

"Twins," he said, "I didn't know you were so crazy about silk stockings. We just thought it would be a good joke—but it was a little too good. It was a boomerang. I don't know when I've felt so contemptible. So I went down and got you some real silk stockings—a dollar and a half a pair—and I'm glad to clear my conscience so easily."

The twins blushed. "It—it was a good joke, papa," Carol assured him shyly. "It was a dandy. But all the girls at school have silk stockings for best, and—we've been wanting them—forever. And—honestly, father, I don't know when I've had such a—such a spell of indigestion as when I saw those stockings were April Fool."

"Indigestion," scoffed Connie, restored to normal by her father's handsome amends.

"Yes, indigestion," declared Lark. "You know, papa, that funny, hollow, hungry feeling—when you get a shock. That's nervous indigestion—we read it in a medicine ad. They've got pills for it. But it was a good joke. We saw that right at the start."

"And we didn't expect anything like this. It—is very generous of you, papa. Very!"

But he noticed that they made no move to unwrap the box. It still lay between them on the hay, where he had tossed it. Evidently their confidence in him had been severely shattered.

He sat down and unwrapped it himself. "They are guaranteed," he explained, passing out the little pink slips gravely, "so when they wear holes you get another pair for nothing." The twins' faces had brightened wonderfully. "I will never play that kind of a trick again, twins, so you needn't be suspicious of me. And say! Whenever you want anything so badly it makes you feel like that, come and talk it over. We'll manage some way. Of course, we're always a little hard up, but we can generally scrape up something extra from somewhere. And we will. You mustn't—feel like that—about things. Just tell me about it. Girls are so—kind of funny, you know."

The twins and Connie rushed to the house to try the "feel" of the first, adored silk stockings. They donned them, admired them, petted Connie, idolized their father, and then removing them, tied them carefully in clean white tissue paper and deposited them in the safest corner of the bottom drawer of their dresser. Then they lay back on the bed, thinking happily of the next class party! Silk stockings! Ah!

"Can't you just imagine how we'll look in our new white dresses, Lark, and our patent leather pumps—with silk stockings! I really feel there is nothing sets off a good complexion as well as real silk stockings!"

They were interrupted in this delightful occupation by the entrance of Fairy. The twins had quickly realized that the suggestion for their humiliating had come from her, and their hearts were sore, but being good losers—at least, as good losers as real live folks can be—they wouldn't have admitted for the world.

"Come on in, Fairy," said Lark cordially. "Aren't we lazy today?"

"Twins," said Fairy, self-conscious for the first time in the twins' knowledge of her, "I suppose you know it was I who suggested that idiotic little stocking stunt. It was awfully hateful of me, and so I bought you real silk stockings with my own spending money, and here they are, and you needn't thank me, for I never could be fond of myself again until I squared things with you."

The twins had to admit that it was really splendid of Fairy, and they thanked her with unfeigned zeal.

"But papa already got us a pair, and so you can take these back and get your money again. It was just as sweet of you, Fairy, and we thank you, and it was perfectly dear and darling, but we have papa's now, and—"

"Good for papa!" Fairy cried, and burst out laughing at the joke that proved so expensive for the perpetrators. "But you shall have my burnt offering, too. It serves us both right, but especially me, for it was my idea."

And Fairy went away feeling very gratified and generous.

Only girls who have wanted silk stockings for a "whole lifetime" can realize the blissful state of the parsonage twins. They lay on the bed planning the most impossible but magnificent things they would do to show their gratitude, and when Aunt Grace stopped at their door they leaped up to overwhelm her with caresses just because of their gladness.

She waved them away with a laugh. "April Fool, twins," she said, with a voice so soft that it took all the sting from the words. "I brought you some real silk stockings for a change." And she tossed them a package and started out of the room to escape their thanks. But she stopped in surprise when the girls burst into merry laughter.

"Oh, you silk stockings!" Carol cried. "Three pairs! You darling, sweet old auntie! You would come up here to tease us, would you? But papa gave us a pair, and Fairy gave us a pair, and—"

"They did! Why, the silly things!" And the gentle woman looked as seriously vexed as she ever did look—she had so wanted to give them the first silk-stocking experience herself.

"Oh, here you are," cried Prudence, stepping quickly in, and speaking very brightly to counterbalance the gloom she had expected to encounter. She started back in some dismay when she saw the twins rolling and rocking with laughter, and Aunt Grace leaning against the dresser for support, with Connie on the floor, quite speechless.

"Good for you, twins—that's the way to take hard knocks," she said. "It wasn't a very nice trick, though of course papa didn't understand how you felt about silk stockings. It wasn't his fault. But Fairy and I ought to be ashamed, and we are. I went out and got you some real, genuine silk ones myself, so you needn't pray for them any more."

Prudence was shocked, a little hurt, at the outburst that followed her words.

"Well, such a family!" Aunt Grace exclaimed. And then Carol pulled her bodily down beside her on the bed and for a time they were all incapable of explanation.

"What is the joke?" Prudence asked, again and again, smiling—but still feeling a little pique. She had counted on gladdening their sorry little hearts!

"Stockings, stockings— Oh, such a family!" shrieked Carol.

"There's no playing jokes on the twins," said Aunt Grace weakly. "It takes the whole family to square up. It's too expensive."

Then Lark explained, and Prudence sat down and joined the merriment, which waxed so noisy that Mr. Starr from the library and Fairy from the kitchen, ran in to investigate.

"April Fool, April Fool," cried Carol. "We never played a trick like this, Larkie—this is our masterpiece."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

MEANING OF NAME DECEMBER

Twelfth Month's Title Derived From Latin Word "Decem," When There Were Only Ten Periods.

The name of December is no longer appropriate, for it is derived from "decem," the Latin word meaning "ten," declares a writer. The name was first applied by the Romans when the year was divided into ten months, with the addition of supplementary days to complete the period required for a revolution of the earth around the sun.

When the calendar of Romulus was amended in 713 B. C. by Numa Pompilius and the year was divided into twelve months December became the twelfth month, but retained its original name. The Emperor Commodus, who reigned in the second century, attempted to change the name of December to Amazonius, in honor of a fair favorite of that name, whom he had painted to resemble an Amazon. This innovation was not popular, and when Commodius died from poison administered by another feminine favorite the name of Amazonius died with him.

The ancient Saxons called the last month Winter-monat, which was afterward changed to Heilig-Monat, or holy month, when they were converted to Christianity. The modern Germans again changed the name to Christmonat, because the month contains the anniversary of the birth of Christ.

New Electric Furnaces.

The success of electric heat in japan and varnish oven work has led to considerable investigation along the line of what might be termed low temperature heating; that is, heating with temperatures up to 600 degrees Fahrenheit. The results of these investigations have brought out numerous other applications, among which are electric core baking ovens, electric bread baking ovens, ovens for making cereals, drying woolen articles and equipment for sherardizing.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

CLEANING THE MEDICINE CLOSET

The medical temperance department of the National W. C. T. U. has been no small factor in cleaning Uncle Sam's medicine closet. The superintendent of this department, Mrs. Martin M. Allen of New York, thus describes the process:

"When we started in to clean the medicine chest of the great United States, the chest was a dreadful sight. Whisky, port wine, sherry wine, beer to give strength, brandy and gin for certain ailments all stood in proud array on prominent shelves.

"To attempt to clean up such a medicine chest was a task sufficient to appall stout hearts. But a few brave souls said the task should be done, and gradually, surely, the cleaning has been going on. Some of the best physicians of the country aided in the task. Soon the whisky bottle for the consumptive was thrown away, then the brandy for the typhoid fever patient. Beer and wine were swept off the shelf by the aid of athletes who had proved that these drinks weaken instead of giving strength. Whisky for pneumonia was the next to go, and finally the American Medical association swept off the last remaining bottle of alcohol as unnecessary in the treatment of any disease."

GENERAL PERSHING ON PROHIBITION.

In an address before the National W. C. T. U. convention, Dr. Anna Howard Shaw gave direct testimony as to the attitude of General Pershing on prohibition.

"I had the pleasure of meeting this great hero last spring in San Antonio, Texas," she said. "The citizens gave me a banquet, and among the honored guests was General Pershing. When he was called on for a toast, the great leader of the army stood up and pronounced himself a confirmed believer in the enfranchisement of women and in prohibition. After he had taken his seat and the program had been concluded, General Pershing was told by some of his Texas friends, 'Prohibition is an unpopular subject in Texas. We are not in favor of it.' the general replied, 'So long as I am at the head of the army I shall speak of prohibition.' 'But go slow in this matter,' they said. General Pershing responded, 'I shall not go slow on prohibition, for I know what is the greatest foe to my men, greater even than the bullets of the enemy.'"

BRIEF AGAINST LIQUOR.

The Union club of Cincinnati recently put out the following "brief:"

The law says:—That the liquor traffic has "no inherent right" to exist.

The courts:—That drink is largely the cause of crime and pauperism.

Physicians:—That drink is the chief cause of disease.

Business:—that drink produces incompetency and inefficiency.

The home:—That drink destroys happiness and prosperity.

The school:—That drink is the greatest enemy of education.

The church:—That drink is the chief foe to religion.

Motherhood:—That drink poisons the very fountains of life.

Economy:—That drink wastes food and robs labor.

Conservation:—That drink is always destructive, never constructive.

Patriotism:—That drink has disqualified a large percentage of the young men called to the colors, and, as Gen. Leonard Wood says, "is the soldier's worst enemy."

THE CIVILIAN ARMY AS IMPORTANT AS THE SOLDIER ARMY.

The sale of liquor to the soldier in training in the United States has been forbidden, so that he may be strong, alert, steady-handed, always ready, working with esprit de corps. At every essential point there is exactly the same reason for abstinence from liquor by the civilian. The men who mine coal, make munitions, cloth, uniforms, shoes, ships, run trains and steamers, or supervise any aspect of business life are just as much a part of the war machinery as the soldier. The scientifically demonstrated effects of alcohol are not peculiar to the soldier. Most of these results, in fact, have been secured in tests on civilians.

PROHIBITION A PART OF GREAT PLAN.

Slowly, steadily, undeterred and unfrightened, the movement upon the strongholds of John Barleycorn has gone forward. To call it a wave of prohibition is a weak figure. It has been more like one of those inexorable changes which group under evolution. There has been no more staying it than holding back the grinding, unhurrying and unsatisfied forces of erosion.—Detroit (Mich.) Journal.

WHAT JEFFERSON SAID.

The habit of using ardent spirits by men in office has occasioned more injury to the public and more trouble to me than all other sources. And were I to commence my administration again, the first question I would ask respecting a candidate for office would be, "Does he use ardent spirits?"—Thomas Jefferson.

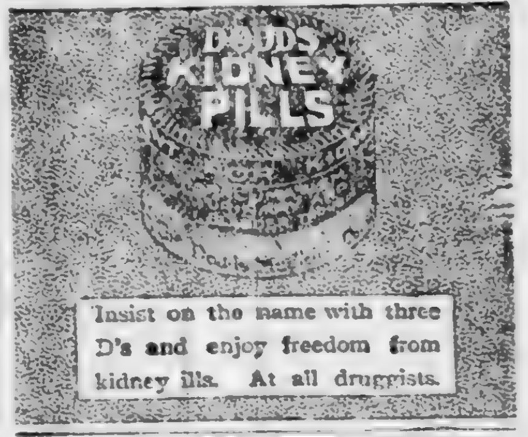
Alcohol, by diminishing the moral and material strength of the army, is a crime against national defense in the face of the enemy.—General Joffre.

Dodd's Kidney Pills Relieve After 20 Years' Suffering

Mrs. James Dotz, of Zanesville, O., is one of thousands of people who in the past 40 years have been relieved of the agonies of kidney trouble by taking Dodd's Kidney Pills. Only recently we received an unsolicited letter from Mrs. Dotz, which reads as follows:

"For twenty long years I suffered with heart disease and bladder inflammation. I had frequent chills, cramps in the muscles and suffered from headache and backache. I was often dizzy and had flashes of light and floating specks before my eyes. I could get no help until I started to take Dodd's Kidney Pills. Then I began to improve right away and six boxes of these Pills completed the cure.

"My little boy also had kidney trouble and was cured by Dodd's Kidney Pills. I hope thousands of others, suffering as I have, hear of your wonderful remedy."



Insist on the name with three D's and enjoy freedom from kidney ills. At all druggists.

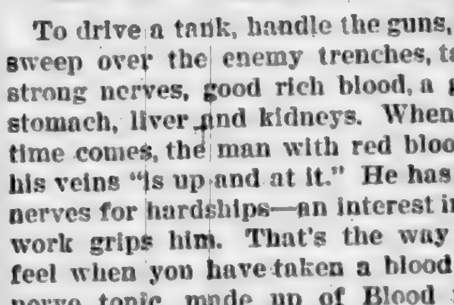
"Do you know anything of the art of husbandry?" "I ought to; I've married off five daughters."



To drive a tank, handle the guns, and sweep over the enemy trenches, takes strong nerves, good rich blood, a good stomach, liver and kidneys. When the time comes, the man with red blood in his veins "is up and at it." He has iron nerves for hardships—an interest in his work grips him. That's the way you feel when you have taken a blood and nerve tonic, made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Stone root, Cherry bark, and rolled into a sugar-coated tablet and sold in sixty-cent vials by almost all druggists for past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. This tonic, in liquid or tablet form, is just what you need this spring to give you vim, vigor and vitality. At the fag end of a hard winter, no wonder you feel "run-down," blue, out of sorts. Try this "Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce's. Don't wait! To-day is the day to begin! A little "pep," and you laugh and live.

The best means to oil the machinery of the body, put tone into the liver, kidneys and circulatory system, is to first practice a good house-cleaning. I know of nothing better as a laxative than a vegetable pill made up of May-apple, leaves of aloe and jalap. This is commonly sold by all druggists as Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets, and should be taken at least once a week to clear the twenty-five feet of intestines. You will thus clean the system—expel the poisons and keep well. Now is the time to clean house. Give yourself a spring house cleaning.—Adv.

Rural schools which have been in the habit of celebrating the close of the school year with a lavishly prepared dinner are cautioned against this practice this year, because "of the critical condition of our food supply." Teachers and trustees, county and city superintendents are asked to co-operate in forestalling any such extravagant waste. This is the order of the State Council of Defense.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The management as well as the Red Cross chapter are more than pleased with the results of the play "The White Oak Tavern" given by local talent at the Widney opera house, Friday evening. The hall was full, many being unable to obtain seats. Each one in the caste played their part very well indeed. Miss Gladys Kain made a delightful heroine as Ruth Warren, daughter of Bill Warren, (George Wilmot) who insisted on his daughter marrying the Psuedo Capitalist Dan Holden, (which part was ably carried out by Merritt Maxwell,) instead of the man she loved, Orin Hall, the hero to whom she afterward gave her hand. Durwood Ridgway took the part of both Hank Davis, sheriff at White Oak and Jim Burns the tough, and was equally fine in both. Stanley Koch made a fine Irish stage driver and later a "cop" as Denny Gallagher. And who would think that Sam Mumaw could impersonate a Chinese or negro so well. Esther Bowman carried the part of sister and accomplice of Dan Holden. Frank Bowman's career was short as the waiter at Palm Gardens. William Quance took the part of Juan San Miguel, the Mexican who was on the trail of Holden for a wrong he had done his sister. Herbert Curie as the young newspaper reporter got a little mixed up while asking for the hand of the hero's sister Miss Mabel Hall, (Lena Meek) but finally made him understand what he wanted and the play ended as usual. Those wronged came into their own and those deserving punishment "got theirs." The chorus girls must not be forgotten because their bright patriotic songs between acts were a pleasure to listen to. The evening's entertainment was fittingly closed by a tableau showing the Red Cross works of mercy. The proceeds was one of the good things to listen to as it amounted to a little over $85.00.

NINE PAIRS SHOES FOR PERSHING MEN

GENERAL ASKS FOR LARGE FOOTGEAR SUPPLY FOR SOLDIERS IN FRANCE.

AIRPLANE MISHAPS ARE FEW

With Hundreds of Men Learning to Fly, War Department Records Show Number of Accidents at Military Aviation Fields Comparatively Small.

Washington.—Gen. Pershing has requested shipment of 18,500 pairs of shoes for each 25,000 men monthly, which is approximately nine pairs of shoes per man per year. This quantity is in excess of actual consumption and is being used to build up a reserve for all troops in France. When such a supply is accumulated, the quantities per man will be reduced.

The quartermaster general's department now has on hand and due on outstanding contracts, 7,564,000 field shoes and 7,873,000 marching shoes. It will be necessary to secure more than a million additional shoes during the year.

Records of the war department show that from the beginning of training in June, 1917, to February 22, 1918, the fatalities at military aviation fields in this country have been 51; 10 officers and 29 cadets killed in training flights, and 12 men killed in unauthorized flights and ground accidents.

Since the training began in the United States, student aviators have flown considerably more than 100,000 miles. Hundreds of hitherto inexperienced men have been learning to fly. Their early flights are under the guidance of instructors, and prior to these flights two or more months are spent in preliminary ground work. There comes a time, however, when every student aviator must take his machine up alone, and every precaution has been taken to reduce the number of accidents and safeguard the aviator in his solo flights.

The fuel administration is carrying on a series of conferences covering all industries which use large quantities of fuel, with a view to learning the requirements of each line during 1918. The industries themselves are playing a leading part in these discussions. The aim of the fuel administration is to arrive at a percentage of production which, under the circumstances, will be satisfactory to the manufacturers and their workmen, but which will not represent a comsumption of fuel for the manufacture of supplies not needed during the current year.

The order which has been issued limiting the use of fuel for the production of window glass to 50 per cent of the amount manufactured in 1917 is the result of one of these conferences. A survey of the field indicated that while not more that 5,000,000 boxes of window glass would be used in 1918, competitive conditions were likely to result in an overmanufacture of at least 2,000,000 boxes.

It is through this system of limitation, together with large economy in the methods of using fuel, that the fuel administration expects to supplement the production of coal this year. It is hoped, as the railroads strenghten their facilities, that it will be possible to mine and transport a larger quantity of coal this year than last, but it is through these methods of reducing consumption that a repetition of this year's shortage is expected to be prevented.

Rifle and cartridge production in the United States has developed in volume and in quality on a scale assuring the satisfactory equipment of the army, according to a statement authorized by the secretary of war.

To achieve the rifle and ammunition production program the government has expended or has obligated itself to expend, during 10 months of war, $400,000,000, and 200 officers, 80,000 men, and 10,000 women have been engaged exclusively in the manufacture of rifles and cartridges. Two government plants and three privately owned plants are engaged in making rifles and one government plant and nine privately owned plants are engaged in cartridge manufacture. Ordnance experts in this country and in Europe are in agreement that the United States army is being equipped with two of the best three rifles in the world.

"Stars and Stripes" is the name of the weekly newspaper being published in France for American troops, under the direction of the intelligence section. Practically the entire paper is devoted to American news, including a daily radio report of about 1,400 words supplied by the committee on public information to the French government.

A Swiss commercial paper states that there is a great shortage in coal of all kinds, an insufficient supply of wood for fuel, and small reserves in oils and grease throughout Switzerland. Fresh eggs have disappeared from the market. Dry vegetables are becoming more scarce. A project to manufacture flour from potatoes had to be abandoned because sufficient supplies of potatoes could not be secured.

In Holland coal and coke prices have been advanced. In American terms, the maximum price for anthracite is about $22 a ton; coke, $10 a ton; coal briquets, $25 a ton. Distribution is carefully regulated by cards, in specified quantities. The amount allowed, especially to residences, is much smaller than in peace times.

New French food regulations forbid eating houses to serve of consume fresh or packed butter otherwise than in the preparation of food. Curdled or sour milk is prohibited as well as cream and specified kinds of cheese. The making of pastries, biscuits, and confectionery is prohibited. Only in dining cars, canteens and railroad refreshment stations may fresh or condensed milk or cream be served after 9 in the morning, by itself or mixed with coffee, tea, or other preparation. No solid foods may be served between 9 and 11 in the morning and between 4:30 and 8:30 in the evening. When the price of a meal exceeds $1.20 the customer may be served with not more than two dishes with or without vegetables, or more than one small loaf of ordinary bread. The bread is limited to about 3½ ounces. All grain which may be used for making bread is reserved for human food.

At each cantonment in the United States a school has been established where every officer and man receives instruction in gas defense. The American gas mask, similar to the British, is as mechanically perfect as the best experts have been able to produce. The face piece, with glass or celluloid eyepieces, is connected by a flexible tube with a canister carried in a knapsack. The incoming breath comes through the canister, which is filled with several layers of chemicals which neutralize or render harmless the gas-laden air. Outgoing breath passes outside the face piece through a small valve.

The student in gas defense soon learns to get his mask on in a hurry, six seconds being the standard time when the knapsack containing the mask is hanging at his chest in the "alert" position. After intensive training a gas attack is arranged. The class is put in trenches, and without warning, clouds of smoke and chlorine are liberated by the instructors, masks are hurriedly put on, alarms sounded, and sleeping men in dugouts aroused. When the attack ceases the trenches are cleared of gas, the air is tested, and permission is given to remove masks.

Describing the American Red Cross as a body authorized to do everything possible for the comfort and welfare of the soldiers, and to make use of such agencies as are authorized and are in a position to contribute to that end in addition to the provisions made by the government, a general statement by the war department outlines certain approved activities:

To distribute sweaters, mufflers, helmets, socks, comfort kits, etc.

To render emergency relief of every kind upon request of an officer in charge.

To relieve anxiety and sustain the morale of soldiers who are worried about their families at home, and to promote the comfort and well being of these families.

To conduct canteen service stations for furnishing refreshments to soldiers when traveling through the country; to furnish emergency relief to the sick and wounded when en route and to see that they are conveyed to a hospital when necessary and requested by the commanding officer.

A representative of the Red Cross may be attached to each base hospital to furnish emergency supplies when called upon, to communicate with families of patients, to render home service to patients and such other assistance as pertains to Red Cross work.

When the first Liberty motor was ready to be tested it was taken to Pike's Peak that it might be studied while running under atmospheric conditions obtaining at high altitudes. This difficulty of bringing the motor to the mountain is now overcome at the department of commerce bureau of standards at Washington, by bringing the mountain to the motor.

Airplane motors are now tested at the bureau of standards in a laboratory where various conditions corresponding to high altitudes and low temperatures are secured. The engine is placed in an air-tight concrete room, provided among other things with refrigerator coils and a large pump to reduce the presure of the air. By use of this apparatus motors may be observed under conditions similar to those at different altitudes, which might otherwise be done only by actual airplane flights.

Clean White Feathers.

White feathers of any kind, especially white plumes, can be cleaned at home to look like new at a very small cost. Take one quart of gasolene and five cents' worth of plaster of paris and mix together to the consistency of whipped cream. Dip the feathers in this mixture several times and squeeze and pat them for a few minutes. Then hang up in the open air to dry thoroughly and until all the gasolene has evaporated. (Remember never to use gasolene in a room with a light or fire; it is very explosive.) Be careful not to handle feathers until thoroughly dry. Then shake well (but not too hard) and results will be a beautiful fluffy feather. Furs may be cleaned in this way, both white and light gray, with perfect results.

LET THE WISE SOWER LOOK TO HIS SEED.

PURCHASE ONLY LABELED SEEDS

Farmers Urged Not to Take Any Chances With Product of Poor Quality.

MAKE A GERMINATION TEST

Home-Made Device Will Tell Value of Seeds—Clean Small Grains Before Sowing—Send Sample to Agricultural College.

The seed trade has voluntarily agreed to label all field seeds with the percentage of pure seed that will grow, giving the purchaser exact information as to quality. The United States Department of Agriculture urges all farmers to buy their seeds only from dealers who comply with this agreement and not to run the risk of buying high-priced, unlabeled seed that will not give a stand in the field.

Make Germination Test.

Get your seed early and make a germination test of it before sowing. Count out 100 seeds; put them between folds of moist paper or cloth between two dinner plates and keep at room temperature for four days; then count the sprouted seeds. If 95 seeds sprout the seed is good; if only a small part of them sprout the seed is either poor or the test was not properly made. If in doubt as to the value of the seed send a sample to your state agricultural experiment station or to the Seed Laboratory, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., with the request that it be tested for quality, including percentage of purity and germination.

Don't take any chances with the quality of the red clover seed you sow this spring.

High Price of Seed.

Never before has the price of red clover seed been so high as it is at the present time, and never has the quantity of seed on hand been so small in proportion to the acreage to be seeded.

In years when the demand for any kind of seed exceeds the supply, all available seed is put on the market and much of the seed is of poorer quality than in normal years. Therefore, every farmer before sowing should know what proportion of the seed he buys cannot be expected to grow. If one lot contains 96 per cent of seed that will grow and another lot contains 64 per cent of seed that will grow it will take three bushels of the 64 per cent seed to sow the same number of acres that two bushels of the 96 per cent will sow.

This is important from the standpoint of cost alone when red clover seed is selling for $20 or more per bushel. It is much more necessary, however, to know the quality of seed in order that the rate of seeding may be proportional to the quality, so that enough live seed will be sowed to insure a stand in the field. First know how much of the seed may grow and then sow accordingly.

CLEAN SEED BEFORE SOWING.

Cleaning and grading the smal grains for spring sowing should be done before the spring rush in preparing the land and sowing the seed. Wheat, oats, barley, and flax can be improved for seeding by running the seed through the fanning mill at least once. The cleaned grain will run through the drill or other seeding machinery more evenly and thus insure a more uniform stand than can be obtained from uncleaned grain.

Cleaning grain removes most of the weak and diseased kernels, many of which may not grow at all, or if they do grow are likely to produce small, weak plants. Uniformly large, plump kernels germinate more evenly, produce stronger plants, and yield more than ungraded grain containing small, shrunken kernels.

Thorough cleaning also removes a large part of the weed seeds the grain contains. The preparation of the land for seeding destroys many seeds that are in the ground and thus helps to keep weeds in check, but the value of this work is largely lost if foul seed is sown.

SCREENING SEED MAY PREVENT NEW DISEASE.

Screening out the shriveled grains from wheat seed before planting will remove one cause of spreading the new bacterial disease of wheat which has been discovered in many states of the middle West. This has been learned by specialists of the United States Department of Agriculture who, in co-operation with the experiment stations of Kansas and Wisconsin, are studying the problem of controlling this disease. Wheat kernels that are plump do not contain bacterial cavities, but shriveled ones often do.

SEED DEALERS TO FURNISH INFORMATION WITH PRODUCT.

According to a plan agreed upon by representatives of the seed trade and representatives of the United States Department of Agriculture in conferences last year, seed dealers will provide the following information with all lots of ten pounds or over of field-crop seeds which they sell:

1. Name of seedsman.
2. Kind of seed.
3. Proportion of pure live seed present, with month and year of germination test.
4. Country or locality of origin in the case of the following imported seeds: Beans, soy beans, Turkestan alfalfa, and red clover from southern Europe and Chile.

Since the seed trade conferences, practically all the larger seedsmen have individually agreed to conduct their business in accordance with these suggestions.

LESSON FOR MARCH 10

JESUS RESTORING LIFE AND HEALTH.

(May be used as missionary lesson.)

LESSON TEXT—Mark 5:21-43.

GOLDEN TEXT—Himself took our infirmities and bear our diseases.—Matt. 8:17.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 9:27-35; Luke 7:16-17; 11-13; John 5:1-9; 11:1-46; 10:7-18.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus restoring the little girl to life.

MEMORY VERSE—Bless Jehovah O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—Ps. 103:2.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Jesus the giver of life.

MEMORY VERSE—John 10:10.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Medical missions.

This is one of the most beautiful stories of the Bible. It appeals to the loving parents' hearts and charms the attention of every child. The introduction of the woman who touched the Master's garment is referred to by three of the gospel writers and gives us an intensely interesting sidelight on the reception accorded to Jesus during his Galilean ministry.

The dramatis personae is as follows: (1) The Father is about to lose all the poetry and music of his home. (2) The Child, twelve years old, is just on the threshold of Jewish womanhood. It takes little imagination to picture how her life had entwined itself about the heart of the father and the other loved ones. The stricken child is still to be found in the land, and it is this background which makes the picture so vivid. Why the suffering? Why the separation? Only our Heavenly Father knows it all, and some day we will read the answer in the glory of his presence. (3) The Woman, who—where from or whither to we are not told—only one of a vast throng who had just faith enough to touch the hem of his garment and be made whole. (4) The Galilean Prophet's response to the furtive touch of need was instantaneous, but without the marring movement of haste. We can fancy these characters walking along the highway. Jesus paused as they were interrupted. The woman was healed the moment she touched his garment. What is the meaning of the pause?

Having taught the multitude and encouraged the heart of Jairus, they reached the home, where Jesus excluded all but Peter, James and John, who entered with him into the house of tumult, made somber by the weeping and wailing of professional mourners and relatives. Again we are impressed with the

as he asked, "Why this tumult? the child only sleeps." Their laughing scorn is due to their ignorance of the power of the Mighty Christ in face of the fact that the child was really dead. When he had turned the unbelievers out, Jesus took the father, mother and disciples into the chamber of death. The occasion was not for a spectacular demonstration of power. Having restored the child to life and to its parents, Jesus admonishes them not to publish the news broadcast. Evidently he was not yet ready to precipitate matters in the minds of the multitude, for of a surety he knew that in certain quarters the fact of the cure would be made known.

This is a beautiful picture of love: (1) The Father's love (vv. 22-24). (a) His need; (b) his position "at Jesus' feet;" (c) his plea, "I pray thee;" (d) his insistence, "besought greatly." (2) The Stranger's Plea (vv. 25-35). (a) An interruption; (b) "Of long standing;" (c) Jesus' knowledge; (d) Jesus' response; (e) her confession; (f) her blessing. (3) The Master's Love (vv. 35-43). (a) Jesus' knowledge; the child was not dead in his sight; (b) delay does not mean refusal; (c) the tender resurrection in answer to faith; (d) the provision for her needs.

Sorrow brought Jairus to Jesus. Sorrow today brings more men to Jesus than perhaps any other means. Certainly it has been so during this great war. As the ruler of the synagogue Jairus laid aside his pride and hostility to make his plea for help and accept service of Jesus.

There are three recorded instances where Jesus raised the dead. This "only daughter," which was a simple and apparently easy matter. (2) The "only son" of a widow, when he "stopped the bier." This was apparently attended with more difficulty than that of the little girl, for "she only slept." The raising of Lazarus, a grown man, apparently presented still greater difficulties. Viewed from our human angle there were difficulties, but with God there are none. His fiat created the time and matter worlds. To ascribe difficulty to God is but to judge him by our standards.

The great need in the foreign field is evangelization supplemented by education and the ministry of healing through dispensaries and hospitals. In the midst of the present war situation let us not forget our responsibility to the unevangelized at home and abroad. Jesus is still the Resurrection and the Life for "sleeping" children, communities and nations.

Why did Jesus spend so much time in working miracles? To impress the value of his life upon the world as a testimony to his divine office, and a prophecy of his authority in his coming Kingdom.

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

22 Million Families in the United States

IF EACH FAMILY saved one cup of wheat flour it would amount to 5,500,000 pounds, or more than 28,000 barrels. If this saving was made three times a week, it would amount to 858,000,000 pounds, or 4,377,000 barrels in a year.

You can do your share in effecting this saving and really help to win the war by omitting white bread from one meal today and baking in its place muffins or corn bread made according to this recipe:

Corn Meal Muffins

- ¾ cup corn meal
- 1¼ cups flour
- ½ teaspoon salt
- 4 teaspoons Royal Baking Powder
- 2 tablespoons sugar
- No eggs
- 1 cup milk
- 2 tablespoons shortening

Sift dry ingredients together into bowl; add milk and melted shortening and beat well. Bake in greased muffin tins in hot oven about 20 minutes. Same batter may be baked as corn bread in greased shallow pan.

War Saving Stamps

The conductor was a patient sort of a man. "Every body move up!" he yelled. Nobody budged. „Move up for'd please, please" he implored. And nobody paid any attention. Finally he got desperate, Will everybody move just a little" was his appeal. Everybody grinned and moved just a little, and the conductor was relieved.

It isn't an easy thing to jolt a nation into a different domestic routine. But the painful fact is that we are face to face with a great emergency and it must be done. The situation struck near home when one of our transports was sunk by a U-boat. And since our boys are in the front line trenches and we scan the papers daily for the casualty list we more fully realize what this war means. The need for "everybody to move just a little bit" is at hand. We may as well grin when we do it, too!

I suppose by this time everybody knows what War Saving Stamps are but it must be that many people are not as interested in them as they should be for in DeKalb Co., we are only reaching about one-fourth of our allotment for the given time. The time is here when we must do better. We know that there has been a prodigious waste going on in our country and perhaps one great blessing that will come to us from this war apart from the great end to mnke the world safe for democracy will be that it will learn to our American people a great lesson of economy and thrift.

A canvas is being made among the business men of St. Joe and they are being asked to become sales stations as a matter of patriotic duty.

When you are making a purchase and have some change coming to you instead of spending it for cigars or candy or some other luxury or unnecessary thing that will do you no good and may do you actual harm you should spend it for Thrift Stamps instead.

Thus in a small yet altogether efficient way you will be helping our government to win the war and also help yourself by providing for the proverbial rainy day:—The following business places have become War Saving Stamp Stations—G. M. Barney's, Ed Leight'ys grocery stores and Zonker's meat market, Kinsey's Hardware and News.

The public schools are an efficient agent in promoting these sales. Parents should listen to their children about the matter that has been presented to them at school and encourage both thrift and patriotism by letting them buy these stamps.

In two or three weeks a house to house canvass will be made and it will be expected to have at least one in every home who is regularly buying Thrift Stamps.

A War Saving Certificate will be as much an evidence of patriotism as the red triangle button worn in the lapel of the coat or the Red Cross hung in the window.

No License Required

A false rumor is being circulated that the farmers are required to take out a license in order to open a sugar camp. This is false. The government has never promulgated such an order. The Food Administration is urging the farmers to produce all the syrup possible and the government will not interfere with the amount farmers can make. Furthermore, the Food Administration is urgently requesting farmers to plant sorgum in order to help out the sugar shortage. The story in rega d to license being required is no less than German propaganda.

A Garbled Report

The report of St. Joe's big fire, as printed in the Fort Wayne Journal-Gazette, was the worst garbled up affair we ever saw, and that in face of the fact that their reporter was here splurging around, labeled with a big pin on his coat, heralding to the public that he represented that great (?) sheet. Had he made half an effort he could have secured accurate facts and figures.

Some of the big dailies make a big effort to get the sensational features of a disaster of this kind, but if you want the straight of it, your local papers are the ones that gives it.

From Ft. Wayne Journal Gazette:—

Red Cross Liars in Danger.

The Red Cross has determined to vigorously combat the canards reflecting upon the organization none too soon, and the friends of the Red Cross will be glad to learn that Captain Morrison is in Fort Wayne assigned to the work of tracing these falsehoods to their source. There is something especially offensive and indecent in the dissemination of lies intended to discourage people from actively aiding the Red Cross in its noble work. Some of these may be of enemy origin. Others are probably uttered thoughtlessly because of some one's personal pique with the officials of the organization, and while these latter have no thought of disloyalty they are serving the cause of disloyalty as effectively as though they were actually engaged in propaganda. The action now taken will result in curbing the tongues of the latter and in exposing the perfidy of the former. Any one hearing stories reflecting upon the work of the women of the Red Cross should immediately report to Captain Morrison, giving the name of his or her informant to the end that this form of semi-treason may be stopped.

Captain Morrison is employed by the Lake Division of which we are a part. If anyone in our territory hears any thing detrimental to our work locally, they may prove their patriotism by reporting the same to Captain Morrison or the DeKalb Co., Council of Defense. It will also be a favor to the workers in our Branch—We will take this opportunity to correct one story being circulated here at present. The report is out that Mrs. Price and Mrs. F. R. Bowman bought a supply of goods for this chapter at Ft. Wayne. That the package was given to Mr. Bayman, at Ft. Wayne, to deliver to St. Joe Branch but it was stolen from the hack and we never received it. This is absolutely false. The goods were purchased at DeWald's and Wolf & Dessauer's, and were shipped via Wabash. We have the bills, the goods, and the freight bill. Anyone caring to see the same may do so.

Mrs. Cordelia Yarnelle is interested in the Red Cross and anxious to work but her physical condition prevents her from going to the work room. She has commenced to knit a war blanket and if the ladies here will bring their scraps of yarn to her to knit she will turn the blanket to our chapter for shipment. Ladies will you not immediately look for your scraps of yarn, any color, or see if you have something sweaters or caps, you could ravel and use the yarn?

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 14 1918 NO. 11

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

On Board Ship,
Jan. 16, 1918.

Dear Mother and All:—

Will take this time to write you a letter and say I am just fine. If nothing happens we will be in port in a few hours: what port or where I do not know and could not tell if I knew. We have sure had a fine trip all the way across. No bad weather except a few showers of rain and a couple of rough days. But ours is a large ship and rough weather does not bother it much. I have not been sick a minute on the whole trip. Clark has been well, too. The trip seemed to be only 4 or 5 days to me. Several of the fellows have been pretty sea sick, and we have had some mumps and measles in our company but all are doing well.

There is a fellow, Cecil Boyer, in our husband from Kalamazoo, and he says he knew Virgil; he worked at the same mill. We have one from Peru that helped to build the Auburn Court House. There are about four or five of the sailor boys from Indiana, too, and one from Kokomo. I would like to tell you more but they don't want it told, so I won't.

Has Dad got his corn husked yet? It is 11:00 here now and I suppose you are just thinking about getting up, as there is 6 hours difference in time. We have had fine warm weather all the way across. Have only worn my coat about 3 or 4 days; is nice yet but can't say what it will be on land. Well, must close as we have inspection soon. From your son,

C. C. Kain.

P. S.—We are now in sight of land. 11:30 A. M.

Camp Sheridan,

Feb. 24, 1918.

Mr. and Mrs. John Miller,
Butler, Indiana.

Dear Father and Mother,—

I recieved your letter the other day. I am now out of quarentine again; we were let out Saturday, and I was put on kitchen police today. We had it quite easy while we were quarentined, didn't have to drill or work on any detail at all for two wee"s. Quite a rest, wasn't it; we put in a lot of time reading, I have read the Bible a lot of the time; I know you will like that alright, won't you? Well, you said it was snowing up there, it has been as high as 80 above zero in the shade here. We have had clear weather the most of the month of February, until last week, it rained one night and was cloudy a couple of days. The sky clouded over this morning but soon cleared up again. It is quite windy to-night. Well, the Captain came in the kitchen today, and told me my transfer to the Remount Station was turned down, said they had enough men over there. I would like to be near Dewey, but will do right where-ever I am; I may get the chance for a transfer yet.

Well, I am going back to the olden time, I am writing by candle light. We thought we would move our tent yesterday, so we disconnected the wire and then we didn't get the tent moved, or the light fixed again. They have a large Coliseum here on the old state fair ground, it is one of the old fair buildings; they are having shows there every night for the benefit of the Ohio soldiers. They have a Y. M. C. A. here also, where religious talks and Bible class are held on Sunday and a picture show in the evening, to pass away the time. Well, now I will close for this time, and I will write a few lines to Dewey. From your son,

J. Byron Miller,
Camp Sheridan,
Montgomery,
Co. F. Ala.

March 3, 1918
Columbus Barracks

Dear Parents:—

Well this is another beautiful Sunday morning, sun shining and warm. March coming in like a lamb, trust it will continue this way. I suppose sugar camps have all been opened and Frank Sechler fishing for suckers.

My pal I had my picture taken with was detailed to Washington D. C. the first of last week. The change of environment seems to fill one with new inspirations. You ask me what kind of beds we sleep on. They are very similar to a cot, one for each man. Our shack has forty cots and once a week we have a new tick bag, clean sheet and pillow case. Each bunk has six woolen blankets, and cots about thirty inches apart. We sleep alternating, one head to center of the room and the other one head to the outside wall. This is to prevent breathing each others breath (and are supposed to keep our feet clean.) Each one makes his own bunk and they are inspected once a week by our captain. It is my duty to call the "Kitchen Police" at 5:30 on week days and 6:30 on Sunday, but they received their second Typhoid Profaclactus today and are at liberty for twenty-four hours to do as they please. This T. P. makes some very sick especially the second shot, and some it does not, mine did not. Taps sound at nine o'clock, all lights out however my duty allows me to go any where, any time and stay as long as I please, but I am waiting detail so I keep close watch of the bulletin board. If a soldier should be up town and miss detail, then look out, blue suit and fatigue duty.

Have received the News each time and everything else you have sent me. This will be all for this time. Lovingly, Merritt A. Hull.

Did It Pay Frank?

There never was a time in the history of the agricultural enterprise of DeKalb County, when the testing of seed corn is of such a necessity as this year. Every farmer should be prepared before the time of planting, and know what his corn will do.

Frank Johnson, of Concord township, raised an exceptionally good lot of corn for the season last year, and he picked out his seed early and cared for it. He had many calls for seed but would not engage any of it until he had made the test. The result of this test is alarming. Out of 380 ears of the choicest of his lot, only 15 ears tested 100% and 16 ears 80%. The balance was a total loss.

Can you Mr. Farmer afford to plant your seed this year and not know what it will do? The needs of the nation demands of you, that you do test your corn and that every move you make this spring be toward producing food stuff, and not that you do this farming in a hap-hazzard way.

Food will win the war,
We must win.

It's A Lie

I understand that there is a story going the rounds in St. Joe that Ed Leighty phoned me on the morning of the disastrous fire in which the Dunkle block was destroyed, "not to let Mr. Imhoff have my east room in opera house block." Said story is not true. Mr. Leighty did not phone me that morning at all. The only one that phoned me was my son, H. M. Widney, telling me of the fire and asking me about that room. I told him to take charge of the room and use it to the best interest of the town and he has charge of the room at this time. The story so far as Mr. Leighty is concerned is untrue. I received no phone except the one above stated.

O. H. Widney.

If St. Joe ever had a liar its the fellow referred to above. It's to our interest to have more business for St. Joe and we have never had a more honest competitor than Arden Imhoff. Some fellows are more or less given to starting gossip of an injurious nature and then there are others eager to pass it on. If we knew the offender we would at once proceed to expose him. Ed.

Hired for 4 Years More.

Approval of the work performed by Malcolm B. Leighty as superintendent of the DeKalb county infirmary is seen in his reappointment at an increased salary.

Mr. Leighty has been the superintendent of the county farm for a year at a salary of $650. The county commissioners have made a new contract with him at $800 a year for the years 1918, 1919, 1920 and 1921.

The commissioners found by the annual inventory of the farm that the stock and equipment are worth $1,275.80 more now than a year ago. A reason for this is the higher market value of grains and live stock. The figures of the 1918 inventory are $14,406.80, while last year's were $13,131. The 1916 inventory showed a value of $12,587, an increase of $1,819 in the two years being apparent.—Star.

Citizens Meeting

Ninety men gathered at the City Hall, Monday evening, in an effort to take some action as a community, to induce A. M. Imhoff & Co., to remain in St. Joe, and re-open a new business. A committee was appointed to wait on Arden Imhoff and submit the wishes of the meeting. Tuesday morning the committee performed their duty and found that their efforts were of no avail, hence no meeting will be called for this (Thursday) evening.

The following proposition was settled upon by the meeting. The rent would be paid for one year, the building to be put in shape and shelved at the expense of the community.

Due to the fact that Mr. Imhoff was already a looser by $2,000 and goods were so much higher than last fall, he felt as though he could not put in another stock at the present.

Tuesday, Mr. Imhoff sold his goods saved from the fire, amounting to $1,450, to W. R. Holden & Co., of Fort Wayne, and they in return begun negotiations for the room in the opera house block, and St. Joe will have a large stock of goods put in by Mr. Holden. We also learned that Mr. Imhofi was to remain in St. Joe and operate the store.

The mass meeting also decided to assist Mr. Dunkle in cleaning up the debris on Tuesday and about twenty-five men rallied and cleaned the walks off by the middle of the afternoon.

Mr. Dunkle has not fully decided as to what he will do. The Bank, however, have commenced their plans for a new building in the old location, with a modern equipment in every way. The insurance adjuster was on the job, Monday, and every policy was paid in full with the exception of $200 on the I. O. O. F. piano, which was adjusted at $165.

Word From Galion, Ohio

Galion, Ohio,
3-2,-1918

Mr. Editor:—

There being many in the vicinity of St. Joe who I consider as my friends I wish for space in your paper to write to them. To begin with will say, War and War Stamps occupy first place, day and night. The P O office of Galion sold many war stamps the past month. We are the possessor of one thousand dollars in that commodity. Many of the shop men buy stamps and bonds. We began work for the Iron Work Co., Aug. 21st. Wages run from 25c. per hour up. There are Germans, Mexicans, Italians, Americans and Negroes, all working together like brothers. Everything in the food line is sky high; but eggs have dropped from 60c. per dozen to 35c., this week. Galion has a little over 8,000 population, many factories, 14 saloons and 17 churches.

I would like to see my old friends in DeKalb. The people here are friendly and accommodating. The South Western Electric car line and the Lincoln Highway pass through here, and the great Erie Ry. and Big Four have fine depots here. The Iron Works Co., manufactures cast sewer tile and all kinds of road machinery. They are now working on an order of 20 large Road Graders for the Government. The foundry runs day and night. When running full force they employ around 300 men. I work on the second floor of the Pattern Makers building which is heated with steam. All I am exposed to the cold is going to and coming from factory, a 10 minute walk.

They Plead Guilty

Another act in the story of the whiskey party at Spencerville of January 24 is given in the trial of James Moody, William Allen, Charles Chapman and James Vallieu in Judge Link's court Wednesday morning.

Moody, Allen and Chapman were charged with participation in the theft and Vallieu with receiving stolen property. They pleaded guilty and each was fined $1 and costs, a total of $21.55, ordered to help pay for the $250 worth of liquor stolen and are held under suspension of sixty-day penal farm sentence.

The fines and costs were paid. There are now seven men charged with the payment for the whiskey. The other three are William McKinley, Ralph Palmer and Clarence White. They were arrested a few days after the party and in making their confession to the court they implicated Moody, Allen, Chapman and Vallieu. The seven men will pay about $36 each for the whiskey.

When they were arraigned before Judge Link, Wednesday, Moody, Vallieu, Allen and Chapman admitted their guilt and each told his story of the affair. The judge then warned them to stay out of trouble in the future and reminded them that the penal farm sentence would be effective for two years, only good behavior preventing its enforcement.

Attention, Farmers!

We wish to say to you that we are permitted to resume operations and our mill is running every day. The Food Administration wishes the farmer to be 100% efficient this spring, in the putting out of larger crops than ever before. Now is the time to get your flour for your needs thru the spring planting. We are prepared to supply your needs. Always bring your wheat that you have to sell to the mill so that the offal will remain here where you can get it.

To Establish Road.

Upon receiving the favorable report of the election on the T. C. Stafford road in Jackson township, the commissioners ordered the road established, graded, drained and paved in accordance with the terms of the report of the viewers and the specifications. The auditor was ordered to give notice to contractors for the receiving of bids on April 3.

Mrs. Lizzie Gustin and family, of South Scipio, moved to the Harry Jones farm, north of town, last week. Mr. Jones and family are now located at Hicksville.

Ten Days' Meeting

The weather has been long and severe, but Easter time is almost here, when everything, everywhere bursts into new life—and why not spiritual life? What does Easter time mean to you? What would your life mean to you, if there were no Easter, no risen Saviour?

Thursday evening of this week begins a ten days' special evangelistic service at the Lutheran church This first night is "church members night." SUGAR SUPPLY IS ASSURED PACKERS

FOOD PRODUCTS MANUFACTURERS ADVISED THEY WILL BE ABLE TO OBTAIN NECESSARY REQUIREMENTS.

EQUIPMENT OF WAR PLANES

Each Aircraft Needs Extra Material and Staff of Skilled Men—Removal of Officers From Medical Reserve Corps.

Washington.—Manufacturers of essential food products have been advised by the food administration that they will be able to obtain their full requirements of sugar for manufacturing purposes during the coming year.

This applies particularly to packers of fruit, condensed milk, such vegetables for the preservation of which sugar may be necessary, as well as to the housewives, for usage in preserving purposes. As soon as the car shortage is relieved, according to the food administration statement, supplies of sugar will be available for these purposes. Shipments from Cuba are steadily increasing.

All canners have been advised to hold for war purposes such quantities of canned corn, peas, tomatoes, string beans, and salmon as they may have on hand. Such quantities as are not wanted will be released within a few days after receipt of reports showing stocks on hand, which must be submitted to the food administration before March 15.

After three years of warfare the total number of airplanes able to take the air at any one time on either side of the western front has not been over 2,500. Each plane in the air requires a force of 46 men, two replacement planes on the ground, and one training plane for every pilot who eventually reaches the front, with an extra engine for each plane.

The life of a plane is not more than two months, and the engine must be overhauled after each 75 hours. Now that American battle planes are going overseas, the great problem is to secure the thousands of skilled mechanics, enginemen, motor repair men, wood and metal workers needed to keep the planes in perfect condition. This engineering and mechanical force at the airdromes, the flying fields, and repair depots, both here and behind the lines in France, is a vital industrial link in the chain to air supremacy.

From the declaration of war to February 23, the surgeon general of the army has removed 1,050 officers of the Medical Reserve corps. In the following table the reason assigned for discharge does not isolate under "inaptitude for the service" all those whose dismissal was in considerable degree due to inefficiency or incompetency, since these reasons had weight in many cases otherwise classified.

Discharged for physical disability, 411; inaptitude for the service, 154; to join other branches, 306; domestic difficulties, 59; resignation, 88; needed by communities, hospitals, schools, 82.

During the same period there have been 2,265 promotions, including some officers promoted more than once.

Plans have been announced for the organization of "Junior Four-Minute Men" in every school in the country. According to the division of Four-Minute Men of the committee of public information, bulletins especially prepared for school children will be sent during the third Liberty loan campaign for distribution by superintendants to all schools in the United States. Addresses will be prepared from the material in these bulletins just as regular Four-Minute speakers in motion-picture houses prepare their own speeches from bulletins supplied by the government.

In each school the children submitting the best speeches are to deliver them in public. According to plans the boy or girl awarded first prize is to get a certificate from the United States government as a Junior Four-Minute Man.

Packages containing dutiable gifts sent to members of the expeditionary forces temporarily serving in England will be delivered free of duty, provided the contents contain bona fide gifts, the quantity is not beyond the personal requirements of the addressee, and that the parcels are addressed for delivery to the regimental address of the recipient.

A navy base hospital with a capacity of 500 beds has reached the war zone. It will take care of navy personnel, both ashore and afloat, and if accommodations exist will also be available for army and allied sick and wounded.

All persons or firms engaged in importing, manufacturing, storing, or distributing fertilizers of fertilizer ingredients must secure licenses on or before March 20. Application must be made to the Law Department, License Division, United States food administration, Washington, D. C.

It is reported from Germany that wood is being largely used in place of celluloid, ivory, and other substances for the manufacture of combs. Excellent toilet combs are made from thinly cut birch and beechwood.

A memorandum made public by the war department concerning the use of armed guards about industrial plants contains the following:

"The soldier in training who has offered his life for the defense of country should not sacrifice his effectiveness by performing police duty in the protection of property back of the lines. This is the duty of the citizen at home.

"The theater for operations for armed soldiers is the battlefield of Europe. Each civilian should aid his country by acting as a guard for the detection and prevention of intrigue, deceit, and all the familiar stealthy operations of the enemy, in our midst. Each soldier unnecessarily detailed as a guard in this country aids and abets the enemy in Europe.

"Often a guard may be needed for the safety of a factory. When it is, it should be supplied by the owner of the factory, by the municipality, or by the state.

"These measures apply not only to manufacturing plants, but are equally applicable to shipyards, grain elevators, and stores of supplies."

The necessity for thorough and continuous training of troops in gas defense is shown by a statement proved by captured German documents:

The Germans at a certain position on the western front knew the British were planning to deliver a gas attack on a German division equipped with masks, but poorly trained in their use. In spite of the fact that they had several days to drill before conditions were suitable for the British attack, when it was finally made hundreds of German casualties resulted.

Many kinds of gases are used in modern warfare. Some merely affect the eyes temporarily, and are more inconvenient than serious. Other gases are terrible in their effect unless proper protection is available. They are employed in clouds, or in shells, bombs, and hand grenades.

It is the work of the field training section of the gas defense service to bring home to the American soldier the importance of his gas mask, to thoroughly drill him in its use and to inspire confidence in its efficiency.

According to an announcement by the war trade board a special license has been issued covering shipments made by persons in the United States to, and for the personal use of, individuals serving in the United States army or navy or the American Red Cross abroad.

This license does not permit shipments by persons in this country to American prisoners of war, but has been issued to facilitate small personal shipments to soldiers and sailors and Red Cross workers by doing away with the necessity of securing an individual export license in each case. Shipments by mail under this license must be made in accordance with the regulations of the post office department. If it becomes necessary later to limit this license to certain specified commodities notice will be given through the press.

The United States rifle, model of 1917, commonly called the modified Enfield, has now been tested in the service of the army a sufficient time to warrant the assertion that it more than justifies the claims made for it, according to a statement authorized by the secretary of war.

The new rifle takes a 30-caliber cartridge, which has the advantage over the British Enfield of being rimless. It has been found that unless rim cartridges are fed through the magazine uniformly with the rim of the top cartridge ahead of the rim of the one immediately below, jams are likely to occur.

The model of 1917 has an over-all length of 46.3 inches; a total weight including oiler and thong case and bayonet of ten pounds and five ounces. The breech mechanism is of the bolt type.

In the new school opened at Rochester, N. Y., to train photographers for the Signal corps, the primary training will cover four weeks along highly specialized developments brought out in the war. At its close the successful graduates will be sent on for a month's advanced training, after which they will be organized into units and sent overseas.

Men with the highest grades will be given still further training for commissions as photographic intelligence officers, first at a school and then in actual flights at the flying fields.

During the month of January $11,787,517 were paid out to farmers of the United States by the federal land banks on long-time first-mortgage loans, according to a statement by the federal farm loan board.

On February 1 the total amount of money paid out to farmers since the establishment of the federal land banks was $50,782,432, covering 24,020 loans closed. The total amount of loans applied for up to February 1 was $260,556,891, representing 112,140 applications.

Near beer and temperance drinks coming within the designation of malt liquor are included in the President's proclamation limiting brewers of beer to 70 per cent of the amounts of grains and other food materials that were used last year.

Massachusetts and Michigan chapters of the Daughters of the Revolution are establishing "mending rooms" in cantonments. These departments are opened for hospitals, where hundreds of garments are mended each week.

Seen and Heard In Indiana

Indianapolis.—A conference on 1918 prices for binder twine manufactured at the state prison was held in the governor's office. E. J. Fogarty, warden, and M. E. Foley, Jess C. Andrews and Maurice C. Shelton, members of the board of trustees, attended. The raw material costs 19 cents a pound at New Orleans or Galveston, and the freight charge to Michigan City is about a quarter cent a pound. The federal government, it appears, has practically fixed the top price of twine at 23 cents. The price to be charged for Indianapolis-made twine will depend somewhat on the price to be charged for the product of institutions of other states.

Indianapolis.—Provost Marshal General Crowder, according to a dispatch from Washington, has decided to place the men of the Second Indiana field artillery in the deferred classification in the draft. The officers of the Second Indiana regiment have contended that under a bulletin of the president of the United States last May their men were exempt from the draft, as the regiment as a whole is subject to draft under the national defense act of 1916. A few days before the regiment was ordered inspected for federal recognition, General Crowder sent a telegram changing the regulations so that the men would be subject to the draft as individuals.

Rushville.—Since the recent decision of the state supreme court that indictments are not legal where the grand jury is not properly drawn, bench warrants issued on ten indictments returned by the grand jury have been withdrawn because three members of the grand jury were chosen by the sheriff, after three of the regular panel were excused by Judge Sparks. Three new members were drawn in the regular way by the jury commissioners. The ruling of the higher court resulted in the dismissal of Curtha Wagner, accused of perjury, because he had been indicted by a grand jury, all the members of which were not drawn by the jury commissioners.

Indianapolis.—Members of the Indiana Retail Clothiers' association pledged themselves to assist the government in all its undertakings. This action was taken in resolutions adopted by the association at its closing session here, which urged every member to give his aid and co-operation to the coming Liberty loan campaign, Thrift stamp campaign, and pledged the association's support to the national economy board in its efforts for conservation by buying no merchandise that does not conform to the board's recommendations.

South Bend.—Dr. George L. Mackintosh, president of Wabash college, made a direct appeal for all unutilized labor, to aid this year in tilling the soil and the production of maximum crops in an address before the chamber of commerce. "There are three reserve sources upon which we may call in this great time of need to bring from the ground that which is necessary to win the war," he said. "They are the retired formers, who have moved from the farms to the cities, the woman's and the boys' reserves.

Danville. — A record was established in the Hendricks circuit court when a suit was filed in the morning, tried in the afternoon and decided in the evening. Mrs. Ida M. Comer filed a suit for divorce against James Comer, alleging cruel and inhuman treatment. The suit was filed at 9:30. The trial began at 2:30. Before 5:30 Judge George W. Brill had granted the divorce. Custody of the four minor children also was given to Mrs. Comer.

Indianapolis. — Coal miners are hauled to work by the Chicago, Terre Haute and Southeastern railroad for a fare of two-tenths of a cent a mile, it was contended by the state in defending the Indiana two-cent passenger fare law at a hearing before Edward Daniels, master in chancery of the United States district court, who conducted hearings in the railroad's suit to have the law declared unconstitutional as applying to it.

Indianapolis.—An executive order permitting Indiana millers to grind up 90 per cent of their average for the three years preceding the war was issued by Carl Simms, head of the milling division of the Indiana food administration. Some millers in the state have sufficient supply of wheat on hand to operate the mills for several weeks. A percentage of their daily grind is commandeered by the government.

Evansville.—Miss Ada Bicking, supervisor of music in the city schools, is arranging for the national convention of music supervisors of the United States, which will be held here during the week beginning April 8.

Milton.—Dogs have been molesting the stock of several farmers of this township. Among the heavy losers is George Wagner. The dogs killed 12 hogs, attacking them at the back of the neck and breaking the legs.

Evansville.—Thirty-five girls employed at a local factory have donned overalls to wear at their work. Many of the girls, who took the places of men who are now fighting in France or are at some military cantonment, have found that skirts interfere with their work.

Hartford City.—Benjamin Keesling and Guy Bright, cousins, each about twenty-nine years old, killed themselves rather than submit to arrest by a posse that gave chase after they had been detected in the robbery of a barn on the Charles Miles farm east of here.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions have been granted the following Indianians: Lawrence J. Henry, Lafayette, $20, and $12 each to Samantha McKee, Quincy; Louisa Courtney, Elkhart; Anna Carrico, Anderson; Tina Cato, Spurgeon; Sarah O. Davidson, Laurel; Emma Fairfield, Fort Wayne; Lavina Fashbaugh, Pierceton; Manerva Follick, Waynetown; Adelaide Hewland, Jeffersonville; Elizabeth A. Heizer, Marysville; Emma Housekeeper, South Bend; Hannah B. Hood, Cloverdale; Lydia J. Hubbard, Francesville; Mary M. Ketchurn, Greensburg; Prudence Louthen, Logansport; Mary McNamee, Wabash; Nancy A. McLain, Muncie; Susan L. Parsons, Angola; Mary C. Rogers, Somerset; Mary E. Reinharmer, Winchester; Sarah C. Rhorer, Unionville; Ettie M. Summers, Saratoga; Louisa Summers, Decker; Sarah C. Spencer, Lafayette; Polly Ann Thomas, Indianapolis; France J. Donohue, Madison; Nancy A. Stephens, Evansville; Rosetta Wilson, Indianapolis; Margaret E. Ewalt, Portland; Mary L. Hoerter, Huntingburg; Sarah E. Brown, Grenefield, and Eliza A. Bowen, Worthington.

Indianapolis.—The price of bread has again been advanced throughout Indiana. The new prices as announced by County Food Administrator Wyckoff at a meeting of the Indianapolis Association of the Baking Industry. Under the new scale this smaller loaf will cost the consumer 8 cents, the same price now being paid for the 16-ounce loaf unwrapped; the 16-ounce loaf will cost approximately a cent and a half more than it does now, while the pound an da half or 24-ounce loaf, as the bakers know it, will cost 2 cents more than it is being retailed for at present.

Muncie.—As the result of a compromise reached between the city school teachers and the board of trustees, the city schools will not close for the usual spring vacation and will continue a week longer in the summer. A few weeks ago the trustees closed the schools because of a shortage of fuel, but made no arrangements for paying the teachers while the schools were closed. The teachers demanded their pay, and the school board decided to hold two extra weeks of school so they would not suffer financial loss.

Valparaiso.—There is a brisk business in Porter county farm lands. Josephine and Hannah Lindholm of Chicago sold 80 acres in Pleasant township to Dean Birky of Beemer, Neb., for $10,000, and 120 acres in the same locality to Jonas Birky, also of Beemer, for $20,000. William Summers purchased 80 acres in the same township from Ennie and Fannie Arnold of Chicago, paying $11,000. Charles Isenberger, cashier of the Citizens' bank at La Crosse, paid $13,900 for 163 acres in Boone township.

Indianapolis.—Discontinuance of the use of wheat products during the period of extreme wheat shortage was advocated by the Indianapolis Local Council of Women as an enforced food measure. A resolution favoring this measure was adopted at the monthly meeting and a copy presented to H. E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, with the request that it be indorsed by the county food administrator and made an enforced measure.

Evansville.—A session of the supreme court of Indiana was held in Evansville, when the attorneys in the case of Madison J. Bray and others against Duncan C. Givens, judge of the circuit court, met in the chambers of John W. Spencer, chief justice, and made motions and fixed time for filing of briefs and oral arguments. All briefs are to be filed by April 25, and the cases will be orally argued on May 2.

Indianapolis. — Many Indianapolis high school youths are planning to do farm work during the summer vacation. More than 70 have registered for this work at the Shortridge high school and the enrollment is not complete. Other high schools also will have enrollments, while throughout the country the period March 13 to 18 will be observed as a national enrollment week for the Boys' Working Reserve.

Indianapolis.—Well-laid plans to rob the Lake Erie and Western Railway company of $7,000 worth of hogs were frustrated when detectives asigned to the case arrested Carl D. George, age twenty-five, a telepgraph operator employed in the local offices of the company, who made a confession which led to the arrest of Frank Lucas, alias Whitey, at Muncie, whom he named as his confederate.

Indianapolis.—Plans for the distribution of coal in Indiana for the coal year beginning April 1 are being held up until the United States fuel administration at Washington is ready to announce the details of the so-called "zone system." This statement was made by Horace H. Herr, director of conservation for the federal fuel administration for Indiana.

Muncie.—All of Muncie's 33 saloonkeepers are advertising for a renewal of their liquor licenses, on the theory that the supreme court will hold the state prohibition law unconstitutional. The county commissioners will give the saloon men a hearing on their petitions on April 2, the day the state is to go "dry."

Indianapolis.— The Ben-Hur trail which will be recognized as one of the Indiana automobile highways, has been recognized. The general route lies through Terre Haute, Rockville, Crawfordsville, Frankfort, Kokomo and Huntington, and the trail will be marked by red, yellow and black bands painted on telegraph poles, with the lettering of the name Ben-Hur.

Logansport. — The committee in charge of the arrangements for the state G. A. R. encampment has announced that the dates for the encampment have been changed from May 15, 16 and 17 to June 5, 6 and 7.

ADMIRAL DEWEY'S FOE DEAD

Commander of German Squadron Off Manila Bay in 1898 Dies at Baden Baden.

Amsterdam, March 11.—Admiral von Diederichs, commander of a German squadron off Manila during the Spanish-American war and who clashed with Admiral Dewey, the commander of the American squadron in the Philippines, is dead at Baden Baden.

Washington, March 11.—The friction between Admiral Dewey and Admiral von Diederichs arose over the German officer's disinclination to observe the rules of the blockade established by the American commander in Manila bay. In a book published in 1914, three years before his death, Admiral Dewey described the final incident at Manila bay as follows:

"When the Cormoran, which was an old offender, was sighted coming up the bay, Flag Lieutenant Brumby was sent to make sure that she stopped to report. When the Cormoran saw the McCulloch approaching she turned and steamed away. Brumby first hoisted the international signal, 'I wish to communicate.' No attention was paid to this and Brumby then fired a shot across her bows, which had the desired effect.

"On the following day Vice Admiral von Diederichs sent a young officer of the staff to me. When I heard him through I made the most of the occasion by using him as a third person to state candidly and firmly my attitude in the verbal message, which he conveyed to his superior so successfully that Vice Admiral von Diederichs was able to understand my point of view. There was no further interference with the blockade."

SAFE CONDUCT FOR LUXBURG

Britain Issues Permit for Ex-German Ambassador to Argentina to Sail for Sweden.

Buenos Aires, March 11.—The British government has issued a safe conduct for Count von Luxburg, the former German ambassador to Argentina, to sail for Sweden. He will leave shortly on the steamer Valparaiso. A safe conduct for a medical attendant to accompany Count von Luxburg was refused, although such a step had been recommended because of the former ambassador's mental condition.

TO SEIZE BRITISH DESERTERS

United States and English Agents Reach an Agreement on "Undesirables."

New York, March 11.—An agreement between British and Canadian agents and the federal authorities to apprehend deserters from the British and Canadian military forces and to punish "undesirables" who impose on American hospitality, was announced here.

INCREASE IN WESTERN CANADA ACREAGE

Will Prove a Big Factor in Winning the War.

Reports to hand indicate that Western Canada has a vastly increased acreage ready for crop this year over last year. The splendid open fall of 1917, gave a better opportunity for fall plowing than for some years. Work in the fields was almost continuous until the end of November. In fact, in the neighborhood of Pincher Creek, Alberta, there was sufficient mild weather in January of this year to permit farmers to plow, and many took advantage of it. A great many Americans owning land in Canada moved up last year, and this has also helped to increase the acreage. They came into possession of the land at prices varying from $15.00 to $30.00 an acre, and with the proven yields of wheat running from twenty and as high as fifty bushels per acre, with a set price of $2.21 a bushel, they could join production and patriotism together with a big margin of profit. The Post-Intelligencer of Seattle, Wash., gives a very conservative statement of the agricultural development and opportunities in Western Canada. In its issue of December 14, 1917, it says:—

"Since the beginning of the year American emigration into Canada has been greatly stimulated according to the reports of the Dominion authorities, and has been almost entirely made up of farmers attracted by the fertile and comparatively cheap wheat lands.

"Whatever may be said of wheat culture as a profitable avocation in ordinary years, since the beginning of the war, it has offered advantages quite beyond the usual opportunities. War has boomed the price of wheat until the farmer now receives around $2 for his product at his granary. Average crops, according to the adaptation of soil and climate are from 12 to 25 bushels to the acre. Even the minimum crop, at $2 per bushel, brings in these war times a reasonable profit. Before the war wheat culture was fast being abandoned by farmers who worked intelligently for results on the right side of the ledger. It has been the popular crop for new countries, but when the pioneers settled down to business it was generally corn, hogs, cattle and diversified farming that brought the profits. Iowa and the Dakotas in turn, as their prairies became settled, mortgaged the land on wheat culture and afterwards paid off the mortgages with corn and hogs.

"War is thus bringing a temporary encouragement to wheat farming. Many of the ranchers of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta laid away $20,000 to $30,000 in the banks last fall. It may be pointed out, however, that the growing of wheat is not the only inducement which is leading settlement to Canadian lands. Low taxation, favorable agricultural climate, and profitable prices not only for grain but for hogs, cattle and all forms of farm produce all contribute their share toward the rapid settlement of the fertile lands of Western Canada."—Advertisement.

"You're the nicest old things that ever lived," said Lark, still laughing, but with great warmth and tenderness in her eyes and her voice. "But you can take the stockings back and save your money if you like—we love you just as much."

But this the happy donors stoutly refused to do. The twins had earned this wealth of hose, and finally, wiping their eyes, the twins began to smooth their hair and adjust their ribbons and belts.

"What's the matter?" "Where are you going?" "Will you buy the rest of us some silk stockings?" queried the family, comic-opera effect.

"Where are we going?" Carol repeated, surprised, seeming to feel that anyone should know where they were going, though they had not spoken.

"We're going to call on our friends, of course," explained Lark.

"Of course," said Carol, jabbing her hairpins in with startling energy. "And we've got to hurry. We must go to Mattie's and Jean's and Betty's and Fan's and Alice's and—say, Lark, maybe we'd better divide up and each take half. It's kind of late—and we mustn't miss any."

"Well, what on earth!" gasped Prudence, while the others stared in speechless amazement.

"For goodness' sake, Carol hurry. We have to get clear out to Minnie's tonight, if we miss our supper."

"But what's the idea? What for? What are you talking about?"

"Why, you silly thing," said Carol patiently, "we have to go and tell our friends that we've got four pairs of silk stockings, of course. I wouldn't miss this afternoon for the world. And we'll go the rounds together, Lark. I want to see how they take it," she smiled at them benignly. "I can imagine their excitement. And we owe it to the world to give it all the excitement we can. Prudence says so."

Prudence looked startled. "Did I say that?"

"Certainly. You said pleasure—but excitement's very pleasing, most of the time. Come on, Larkie, we'll have to walk fast."

And with a fond goodby to the generous family, the twins set out to spread the joyful tidings, Lark pausing at the door just long enough to explain gravely, "Of course, we won't tell them—er—just how it happened, you know. Lots of things in a parsonage need to be kept dark. Prudence says so herself."

CHAPTER XVI.

The Girl Who Wouldn't Propose.

It took a long time for Carol to recover from the effect of Lark's disloyalty, as she persisted in calling it. For several weeks she didn't twinkle at all. But when at last the smiles came easy again, she wrote to Mr. Duke, her p'fessor no longer, but now a full-fledged young minister. She apologized sweetly for her long delay.

"But you will forgive me when you have read this," she wrote. "Cupid is working havoc in our family. Of course no one outside the home circle knows yet, but I insisted on telling you because you have been such a grand good friend to us for so long. We may seem young to you, because you can't forget when we were freshmen, but we are really very grown up. We act quite mature now, and never think of playing jokes. But I didn't finish my news, did I?"

"It is Jim Forrest—he was in high school when we were. Remember him? Larkie and I were out to spend a week, and—but I needn't go into particulars. I knew you would be interested. The whole family is very happy about it; he is a great favorite with everyone. But how our family is going to pieces! Still, since it is Jim—! He is nice, isn't he? But you wouldn't dare say no."

Carol's eyes glittered wickedly as she sealed this letter, which she had penned with greatest care. And a few days later, when the answer came, she danced gleefully up the stairs—not at all "mature" in manner, and locked the door behind her while she read:

> Dear Carol:
>
> Indeed I am very interested, and I wish you all the joy in the world. Tell Jim for me how very much I think he is to be congratulated. He seems a fine fellow, and I know you will be happy. It was a surprise, I admit—I knew he was doing the very devoted—but you have seemed so young to me, always. I can't imagine you too grown up for jokes, though you do sound more "mature" in this letter than you have before. Lark will be lonely, I am afraid.
> "I am very busy with my work, so you will understand if my letters come less frequently, won't you? And you will be too busy with your own happiness to bother with an old professor any more anyhow. I have enjoyed our friendship very much,—more than you will ever know,—and I want once more to hope you may be the happiest woman in the world. You deserve to be.
>
> Very sincerely your friend,
> DAVID A. DUKE.

Carol lay down on the bed and crushed the letter ecstatically between her hands. Then she burst out laughing. Then she cried a little, nervously, and laughed again. Then she smoothed the letter affectionately, and curled up on the bed with a pad of paper and her father's fountain pen to answer the letter.

> My Dear Mr. Duke: However in the world could you make such a mistake. I've been laughing ever since I got your letter, but I'm vexed too. He's nice, all right; he's just fine, but I don't want him! And think how annoyed Lark would be if she could see it. I am not engaged to Jim Forrest,—nor to any one. It's Lark. I certainly didn't say it was I, did I? We're all so fond of Jim that it really is a pleasure to the whole family to count him one of us, and Lark grows more deliriously joyful all the time. But I! I know you're awfully busy, of course, and I hate to intrude, but you must write one little postal card to apologize for your error, and I'll understand how hard you are working when you do not write again.
> Hastily, but always sincerely,
> CAROL.

Carol jumped up and caught up her hat and rushed all the way downtown to the postoffice to get that letter started for Danville, Illinois, where the Rev. Mr. Duke was located. Her face was so radiant, and her eyes were so heavenly blue, and so sparkling bright that people on the street turned to look after her admiringly.

She was feverishly impatient until the answer arrived, and was not at all surprised that it came under special delivery stamp, though Lark lifted her eyebrows quizzically, and Aunt Grace smiled suggestively, and her father looked up with sudden questioning in his face. Carol made no comment, only ran up to her room and locked the door once more.

> Carol, you awful little scamp, you did that on purpose, and you know it. You never mentioned Lark's name. Well, if you wanted to give me the scare of my life, you succeeded. Of course, I don't want to lose my little chum, and I knew very well that no man in his proper senses would allow his sweetheart to be as good a comrade to another man as I want you to be to me. Of course I was disappointed. Of course I expected to be busy for a while. Of course I failed to see the sterling worth of Jim Forrest. I see it now, though. I think he's a prince, and as near worth being in your family as anybody could be. I'm sure we'll be great friends, and tell Lark for me that I am waxing enthusiastic over his good qualities even to the point of being inarticulate. Tell her how happy I am over it, a good deal happier than I've been for the past several days, and I am wishing them both a world of joy. I'm having one myself, and I find it well worth having. I could shake you, Carol, for playing such a trick on me. I can just see you crouch down and giggle when you read this. You wait, my lady.. My turn is coming. I think I'll run down to Mount Mack next week to see my uncle—he's not very well. Don't have any dates.
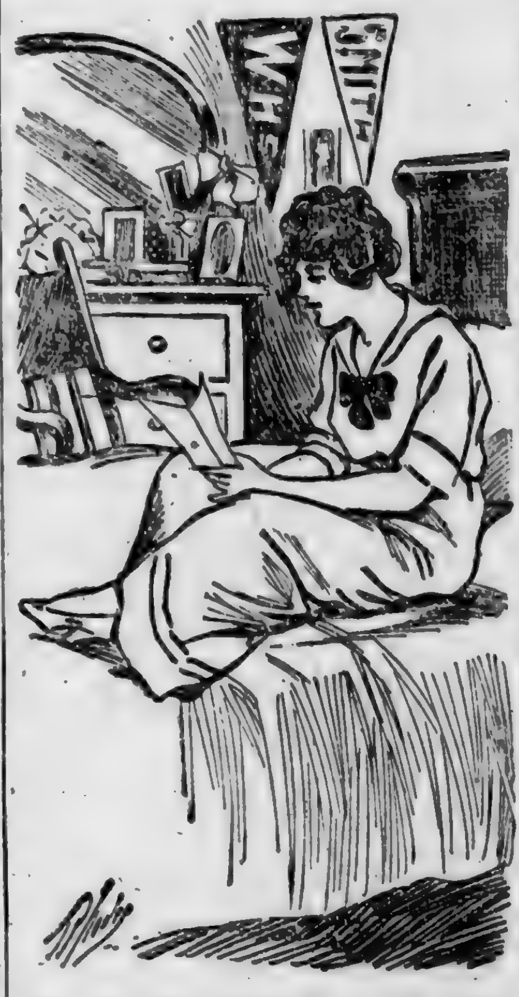
> Sincerely, D. D.

And Carol laughed again, and wiped her eyes.

The Rev. Mr. Duke's devotion to his elderly uncle in Mount Mark was a most beautiful thing to see. Every few weeks he "ran down for a few days," and if he spent most of his time recounting his uncle's symptoms before the sympathetic Starrs, no one could be surprised at that. He and Mr. Starr naturally had much in common, both ministers, and both—at any rate, he was very devoted to his uncle, and Carol grew up very, very fast, and smiled a great deal, but laughed much less frequently than in other days. There was a shy sweetness about her that made her father watch her anxiously.



Then She Smoothed the Letter Affectionately and Curled Up on the Bed.

"Is Carol sick, Grace?" he asked one day, turning suddenly to his sister-in-law.

She smiled curiously. "N-no, I think not. Why?"

"She seems very—sweet."

"Yes. She feels very—sweet," was the enigmatic response. And Mr. Starr muttered something about women and geometry and went away, shaking his head. And aunt Grace smiled again.

But the months passed away. Lark, not too absorbed in her own happiness to find room for her twin's affairs, at last grew troubled. She and Aunt Grace often held little conferences together when Carol was safely out of the way.

"Whatever do you suppose is the matter?" Lark would wonder anxiously. To which aunt always answered patiently, "Oh, just wait. He isn't sure she's grown-up enough yet."

Then there came a quiet night when Carol and Mr. Duke sat in the living room, idly discussing the weather, and looking at Connie, who was deeply immersed in a book on the other side of the big reading lamp. Conversation between them lagged so noticeably that they sighed with relief when she finally laid down her book, and twisted around in her chair until she had them both in full view.

"Books are funny," she began brightly. "I don't believe half the written stuff ever did happen—I don't believe it could. Do girls ever propose, Mr. Duke?"

No one ever proposed to me," he answered, laughing.

"No?" she queried politely. "Maybe no one wanted you badly enough. But I wonder if they ever do? Writers say so. I can't believe it somehow. It seems so—well—unnecessary, some way. Carol and I were talking about it this afternoon."

Carol looked up startled.

"What does Carol think about it?" he queried.

"Well, she said she thought in ordinary cases girls were clever enough to get what they wanted without asking for it."

Carol moved restlessly in her chair, her face drooping a little, and Mr. Duke laughed.

"Of course I know none of our girls would do such a thing," said Connie, serene in her family pride. "But Carol says she must admit she'd like to find some way to make a man say what anybody could see with half an eye he wanted to say anyhow, only—"

Connie stopped abruptly. Mr. Duke had turned to Carol, his keen eyes searching her face, but Carol sank in the big chair and turned her face away from him against the leather cushion.

"Connie," she said, "of course no girl would propose, no girl would want to—I was only joking—"

Mr. Duke laughed openly then. "Let's go and take a walk, shan't we, Carol? It's a grand night."

"You needn't go to get rid of me," said Connie, rising. "I was just going anyhow."

"Oh, don't go," said Mr. Duke politely.

"Don't go," echoed Carol pleadingly.

Connie stepped to the doorway, then paused and looked back at them. Sudden illumination came to her as she scanned their faces, the man's clear-cut, determined, eager—carol's shy and scared and—hopeful. She turned quickly back toward her sister, pain darkening her eyes. Carol was the last of all the girls—it would leave her alone—and he was too old for her. Her lips quivered a little, and her face shadowed more darkly. But they did not see it. The man's eyes were intent on Carol's lovely features, and Carol was studying her slender fingers. Connie drew a long breath, and looked down upon her sister with a great protecting tenderness in her heart. She wanted to catch her up in her strong young arms and carry her wildly out of the room—away from the man who sat there—waiting for her—

Carol lifted her face at that moment, and turned slowly toward Mr. Duke. Connie saw her eyes. They were luminous.

Connie's tense figure relaxed then, and she turned at once toward the door. "I am going," she said in a low voice. But she looked back again before she closed the door after her. "Carol," she said in a whisper, "you—you're a darling. I—I've always thought so."

Carol did not hear her—she did not hear the door closing behind her—she had forgotten Connie was there.

Mr. Duke stood up and walked quickly across the room and Carol rose to meet him. He put his arms about her, strongly, without hesitating.

"Carol," he said, "my little songbird"—and he laughed, but very tenderly, "would you like to know how to make me say what you know I want to say?"

"I—I—" she began tremulously, clasping her hands against her breast, and looking intently, as if fascinated, at his square, firm chin so very near her eyes. She had never observed it so near at hand before. She thought it was a lovely chin—in another man she would have called it distinctly "bossy."

"You would try to make me when you know I've been gritting my teeth for years, waiting for you to get grown up. You've been awfully slow about it, Carol, and I've been in such a hurry for you."

She rested limply in his arms now, breathing in little broken sighs, not trying to speak.

"You have known it a long time, haven't you? And I thought I was hiding it so cleverly." He drew her closer in his arms. "You are too young for me, Carol," he said regretfully. "I am very old."

"I—I like 'em old," she whispered shyly.

With one hand he drew her head to his shoulder, where he could feel the warm, fragrant breath against the "lovely chin."

"You like 'them' old," he repeated, smiling. "You are very generous. One old one is all I want you to like." But when he leaned toward her lips, Carol drew away swiftly. "Don't be afraid of me, Carol. You didn't mind once when I kissed you." He laid his hand softly on her round cheek. "I am too old, dearest, but I've been loving you for years, I guess. I've been waiting for you since you were a little freshman, only I didn't know it for a while. Say something, Carol—I don't want you to feel timid with me. You love me, don't you? Tell me, if you do."

"I—I." She looked up at him desperately. "I—well, I made you say it, didn't I?"

"Did you want me to say it, dearest? Have you been waiting, too? How long have you—"

"Oh, a long time; since that night among the rose bushes at the parsonage."

"Since then?"

"Yes; that was why it didn't break my pledge when you kissed me. Because I—was waiting then."

"Do you love me?"

"Oh, P'fessor, don't make me say it right out in plain English—not tonight. I'm pretty nearly going to cry now, and—" She twinkled a little then, like herself, "you know what crying does to my complexion."

But he did not smile. "Don't cry," he said. "We want to be happy tonight. You will tell me tomorrow. Tonight—"

"Tonight," she said sweetly, turning in his arms so that her face was toward him again, "tonight—" She lifted her arms, and put them softly about his neck, the laces falling back and showing her pink, dimpled elbows. "Tonight, my dearest—" She lifted her lips to him, smiling.

THE END.

DRIVING RIVETS SLOW WORK

Not Only That, but Enormous Number of Them Are Needed in a Steel Ship.

The largest single item in the labor of fabricating a steel ship is in the riveting of her hull; therefore the driving of rivets is taken as a standard of size and of progress by most of the shipbuilders. To build a 10,000 ton ship a week means the driving of about 650,000 rivets in that time. The Union shipyards of San Francisco, as at present equipped and freed from labor troubles, can drive about 300,000 rivets, although in a record week it drove 411,000 rivets; the four next largest yards in America—at Fore River, Mass., at Newport News, Va., at Camden, and at Philadelphia upon the Delaware—can drive 200,000 to 275,000 rivets a week each. A half dozen smaller steel shipyards will drive from 50,000 to 150,000 each seven days.

Riveting, despite all the inventions devised to speed it up, remains hand work and slow work. A riveting gang consists of two men and two boys—the riveter, his "holder-on," the passer boy and the heater boy. The gang drives from 300 to 375 rivets in the course of a ten-hour day and is tired at the end of it. But when you know that it takes four men all of a working day to drive an average of a little less than 350 rivets, you can begin to see the full size of the labor problem of driving at least 650,000 rivets a week necessary to turn out a 10,000-ton ship at the end of that length of time. In other words, you need 1,200 men for the riveting gangs alone.

Look at the matter from another angle, writes Edward Hungerford in Harper's. Ten ships a week—the tremendous program for 1918 to which we stand committed—means 6,500,000 rivets a week. And the rivet capacity of our five greatest yards—with a total working force of 50,000 men at the end of 1917—was but 1,350,000 rivets a week. And riveting represents only about 20 per cent in the construction of a ship.

Making Life Worth While.

To increase your earning capacity, you must be an energetic, live specimen of humankind. You should be throbbing with surplus power. You should possess a degree of strength that will give you confidence and courage and endurance. Then you can go on day after day, relates a writer, adding to your skill and knowledge and power in your profession. And when you have climbed to the highest point on one sphere of endeavor, you will be ready to look around for other work, and continue to experience the delights that come only with the daily struggle, required for the attainment of the objects one has in view. Do not forget the value of systematic effort. Do not waste your energies. Intelligent direction is all-important. Force, to be of value, must be applied at the proper place. Effort, to be productive of reward, must be directed by superior intelligence.

Most Expensive Wood.

The most expensive wood in the world is said to be the boxwood imported from Turkey for the use of engravers. The cost ranges from 4 to 10 cents a square inch for the best grade.—Brooklyn Standard-Union.

WHAT UNION LABOR IN DRY STATES THINKS OF PROHIBITION

WASHINGTON—To the great body of our working men the law has been a distinct blessing.

E. P. MARSH,
President Washington State Federation of Labor.

COLORADO—You could not dig up a corporal's guard of trade unionists who would vote for a return of the saloon.

WILLIAM C. THORNTON,
President Denver Trades and Labor Assembly.

ARIZONA—Arizona workers are morally and financially better off than they were before prohibition was adopted.

JOHN L. DONNELLY,
President Arizona State Federation of Labor.

IDAHO—The workers now almost all have a bank account. The banks instead of saloons are crowded on Saturday night.

ERNEST BECKMAN,
Business Agent, Deputy Organizer A. F. of L., No. 220, Carpenters and Joiners of America, Wallace, Idaho.

IOWA—The boys who used to think it would be a calamity if the state went dry now tell of the improved condition in their cities since the saloons closed.

LEON A. LINK,
Secretary-Treasurer Waterloo Central Labor Union, Waterloo, Ia.

OREGON—If the question of repealing the present law in Oregon and going back to the saloons was left to a vote of the union men only, the state would be so dry that none in 100 years would try to wet it up again.

W. B. SOMERVILLE,
Oregon Labor Leader.

NEW USES FOR SALOON BUILDINGS IN WASHINGTON, D. C.

The board of temperance of the Methodist Episcopal church sent out men from its research department to make a careful survey of the former saloon properties in the territory bounded by Pennsylvania avenue south, U street north, North Capitol street east, and Seventeenth street west, all in the northwest section of the city.

Of the 150 saloons, barrooms, hotels, breweries and former wholesale liquor houses, it was found that 89 were occupied by some legitimate industry. Twenty-seven were being used as cafes, oyster houses, restaurants or lunch rooms; a number were devoted to soft drinks. Nine were supplying the public with groceries. Other places were being used as warehouses, shoe stores, furniture stores, business offices, automobile supply houses, barber shops and places of amusement. Only 38 of these 150 properties were for rent. Quite a number were being remodeled for occupancy.

The old "Half Mile Track" saloon, which featured itself as the place where Booth got his last drink before shooting Abraham Lincoln, was being converted into a furniture store.

DRY SEATTLE ECLIPSES WET SAN FRANCISCO.

"I do not believe that I ever held much respect for the prohibition movement until my visit to Seattle, where I have had actual contact with a situation I believe attributable to the absence of saloons," says Mr. Love, state harbor commissioner of California. "The reason I say this is that I found every dock in Seattle active, none of the foremen complaining of the inability to get men to work. It is very different in San Francisco, where they have to hustle up help from the various saloons, and if the men have any money left you cannot drag them away from the bars. I also note that most of Seattle's longshoremen appear prosperous, and so are their families. I readily see where Seattle's waterborne commerce is eclipsing San Francisco's. It has wonderful docking facilities, and cargoes are handled expeditiously, and that is what counts. My hat is off to Seattle."

CIVILIANS, ATTENTION!

"We can't beat Germany until we have beaten beer," says Clarence Irene Wilson.

"It is deadly mockery to ask our boys to die for us until we are willing to go dry for them.

"The law which prohibits the sale of liquor to any man in uniform is a good one; but today armies are not fighting armies—nations are fighting nations. Why put all the sacrifice upon the soldier and the sailor? Let us now have a law which will prohibit the sale of liquor to any man in civilian clothes. The man who is selected to go must spill his blood for victory; let the man who is selected to stay at least spill his beer for the soldier."

THE OTHER SIDE.

The wife of a saloon keeper said, in a tone of almost despair, to her negro washerwoman: "If the town goes no-license I will not be able to pay you any more; I do not know how we can live ourselves." The generous-hearted colored woman sympathetically answered: "Don't you worry, honey. If your husband has to shut up his saloon, my husband won't be able to get drink, and we will have plenty, and you can come and do our washing."

ON GUARD

At this time of the year people feel weak, tired, listless, their blood is thin, they have lived indoors and perhaps expended all their mental and bodily energy and they want to know how to renew their energy and stamina, overcome headaches and backaches, have clear eyes, a smooth, ruddy skin, and feel the exhilaration of real good health tingling thru their body. Good, pure, rich, red blood is the best insurance against ills of all kinds. Almost all diseases come from impure and impoverished blood. It is to be noticed in the pale or pimply face, the tired, haggard appearance or the listless manner.

Drink hot water a half hour before meals, and for a vegetable tonic there's nothing better than Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the old-fashioned herbal remedy, which has had such a fine reputation for fifty years. It contains no alcohol or narcotics. It is made from Golden Seal root, Bloodroot, Oregon grape root, Queen's root, Black Cherry bark, extracted with glycerine and made into tablets and liquid. Tablets sixty cents, at most drug stores.

Obituary

Ruth Lucile, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Weaner was born in Stafford township, DeKalb Co., Indiana, January 29th. 1906. After an illness of long duration she departed this life March 7, 1918. Aged 12 years, 1 month and 8 days. Little Ruth was a sweet and winsome child, beloved by all who knew her: she had a pleasing personality, and was a favorite among her little friends and schoolmates.

Her early environment in a Christian home made its impression on her character, and from earliest childhood she has been a faithful follower of Jesus. She became a member of the United Brethren Church at Newville in her 7th. year. She was an earnest worker for the Loyal Temperance Legion, and was ever helpful even in her illness and displayed remarkable patience in her last days of suffering.

She leaves to mourn their loss, father, mother, 3 sisters, LaVern, Marguerite and Leila; and a baby brother Robert; besides a host of relatives and friends. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Funeral services were held Sunday from the U. B. Church. Rev. E. Hively, officiating assisted by Elder Fred Thomas, pastor of the Christian Church. The Sunday School Class of which she was a member, under the direction of Miss Prudence Blood, acted as flower carriers, and the boys of the Class were the pall bearers. Interment in the Newville cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS.

We desire to thank all our neighbors and friends for their kind sympathy, and for their help to us during the illness, death and burial of our darling daughter. Our thanks to the ministers, the singers and flower bearers; and to all those who so generously contributed the beautiful floral offerings.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Weaner and family.

Contributions made by residents of St. Joe to the National War Work fund of the Army Y. M. C. A. which has now reached $60,000,000, are already paying big dividends in the lives of the boys who have gone from this city and county to receive their military training at Camps Taylor and Shelby and other military points in the west and south. According to advices reaching here this week the Y. M. C. A. huts in the big cantonments never have been so popular as during the recent cold weather, when thousands of enlisted men were driven inside the buildings for their amusements, games and letter-writing. The cheery open fire-places, the phonographs and pianos, books and magazines form a happy combination that spells "home" to the boys away from home.

Practically every family in this community has received letters letters from Kentucky and Indiana boys written on Y. M. C. A. or Red Trianle stationery which is issued without cost to every man in uniform. At Camp Taylor recently a total of 147,822 letters were mailed by the Y. M. C. A. in a single month, all of them having been written at the benches in the nine Y. M. C. A. huts.

Y. M. C. A. accommodations have been provided already in more than 150 centers in France for the soldiers in Pershing's expedition. At the present time there are more than 1300 American Y. M. C. A secretaries now in the war zone promoting for Uncle Sam's boys the same program they have enjoyed in the big camps of this country.

When the American troops took over their section of the French fighting front there were eight Y. M. C. A. dougouts waiting for their exclusive use. These provided chocolate, sweets of all kinds, biscuits and knicknacks. The last thing American troops will get before they go over the top will be a cup of hot coffee or tea, a biscuit or two, some chocolate for emergency rations and a word of cheer and inspiration from the Y. M. C. A. secretaries.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

The Food Administration Says:

WHY IT IS NECESSARY TO EAT LESS SUGAR;—

Before the war France, Italy, and Belgium raised all their sugar. Great Britain bought sugar from Germany

Now France, Italy and Belgium can not raise such sugar because their men are fighting and Great Britain can not buy sugar where she used to buy it.

All must now get sugar at the same place we get it, and there is not enough to go around unless we save. This has been proved by the scarcity here at home.

HOW MRS. BOYD AVOIDED AN OPERATION

Canton, Ohio.—"I suffered from a female trouble which caused me much suffering, and two doctors decided that I would have to go through an operation before I could get well.

"My mother, who had been helped by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, advised me to try it before submitting to an operation. It relieved me from my troubles so I can do my house work without any difficulty. I advise any woman who is afflicted with female troubles to give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial and it will do as much for them."—Mrs. MARIE BOYD, 1421 5th St., N. E., Canton, Ohio.

Sometimes there are serious conditions where a hospital operation is the only alternative, but on the other hand so many women have been cured by this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, after doctors have said that an operation was necessary—every woman who wants to avoid an operation should give it a fair trial before submitting to such a trying ordeal.

If complications exist, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass., for advice. The result of many years experience is at your service.

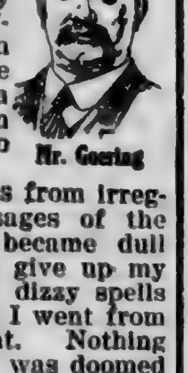
WAS DISCOURAGED

Lost 65 Pounds in Weight and Had to Give Up Work. Has Been Well Since Using Doan's.

"Being exposed to extreme heat when working as an engineer, and then going outdoors to cool off, caused my kidney trouble," says Karl Goering, 8513 N. Orkney St., Philadelphia, Pa. "In cold weather and when it was damp, my joints and muscles would swell and ache and often my limbs were so badly affected it was only with great misery I was able to get around. For a week I was laid up in bed, hardly able to move hand or foot.



Mr. Goering

"Another trouble was from irregular and scanty passages of the kidney secretions. I became dull and weak and had to give up my work. Headaches and dizzy spells nearly blinded me and I went from 265 to 200 in weight. Nothing helped me and I felt I was doomed to suffer.

"At last I had the good fortune to hear of Doan's Kidney Pills and began taking them. I soon got back my strength and weight and all the rheumatic pains and other kidney troubles left. I have remained cured." Sworn to before me, WM. H. M'MUNN, Notary Public.

HOME GARDEN PLAN SAVES TIME, MONEY, AND LABOR FOR GARDENER

> PLAN AND PREPARE
> Prepare to do your part in increasing America's food supply by raising your own vegetables in your home garden.
> Plan your garden on paper. Map out your campaign. You will profit through time, labor, and money saved.
> Planning is preparing.

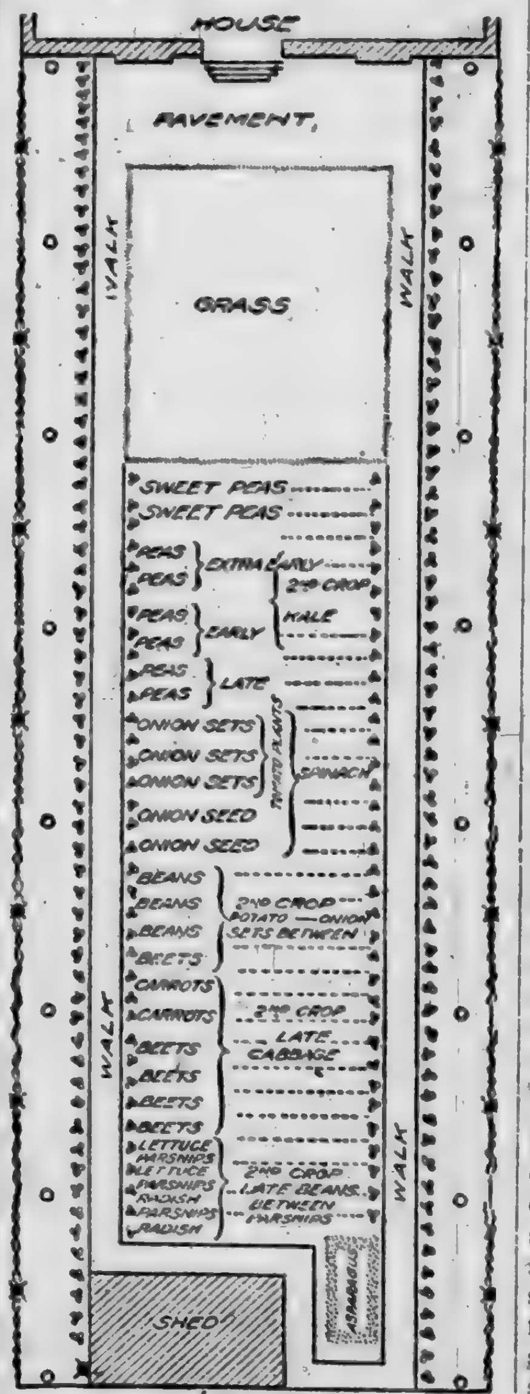
Plan your home garden in advance. Make a diagram of the available space; allot the ground to the vegetables you want to grow. Prepare to make your garden work until frost next fall. That is advice to home gardener by horticulturists of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Interest in the planning all members of the family, especially the children who, by being given a partnership now, will know their duties when the time comes. Read such gardening publications as are available. Write to the Department of Agriculture for a home gardening bulletin.

In making a diagram of the garden it is well to use tough paper, such as heavy wrapping paper, which will stand repeated handling out of doors. A fairly large scale should be adopted so that full notes can be kept in the spaces representing rows. If the garden is fairly large or abnormally long the diagram may be made in separate sections for the sake of convenience.

Plan for Home Needs.

A typical plan of this character is shown in the illustration. This plan, of course, is of use chiefly as an example, and in most cases a different arrangement will be necessary to meet the conditions surrounding individual garden spaces. On the plan the gardener may indicate the approximate date when each of his projected crops is to be planted. No more space should be allotted to each than is needed to furnish a sufficient quantity of the vegetable for family consumption or for other known needs.



Plan for a Small Garden.

In this plan all the vegetables named are planted in rows across from the inside lateral rows of strawberries. As rapidly as each kind of peas matures and the crop is over, kale is planted in its place. The ground to be used for tomatoes is first planted with onion sets, and these onions are used as rapidly as needed. When the time comes to set out the tomatoes, some of the onions are dug to make space for the tomato plants. When the tomato crop is over, the ground is occupied by spinach as the third crop. Spinach is also planted as soon as the bulb onions from the side are gathered. The beans, carrots, and peas are succeeded by late cabbage, and between the rows of late cabbage "potato-onion" sets are planted. Late beans are planted between the rows of parsnips after the radishes and lettuce have been gathered.

Make the garden work all summer. Make your plans so that when one crop is ready for the table or for canning another vegetable can be planted between the old rows and new plantings can take the space vacated. Many home gardeners seem content to raise a single crop on each plot of land at their disposal, but it is quite possible to grow two or three crops of some vegetables in one season.

A primary consideration in arranging the garden is the kind of cultivation to be employed. Where the work is to be done mainly by means of horse-drawn tools the arrangement should be such as to give the longest possible rows and a straight outline should be followed. The garden should be free from paths across the rows and turning spaces should be provided at the ends. For hand cultivation (the method that probably will be used by most home gardeners) the arrangement can be quite different, as the garden may be laid out in sections with transverse walks and the rows can be much closer for most crops.

Remember Early Vegetables.

It is also important to consider the location of permanent crops such as asparagus and rhubarb. If any of the small fruits such as raspberries, currants and gooseberries are to be planted within the garden inclosure they should be included with the permanent crops. The location and area for the hotbed, cold-frame or seedbed should be decided upon, although these may be shifted to some convenient place outside the garden.

Where there is great variety in the composition of the soil in different parts of the garden it will be advisable to note this when arranging for the location of the various crops. Such crops as celery, onions and late cabbage should be planted in land that is not too low and moist. If part of the soil is high, warm and dry, that is the proper location for early crops and those that need a quick, warm soil.

Points to Consider.

Remember these points in planning your garden:

A gentle slope toward the south or southeast is most desirable for the production of early crops. It is an advantage to have protection on the north and northeast by either a hill, a group of trees or hedge, buildings, a tight board fence or a stone wall to break the force of the wind.

The land should have sufficient drainage for surplus water to run off during heavy rains, but the fall should not be so great that the soil will be washed. Fill up holes in which water will accumulate. Avoid banks of a creek or stream liable to overflow.

A good fence around the garden plot is almost indispensable to keep out damaging animals.

The garden should be as near the kitchen as possible so that the work of caring for the crops may be done at odd times and so that the vegetables are quickly available to the housewife.

Garden Space Valuable.

Just what vegetables are to be grown depends, of course, upon the individual tastes of the family. In general, the aim of the home gardener should be to raise vegetables in which freshness is an important quality. Peas, string beans, Lima beans, asparagus and sweet corn, for example, lose much if they are not cooked almost immediately after they are picked. In the case of potatoes, corn, cucumbers, squashes and melons, it should be remembered that these vegetables occupy a large area in proportion to their yield and in a small garden consume valuable space which, in most cases, could be used more profitably. In the case of potatoes, however, it also should be noted that they are easily stored and are an extremely good staple crop, and many gardeners will find it to advantage to plant as much ground to potatoes as possible after sufficient space has been allotted to the other garden crops.

Get Ready to Plant.

By knowing what and where and how much you want to grow, by being prepared with your seeds and tools, by mapping out your work in advance, you will grow more and better vegetables and save time, labor and money.

Use All Available Space.

Intensive culture and carefully arranged rotation will help make every foot of available space in the small garden produce the maximum yield.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MARCH 17

JESUS SENDING FORTH THE TWELVE.

(May be used with missionary application.)

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:1-31.

GOLDEN TEXT—Freely ye have received, freely give.—Matt. 10:8.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Romans 10:13-15; Isa. 40:3-9; Matt. 28:16-20; Acts 1:6-8; 2:1-4; 16:9-10.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus feeding the hungry.

MEMORY VERSE—Give ye them to eat. Mark 6:37.

JUNIOR MEMORY VERSE—Isa. 52:7.

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Messengers of Christ.

JUNIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—The power of the Gospel of Christ.

The time of this lesson was autumn, A. D. 28; the location Galilee.

I. Marvelous Unbelief. (vv. 1:1-6a). Jesus is rejected the second time at Nazareth. He entered into the synagogue on the Sabbath, as was his custom, and the people were astonished at his doctrine. His application of the scripture was similar to that of his first rejection. The significance of this visit is found in verses 5 and 6—the limitation of the mighty Christ through unbelief by those who knew him best.

II. The Mission of the Twelve. (vv. 6a-16). From the parallel account we find why Jesus sent forth these disciples (Matt. 9:36)—because the people were scattered as sheep without a shepherd. In the tenth chapter of Matthew we find the names of those whom he sent out (vv. 2-5)), the fifth verse of which designates that only Jews were included in this mission. We need to remember that these disciples were sent out before his crucifixion. Their pilgrim character is shown in Mark 6:9, and the solemn manner of their dealing with those who reject them is indicated in verse eleven. They were being sent forth as sheep in the midst of wolves. They were to be delivered up to the council and haled before the rulers of the synagogues, but with them was to go an enabling power (Matt. 10:20). Meeting persecution was to be a part of their program. They anticipate the persecution with which Christ is identified, for he exhorts them (Matt. 10:28-31), to be of courage and to fear not, for are they not "of more value than the sparrows?" Their going forth was to bring divisions (Matt. 10:34), but also a reward to those who received them aright—a righteous man's reward. (Matt. 10:40-42.) Notice their obedience (Mark 6:12-13), and their achievements as the visible evidence of the power they had received.

III. Malignant Hate. (vv. 14-29). Mark gives us the most complete account of the death of John the Baptist. It is not a lesson that we need to emphasize to the scholars of the younger grades, but it has a deep significance to those of the more advanced departments of the Sunday school; and if we are going to get the scope of the whole Epistle of Mark, it must be considered. Herod thought he had triumphed, but he was defeated. Thus it is with the sinner always—he overshoots the mark. Germany's hatred of England stands in the way of its complete domination of Europe, and it was Germany's pride which caused it to make those military blunders which prevented it from capturing Paris. So it is with Satan and the sinner; just when the victory seems to be complete God intervenes. "They that be for us are more than they that are against us." The counteracting power of God offsets the devil's hatred so that we are made "more than conquerors through him that loved us."

It was because Jesus sent forth these disciples that they were called apostles, literally "sent ones." They had been called unto him (Mark 6:7), then sent forth, not singly, but by twos, so today the lonely servant has with him the Holy Spirit. Our message is "peace," but we must have peace ourselves if we are to impart it to others.

If punishment is to be measured by the amount of light one sins against, the heaviest punishment must rest upon those in America and England who know the gospel but reject it.

It is evident that the disciples received great power (vv. 12, 13) as suggested by their return (v. 30). They acted wisely in telling Jesus "all things," both what they had done and taught. Although sent forth, they were not to spend time in visiting and entertaining, nor in seeking the hospitality of the rich. They were to be wholly dependent upon God, taking nothing with them in their journeyings, but staff and sandals, betokening their pilgrim character. The gospel of Mark gives us the picture of the ideal servant.

There are more temptations to break the commandments than there are encouragements to keep them. Resolve to help break the temptations and to help make the encouragements.

In material things it's not what we want but what we get that counts. In spiritual, it's not what we claim but what we've got.

Faith is the practical exercise of the spiritual eyes. Spirit is the only true substance. The spiritual body is the real man.—Henry Wood.

Immense Wealth From Iron Ores.

The foundation of the wealth of the Biscayan provinces of Spain lies in the large deposits of high-grade iron ores for which the section is famous. These deposits have been immensely profitable, with the result that Bilbao, which is the center of the industry, is reputed to be the wealthiest city of its size in Europe.

Apt Childish Comparison.

Our canary bird had begun to molt. My small sister saw the feathers flying around and lying on the floor. At this time the leaves of the trees had begun to fall also, and her little brain made a comparison, and she said: "Oh, look, Daddy's shedding his leaves!"—Chicago Tribune.

Classified From the Start.

Frank was the youngest of a family consisting of three boys, and was immensely excited over the arrival of a baby sister. He ran over to a neighbor's home to tell her the glad news and said: "Say, what do you think? We've got a new baby at our house, and it's a lady!"

The Statesman's Way.

"You were very late in getting home from the speaking last night, uncle," commented the old codger's niece next morning at breakfast. "Did Senator Greed have a great deal to say?"

"He had absolutely nothing to say," replied the venerable curmudgeon, "but it took him till 'leven o'clock to say it."—Kansas City Star.

Robert's Position.

Robert was an honor to the force. He did not make the acquaintance of cooks, nor did he fall asleep on duty. He was ambitious and yearned for the time when he would be able to prefix the magic words "Chief Constable" to his surname. One day recently he arrested a man on a charge of assault. On the case coming before the magistrate he inquired as to who made the allegation against the prisoner.

Forward stepped the zealous Robert, who, with a sweeping salute, replied: "Me, your worship; I'm the alligator!"—London Tit-Bits.

JEWELS AS WAR SOUVENIRS

Fragments of Reims Cathedral Among Others That Have Been Sent to This Country From France.

A little English girl tending shop laid a ring out for inspection.

"That's Reims glass," she said.

A fragment of the great cathedral that was pounded to pieces, set in a ring with a price tag hanging to it.

"And the setting is aluminum from a shell cap," went on the English voice.

The materials used are whatever happens to be nearest. In the case of the Reims rings, the glass and the aluminum were just lying around, and the Poilus cunningly used them to perfect artistic advantage. They have taken solid color gems from the cathedral, too, buried them in rich touchwood, called "lucky wood" over there.

A Frenchman is a thrifty soul, and when he hasn't anything else to make rings of he rips off the brass buttons from Fritz's army coat, the Fritz whom he has encountered in a little affair of the bayonet the night before, no doubt. The buttons, imperial crown and all, are set in aluminum and make a substantial, if grim, piece of jewelry, to be had only in man's size, of course.

Just It.

"So, to speak, like a kid glove?"

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

LITTLE PRAIRIE DOGS.

"The prairie dogs," said Daddy, "are very, very small. They look like tiny woodchucks, and they are cousins of the woodchuck family.

"They had been asleep all winter, but now that the warmer days were coming, they wanted to get up. All the baby prairie dogs arrived in the spring, and they wanted to have their homes in readiness to welcome the little ones.

"But one day one of the prairie dogs was missing from his home. Young Master Prairie was the one who was missing. They searched high and low for him, but never a sign of him could they find.

"They missed him sadly, and they felt they knew that harm had come to him. Master Prairie would never have stayed away from home on his own account.

"And to be sure, a coyote had captured him.

"'Let me go!' Master Prairie had screamed, but the coyote paid no attention.

"'Let me go,' Master Prairie begged as the cruel teeth grabbed his little body.

"He barked and then he cried: 'Have pity, coyote, have pity! My home is so nice. My family loves me so.'

"But the coyote said viciously, 'I love you, too. I love you so much I am going to eat you up.'

"'Oh, please don't eat me up,' said Master Prairie. 'I've just awakened for the year. The young prairie dogs will soon be coming. Oh, we're going to have such a glorious spring.

It Was a Sad Story, But They Heard It Through.

"'Don't hurt me. I never did you any harm. I never did anyone any harm. I laugh and I never get blue and discouraged, like my cousins, the woodchucks.'

"'I'll not miss a treat like this,' the coyote said.

"And despite the pleadings of the little prairie dog, the coyote thought of the delicious meal he would have, and Master Prairie Dog's cheerful little life was over.

"After he had been missing from the home of the prairie dogs they were very, very careful not to wander away where there might be any chance of danger.

"Grandmother Prairie Dog told them the story of the farmer who had hated the prairie dogs for making so many, many holes.

"It was a sad story, but they heard it through, so they would take pains to make their holes, as far as possible, away from farms.

"'This farmer,' Grandmother Prairie told them, 'was so angry because so many holes were made in his grounds that he vowed he would get rid of the prairie dogs.

"'Now, you know quite well,' said Grandmother Prairie, 'that we never hurt anyone. We're happy and jolly and gay. We love each other and our neighbors. The only thing that we do that annoys the farmer is that we make so many holes.'

"'But how are we to help doing that?' asked the little prairie dogs.

"'We must make them away from where we think we can be harmed,' said Grandmother Prairie.

"'This farmer that I'm telling you about, put poisoned grain and wheat into our holes.

"'Of course, we ate it, at least most of us did, for we thought it was thoughtful of him, and we barked our thanks delightedly. We also wagged our little tails.

"'But the farmer hadn't stayed to hear our thanks. He had another purpose in his mind. This we soon found out.

"'I had had a very good meal only a short time before this, and wasn't in the least scrap hungry. So I didn't eat any of the poisoned food.

"'That is why I am alive to-day. But many of us did, and were poisoned. So we've got to be careful.' And they all promised they would be.

"Soon they forgot about these sad stories and barked and laughed and played. How happy they were! For they are never sad long, and their little lives are jolly ones indeed.

"And soon the best part of the spring followed—the arrival of all the baby prairie dogs!"

Be Careful.

"It's always dangerous to jump at conclusions," said the careful man. "You're liable to make yourself ridiculous, to say the least."

"That's right," replied the other. "I jumped at the conclusion of a ferry boat once and missed it."

Swift & Company Publicity

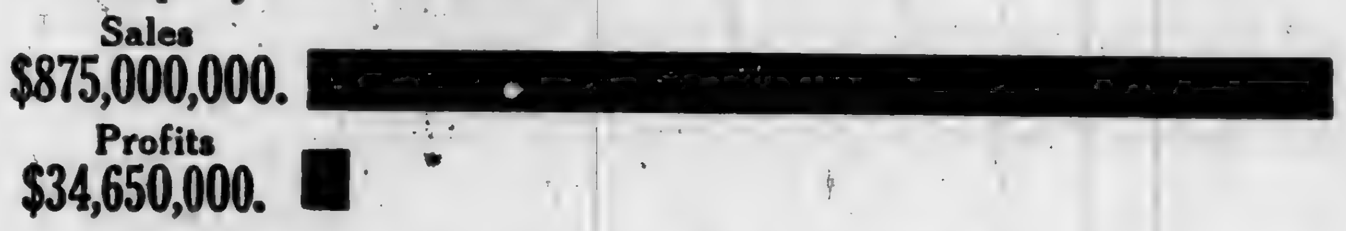
At a recent hearing of the Federal Trade Commission there was introduced correspondence taken from the private files of Swift & Company, which showed that the Company had been considering for some time an educational advertising campaign.

The need for this publicity has been apparent to us for several years. The gross misrepresentation to which we have recently been subjected has convinced us that we should no longer delay in putting before the public the basic facts of our business, relying on the fair-mindedness of the American people.

The feeling against the American packer is based largely on the belief that the income and well-being of the producer and consumer are adversely affected by the packers' operations, resulting in unreasonably large profits.

Swift & Company's net profit is reasonable, and represents an insignificant factor in the cost of living.

For the fiscal year 1917 the total sales and net profit of Swift & Company were as follows:



Sales
$875,000,000.

Profits
$34,650,000.

This is equivalent to a $3,465. profit on a business of $87,500.

If Swift & Company had made no profit at all, the cattle raiser would have received only one-eighth of a cent per pound more for his cattle, or the consumer would have saved only one-quarter of a cent per pound on dressed beef.

Hursey Case Was on Trial

The evieence in the Hursey drain controversy was heard in the DeKalb circuit court before Special Judge A. C. Wood, of Angola, Wednesday and Thursday. The arguments were presented late Thursday and then Judge Wood announced he would take the case under advisement.

The petition for this drain was filed several years ago. It is proposed to be constructed in the south east part of the county and extends in length eighteen miles. The estimated cost is $26,500.

The report of the drainage commissions was filed and a remonstrance against it followed. The remonstrators claimed the drainage commissions had no right to extend the drain any further than the petition prescribed. Trail on the pleadings was had at the December term of court and Special Judge Wood decided in favor of the petitioners. Then the remonstrators again took the case into court and many land owners affected are anxiously awaiting the findings of the court.

Charles S. Smith and Edgar W. Atkinson are attorneys for the petitioners and Huffman & Shearer for the remonstrators.

Don't Top Shade Trees.

No difference how young or old a shade tree may be, it should be gone over each year and given such pruning as it may need. Ordinarily a shade tree needs but little pruning. A young tree should be pruned up until the lower branches are seven to ten feet above the ground. Species like the maple, with long horizontal branches, should be pruned up higher than the elm and sycamore, which have ascending branches.

In pruning up young trees, remove only a branch or two each year. Do not over prune and make the tree spindling.

Remove all dead and dying branches from any tree. If two branches rub each other, cut off one. Rarely is any other pruning needed.

Small branches can be removed any time of the year without injury to the tree, but the removal of many small or large branches should be done while the trees have no leaves on them.

Be careful to cut off branches flush with their support. In cutting off large branches, saw in on the under side about six inches from the support until the saw begins to pinch, then saw from the top side a few inches farther out until the branch breaks off. Then saw the stub off. Then saw the stub off flush with the support.

Do not paint wounds with ordinary paint or coal tar paint. If the wound is treated, cover it with grafting wax.

ST. JOE NEWS.

VOL. XXXII — ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 21 1918 — NO. 12

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Battery "D" 3rd. F A.,
Camp McClellan,
Anniston, Ala.,
March 4, 1918.

Dear Folks,—

I will endeavor to write you a few lines this evening, although there may be some difficulty as to the result, for I received a vaccination and an inocculation to day, both in my left arm, and although I went along with the crowd up to the Y. M. C. A., and endeavored to wear away its effects by practicing a little at Basket Ball on an exterior court, nevertheless there is a twitching there every now and then that reminds me of the fact that I received something. One fellow was over come by the dose be received, and only a few moments ago was borne out to the ambulance on a stretcher to be taken to the Base Hospital, about a mile and a half away from our camp. But they won't get a chance to cart me away in a similar manner for I am too tough a mutt, I guess.

We "enjoyed" quite a severe wind storm last night, and when the wind blows here, it means dust and sand galore. We were awakened by the wind flapping our tents, and upon putting our hands to our faces to rub our eyes, trying to waken to what was taking place, we discovered a little white coating of good, old Alabama sand on our faces you ever saw. We got outside to fix our tents securely, and looking over into the mountains some 5 or 6 miles away, beheld a very spectacular sight. It was in the vicinity of the targets at which the six inch field pieces had recently been firing, and on the crest of the highest ridge, stretching along a line about a quarter of a mile in extent, very acutely outlined against a dark and cloudy sky, we beheld a forest fire, fanned to great intensity by the high velocity of the wind. The trees, for the most part, are pine shrubs and burn very rapidly, once they become ignited by bursting shells. Another ridge is afire again this evening.

The Battery took an all day's road march last Friday, but I did not get to accompany them, for we were very busily engaged in the Office about that time making out our Muster rolls for the two months just elapsing. Our work is pretty well caught up again now, and we are once more breathing quite freely and easily after having worked day and night for one solid week getting out our reports and rolls.

As soon as the clerk, who is now in the hospital gets out for duty again; Mr. Vickey, my other assistant, and myself are going to take a little trip up to Gadsen, Ala., a distance of about 30 miles, spending Sunday with some relatives of his. He is a mighty fine fellow, tall, slender, and rather dark complected; and we have become the best of friends and pals, where one is the other is always to be found there also. We resemble Mutt and Jeff in our relative heights to one another.

The weather is certainly lovely here, so nice and warm, with a breeze blowing most of the time to temper it. But they tell me after March is over, there is no breeze, and the old sun isn't a bit stingy with the heat he bestows upon this portion of the world either. Already we perspire quite freely and frequently in the noon day sun, so I don't know what the end will be when it gets to be July and August. Our only salvation will be in moving before then, the prospects of which look mighty slim at present. Everybody in the Battery thinks we are anchored here in the heart of the mountains for the rest of the War. But for my part, I am becoming accustomed to my surroundings, and am very well pleased with the beauty and picturequeness of the scenery. Nature is donning her spring garb, the trees are leafing out, the grass is quite green, flowers are in bloom, and every now and then you may hear the gentle warble of a gay little spring bird, who seems to delight in being the harbinger of the pleasant season he is introducing. There are a few perfume trees in the locality and their odor lends a very sweet scent to the atmosphere.

I have only heard from Merwin Place once since the Battery he is in moved over to Ft. Oglethorpe Ga. He was quite well pleased with the location and conditions of their new camp, it being easily accessible to Chattanooga, Tenn.

Roy just came in to get the St. Joe News which made its appearance as a silent messenger from home yesterday. It keeps us in touch with all the happenings of our home locality and is an indispensable article to our comfort and enjoyment, and trust it shall be able to follow us wherever we may go. Although only a little distance apart, Roy and I see each other very infrequently, for he is working out on the carriages and guns nearly all day and at night spends his time with the members of his own organization; but once in a while we get time enough to go over and see how each other is looking, and find out if we are getting enough to eat. Ha! Ha! No danger of starving in Uncle Sam's Army, though, for we get all that is coming to us in the line of food It is very distressing to note the enormous waste connected with army cooking. Each organization of not more than 200 men have their individual kitchens, and each one is supplied with an out door incinerator, in which all the food left over is burned. There are usually two garbage cans filled daily with the waste food, averaging about 15 gallons apiece. When this amount is multiplied by the hundreds of similar incinerators in this camp and by the many camps in the United States a slight idea of the enormous amount of products wasted is conceived. Of course only a very, very small portion of this waste would be fit for any human consumption, but all the garbage, if it were possible to be given to farmers to fatten their hogs on, would feed more hogs than the farmers of the land could raise.

So that is another way in which war is a destructive agency, but as was mentioned by George Hart in his letter to The News, it is a constructive agency as well, for it will construct a man morally, physically and spiritually, if he will only allow his person to be so guided and directed by its influences, and is able to keep away from the alluring, farcial side of it. It is quite true that a large number of the men in the Regular Army are men steeped in sin, with scarcely a single thought of the life to come, but it is the very fact that you come in contact with such people that strengthens your own character, and makes you loathe their vile, filthy, wicked ways.

I was very much impressed by a statement made by the Y. M. C. A., Director the other Sunday evening at service, when he said, "if George Washington or Abraham Lincoln or Woodrow Wilson would step into our midst, we would arise to our feet in a token of respect and honor to their greatness and achievements, but if our Lord and Savior were to appear before us, we would fall upon our knees, bowing our faces to the floor in humble submission to his tender will and presence." It is such statements as this which awakens all reverence the Great Power who is the Director of our destinies and in whose hands rests the reins of the future, to be guiden wherever he may direct.

I am sure all the St. Joe boys who have joined the army will be thankful for the fact that they have been brought up among Christian people and in a Godly community, and it will be the unseen power of this early association that will be their stay and comfort in many an hour of trial and temptation.

Time passes by so fleetly, one can scarcely realize that we are plunging on, on toward the goal of what, we know not. Our eyes are as one blind, we know not when we go, where we go or how we go, but we all have the greatest confidence in the leader and directors of the affairs of this great nation, and rest easy in the thought that all will end well some day, and then we will come home to the loved ones and friends who have so loyally upheld our aims and principles and cheered us on to the certain victory which will have been ours in the future, by their every word of kindness, sincerity and cheer. Oh, it gives one new energy and vigor when he hears from home, and learns how the folks back there are praying for his welfare and exerting themselves to the utmost in every possible manner to make life as easy and as comfortable as possible while he is in the army. Your prayers are needed and appreciated by every boy who goes out from your midst, and their power is greater than anyone has any idea, for many a deed that was not of the brightest character might have been perpetrated had not an unseen voice out of the past called to him, bidding him stay his hand ere he had gone too far to retrace his steps from something he would forever regret having done. But it is regretable to note there are many, many who do not seem to care what they do and it is for those unknown to you perhaps, to be included in your prayers along with the friends and relatives you may be praying for unceasingly.

I am perfectly contented with my lot and portion in the Army, and hope that all may be able to look on the bright side and see the golden sunshine of God's blessings resting upon them, for it drives all thoughts of sorrow and lonliness away, and thrills you through and through with the very joy of living. We are preparing to live now, by making this old world of ours a better place to live in, and we are coming back again some day to enjoy it in its new purity and freshness when it shall have been purged of the great stain which now defile its face.

My "bunkie" is getting ready for bed, and I guess I shall have to go also, as it is 9:30 and I am quite tired and sleepy.

Hoping this finds everybody as well, happy and in as good spirits as it leaves us. I remain,

Your loving Grandson and Son,
Willie Gray Woodcox.

Re-opening of Church.

After a long unavoidable delay the improvements on the Methodist Protestant Church have been completed and it will be re-opened on next Sunday.

Rev. Dr. Lyman E. Davis, D. D. editor of the Methodist Recorder and President of the General Conference, and Rev. W. W. Lineberry, D. D., President of the Indiana Annual Conference, have been secured for this service.

Dr. Davis is an author and lecturer of note as well as a preacher and has for several years been on the program at the Winona Bible Conference.

Bro. Lineberry is well known having been pastor when the St. Joe Church was built. Besides these, there will be other addresses by visiting pastors and a fine programme of special music and recitations.

There will be three services during the day.

The Sunday School will meet at 9:30. After the Sunday School there will be special music, recitations and a sermon by Dr. Davis.

Over the Top

By an American Soldier Who Went
ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

The Greatest War Story Ever Written

When the Lusitania was sunk Arthur Guy Empey decided that he could not wait for his country to declare war—so he sailed without orders for England, and enlisted as a Canadian.

He recounts this incident in "OVER THE TOP" in less than five hundred words. In a few thousand more words he completes his experiences in England—and after that he is in France—for the greater part of the eighteen months before he was invalided home, in the "Front Line Trenches."

"OVER THE TOP" is the first story by one of the American soldiers who went to France, has been a real combatant and has seen long service in the trenches.

Sergeant Empey tells what it actually means and feels like:

to be wounded seven times;
to live for a year and a half with mud and rats and shells;
to be covered with "cooties" and never to get rid of them;
to go "over the top" in a charge;
to grasp for your gas helmet when a second's delay mean's death;
to capture a Prussian;
to get tangled up in barb-wire with that machine gun working a few yards away;
to lie for thirty-six hours wounded and unconscious in "No Man's Land."

For a year and a half, until he fell wounded in "No Man's Land" this American soldier saw more actual fighting and real warfare than any war correspondent who has written about the war. His experiences are grim, but they are thrilling, and lightened by a touch of humor as original as the Soldiers Three. And they are True.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have secured serial rights to this remarkable story and that it will appear in installments

BASIS FOR LOANS TO FARM OWNERS

Federal Board Issues Rules for the Guidance of Land Banks.

MANY MECHANICS ARE NEEDED

Ten Thousand Skilled Men Wanted for Service in the Aviation Section of the Signal Corps—New Kind of Bullets.

Washington.—The federal farm loan board has issued the following rules for the guidance of the land banks in determining what area constitutes a farm for loaning purposes:

"First, Generally—The farm must be of sufficient area to yield at the hands of an ordinarily capable farmer, putting it to the use to which it is generally adapted and using average methods, an income sufficient to maintain the family of the applicant and discharge the interest and amortization payments.

"Second, Specially.—Where through intensive farming or the practice of a specialty a sufficient income has been regularly derived from a tract deficient in area for ordinary farming, or where the application of the prospective borrower shows that he is by experience capable of producing such an income from such a tract, such area may be accepted as sufficient, provided the land has a stable and permanent market value sufficient to warrant the loan applied for. This ruling does not apply to fruit and orchard lands which have already been the subjects of definite rulings by this board."

Under the first paragraph of this ruling loans may be made to the ordinary farmer on the basis of average skill and efficiency, and no tract of land will be accepted as a farm eligible for a loan under the federal farm loan act unless it is large enough to support the family and take care of the loan under the average farm conditions of the neighborhood.

But under the second paragraph of the ruling the intensive farmer or the man who practices a profitable specialty, or who shows himself able to do so, will be given financial support by the federal loan system, even though his farm may be too small for ordinary farming purposes, provided that the land quite apart from its use has a stable and permanent land value which will make the loan safe whether it is well operated, or badly operated, or not operated at all.

Qualified men registered under the selective service law may be inducted into service to fill the call for 10,000 skilled mechanics needed by the aviation section of the signal corps, by applying to their local boards. Men not registered may enlist at recruiting stations.

The present call is particularly for machinists, auto mechanics, engine repairmen, gunsmiths, chauffeurs, carpenters, blacksmiths, tinsmithts, sheet-metal workers, propeller makers, wireless operators and constructors, tailors, tent-makers, sail-makers, truck masters, vulcanizers, welders, and experts on magnetos, ignition systems, cameras, watches, and clocks.

Men will be sent to San Antonio, Tex., for segregation by trades, followed by a brief course of instruction at flying fields or factories, then organized into squadrons mostly for service overseas. Additional information may be secured by application to the air division, personnel department, Washington, D. C.

The present war has brought forth a new kind of ammunition for airplane use in the form of special cartridges containing bullets for armor-piercing, tracing, and incendiary purposes. All of these cartridges are of the small rifle calibers, according to a statement authorized by the war department. The three-tenths of an inch diameter and short length of the bullet left little space for the armor-piercing element or for tracer and incendiary composition, but such combinations have been made.

The bullets developed by the United States ordnance department have been tested on land and from airplanes to see if there is any difference in their performance when fired from a quickly moving airplane in the upper atmosphere and when fired on land. These tests indicate that the United States has developed a class of special cartridges with a performance fully equal to or surpassing that attained abroad.

More than 1,600 tons of anthracite coal were condemned in Pennsylvania markets by representatives of the fuel administration recently in the campaign to compel the delivery of clean coal.

Following the plan adopted for California and Colorado, the food administration has appointed a commission to determine the cost of producing sugar beets in Nebraska. The commission has no power to fix prices, but it is expected that its figures will serve as the basis for voluntary price agreements between growers and purchasers of sugar beets.

All cheese now in storage must be marketed before June 15, unless special permission to hold is given by the food administration.

The use of gas in warfare dates back to about 400 B. C. The Spartans saturated wood with pitch and sulphur and burned it under the walls of cities which they were attacking. For several centuries gas has not been used in warfare, and The Hague convention definitely ruled against it. However, on April 22, 1915, the Germans liberated great clouds of gas against Canadian troops near Ypres. Terrible destruction and demoralization resulted from this first gas attack, and within a week England was making plans for gas warfare against the Germans.

Soon after the first German gas attack English and French women sent to the front hundreds of thousands of home-made gas masks. For the most part they were merely bandages impregnated with chemicals to wrap around the mouth and nose. These emergency masks saved many lives, but afforded only limited protection.

Commenting on the decision to regulate the consumption of bread in Paris by means of tickets, reference is made by some of the Paris newspapers to the success of the bread card in Switzerland, where the bread has been rationed for several months, resulting in an economy of 45 per cent of the amount consumed previously.

The average amount allotted per person per day is 250 grams (which will soon be reduced to 200 grams). Each individual card contains a certain number of coupons for 250, 100, 50 and 25 grams of bread, amounting in all to the total monthly allotment. These coupons may be used whenever the holder desires, either at the baker's or at a restaurant; in fact, guests in private families are expected to detach from their individual bread cards the coupons equivalent to the amount of bread consumed.

More than $11,000,000,000 of war-risk insurance has so far been written, covering over 1,500,000 persons in the military and naval services. The average amount of insurance applied for is nearly $9,000. The maximum permitted is $10,000, and the minimum $1,000.

Final figures show the United States army, both here and abroad, is well over 90 per cent insured. In many camps 99 per cent of the personnel is protected by government insurance. The insurance now on the books of the bureau is more than three times as great as the ordinary insurance held by the largest commercial company in the world.

All new persons joining the service may apply for insurance within 120 days ofter joining the colors. Automatic insurance ceased for all men, regardless of enlistment date, on February 12.

An ordnance base that will cost approximately $25,000,000 is under construction in France. It will include a gun-repair plant equipped to reline more than 800 guns a month; a large-capacity carriage repair plant; a motor-vehicle repair plant capable of overhauling more than 1,200 vehicles a month; a small-arms repair plant to handle 58,000 rifles and machine guns a month; a large shop for the repair of horse and infantry equipment; a reloading plant capable of reloading about 100,000 artillery cartridges a day.

The ordnance base will include 20 large storehouses, 12 shop buildings, 100 smaller shops and magazines, and machine and tool equipment costing $5,000,000. Approximately 450 officers and 16,000 men will be required for maintenance.

According to an announcement by Secretary Lane additional parks will be open to tourists this year on the following dates:

Yosemite, California, May 1 to November 1; Rocky Mountain National park, Colorado, May 1 to November 1; Sequoia National park, California, May 15 to October 10; General Grant National park, California, May 15 to October 10; Mesa Verde National park, Colorado, June 1 to September 30; Mount Ranier National park, Washington, June 1 to September 16; Glacier National park, Montana, June 15 to September 15; Crater Lake National park, Oregon, July 1 to September 30; Yellowstone National park, Wyoming, June 25 to September 15.

An illustrated catalogue of official war photographs and stereopticon slides has been issued by the division of pictures of the committee on public information. In it are listed about 1,000 pictures available to the public, including photographs taken by the signal corps, navy, marine corps and French and Belgian official photographs.

Each picture listed may be had either as a photographic print or as a stereopticon slide at a small price. The catalogue may be secured by sending five cents to the division of pictures, committee on public information, Washington, D. C.

About twenty English woman gardeners are going to France, where they will take up the duty tending to the graves of dead British soldiers.

The new "Mexican service badge" will soon be issued to officers and enlisted men who served under certain conditions in Mexico and on the border. Persons not now in the army who would have been entitled to the badge and whose separation from the service has been honorable may secure authority from the adjutant general to purchase and wear the service badge.

The mayor of a suburb of Antwerp has been ordered to deliver to the Germans forty fat cats.

Indiana Brevities

Indianapolis.—Reports have been coming to Carl W. Sims of the milling division of the state food administration, that farmers in some Indiana counties are feeding wheat to live stock. An effort is being made to discourage such a practice because of the need of wheat for export and the threatened shortage of flour in the United States. Persons who believe that it is a more economical practice than feeding corn are mistaken, according to advices received by Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for the state, from the office of the chief statistician of the United States food administration at Washington. Wheat now brings the highest returns to the farmer a bushel of any cereal crop, as it usually did in prewar times, this statement asserts.

Indianapolis.—"With regard to sales of wheat flour by retailers," says a ruling of the law department of the United States food administration, received by the federal food administrator for Indiana, "a purchase at the same time of the stipulated amount of substitutes is in every instance required. The purchaser from a retailer is not entitled to any credit for wheat flour substitutes bought elsewhere or at any other time." This overthrows the ruling of the federal food administrator for Indiana, who held that if the buyer made a signed statement that he had substitutes on hand bought elsewhere, wheat flour not being bought at the same time, a retailer could sell him wheat flour without at the same time selling him substitutes.

Indianapolis.—More coal with greater heating power, and fewer clinkers and ashes, is to result from the organization of an inspection system to enforce the mining and loading of clean coal. This announcement was made by Horace H. Herr, director of conservation in the offices of State Fuel Administrator Woollen, who stated that the United States fuel administration has found it necessary to assure the consumer a better grade of coal while thus conserving a greater number of cars.

Indianapolis.—Farmers will be called on to buy a large share of the issue of bonds in the Liberty loan champaign beginning on April 6, it was made clear by speakers at a conference of the representatives of the farmers' and agricultural organization interests in Indiana that was held at the statehouse. And that the farmers will respond and do their full part in financing the war against Germany and Austria was equally clear from the speeches of those who know the farmer best and who were in a position to speak for him.

Hammond.—Discussion of alleged charges of city folk that farmers are slackers and not supporting the government properly caused a near riot at a meeting of 1,000 dairymen and farmers of Lake county at Crown Point. W. J. Kittle, secretary of the Milk Producers' association of Illinois, from Chicago, addressed the meeting and aided in the organization of the dairymen into a protective league. B. F. Carlin of Crown Point was elected president and H. Meeter of Highland was made secretary.

Princeton.—As a result of the failure of food administrators in adjoining counties to take over the flour supply and handle it from a central depot, Food Administrator Tichenor announced that the flour supply in Gibson county would be put back in the hands of the dealers. All flour in Gibson county for the last three weeks was sold through the food administrator. There was much complaint because the same regulations were not in effect in surrounding counties.

Richmond.—Prosecutor Frank Strayer's determination to make conditions "safe for matrimony" was responsible for the appearance of five husbands in the circuit court charged with violations of the "lazy husband" act. One man was fined $100 and sentenced to jail for six months, and four were released on their own recognizance after promising to take care of their families.

Jeffersonville.—Forty young women of Louisville, Ky., were registered for service as motorcar drivers at the United States quartermaster's depot here and 25 of them will be given employment April 1. Their pay envelope each month will contain $72.60. More than 100 applications marked the response to a recent call issued from the depot by Col. W. S. Wood for women drivers.

Indianapolis.—All except 46 cents of $1,000,000 due to the federal government as floor tax on liquor, drugs, autos and other articles from dealers and wholesalers under the new war tax law has been paid by persons in 59 Indiana counties of the Sixth internal revenue district, it was announced by Peter J. Kruyer, collector of internal revenue.

Laporte.—Plans for a traction line from Monticello to Chicago with branches to Gary and Fort Wayne will be considered at a series of meetings to be held in northern Indiana towns. The new line is said to be part of a system financed by an Eastern syndicate. The route was surveyed a year ago and capital is said to be now available for construction work.

Evansville.—To relieve a shortage of roustabouts, steamboat owners here are completing plans to bring a large number of Alabama negroes to the Green River country across the Kentucky line near here.

Muncie.—Eastern Indiana farmers have begun plowing. The ground except where it is low, is now in fairly good condition to be turned. The seed corn shortage will not be felt here, the county agent, J. F. Treasure, says. Tests show that a high percentage of the corn raised in the county will germinate. Farmers recently have formed a county-wide organization to kill sheep-killing dogs. The curtailing of the sales of sugar threatened to cause the deaths of many bees, farmers say. Before bees can obtain their supply of sugar from nature, they must be fed and when farmers are limited as to the amounts of sugar they may buy, there is nothing to do about it but allow the bees to starve.

Washington, D. C.—Reports received by the United States employment service of the department of labor indicate that Indiana farmers are leading those of other states in the use of boys for war emergency farm labor, Isaac D. Straus, Indiana state director of the United States boys' working reserve, which is the boy-power mobilizing division of the federal employment service, sent word from Indianapolis that farmers in 30 of the state's 92 counties already have asked the boys' reserve to supply them with 4,398 boys this season. Director Straus estimates that 15,000 Indiana boys between the ages of sixteen and twenty-one will be required to help the farmers of the state.

Indianapolis—A campaign to increase the number of silos on Indiana farms by 10,000 this year was approved by the Indiana committee on food production and conservation. Maurice Douglas of Flat Rock, chairman of the special silo committeee, was instructed to ascertain the number of cattle and the number of silos in each county and to base on these facts a quota of silos each county is expected to get this year. It also was proposed that a state conference be called in Indianapolis of county agricultural agents and representatives of better farming associations for the purpose of laying plans for the silo campaign.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions have been granted the following Indianians: Charles Dilden, alias James Carman, Lafayette, $20; William S. Demott, Indianapolis, $20, and $25 each to Mary J. Burchfield, Kokomo; Rose D. Bond, Sullivan; Anna Feasel, Boston; Rachel Highland, Bluffton; Laura G. James, Boswell; Amanda Krauss, Thorntown; Rushana Lockridge, Shirley; Margaret McWhirter, Decatur; Eliza Martin, Eaton; Mary G. Newman, Ossian; Mary A. Spencer, Sheridan; Rossetta Shock, Marion; Loretta A. Templeton, Indianapolis; Mary J. Norton, Elkhart; Elizabeth Bingham, Lafayette, and Eliza C. Wise, Crown Point.

South Bend.—William J. Wooley of Evansville was elected to succeed himself as president of the Indiana Society of Sanitary Engineers. Other officers elected are: Edward Kanney, Laporte, vice president; J. W. Holland, Logansport, secretary-treasurer; directors, C. B. Pike, Lafayette; Claude McElwaine, Indianapolis; J. W. M. Freitag, Terre Haute; Thomas Williams, South Bend; delegates to national convention at St. Louis, C. H. Maloney, Gary; Edward Kenney, Laporte. The 1919 convention will be held in Terre Haute.

Indianapolis. — Reports received from 203 restaurants in Indiana up to March 8, by Raymond Kiser, hotel and restaurant deputy in the office of the state food administration, show a saving of approximately one-third in wheat and meat since the beginning of the new food rules. The figures show the amount of meat consumed to have been 53,688 pounds, or 17,438 pounds less than the average for a similar previous period. Wheat used amounted to 78,392 pounds, with a saving of 25,369 pounds.

Terre Haute.—The Vigo county commissioners have decided to grant renewals of liquor licenses up until April 2, the date set by the legislature for the prohibition law to go in effect, but they did not consider issuing them for longer periods. This answer has been given to attorneys for saloonkeepers who sounded them out on this problem, in view of the fact that the law now is being tested in the courts and a final decision may not have been obtained by April 2.

Logansport.—Two cars of seed corn containing about 1,600 bushels will be shipped from Missouri to Cass county, assuring enough for planting a full acreage in the county this year. There is a shortage of seed corn in the county and Purdue agents say that the Missouri corn will grow in this district as it was gathered from the northern part of Missouri where the climate is about the same as here.

Shoals.—Farmers who are examining their corn which was cribbed last fall, as well as that which was left on the stalk in the field owing to the severe winter, say that it is rotting badly. One farmer who has 6,000 bushels cribbed will lose a great percentage of his crop. This is occasioned by the failure to mature properly last autumn owing to cold weather throughout the summer and fall.

Washington, D. C.—The surgeon general of the army has made formal application to the war department for the use of Fort Benjamin Harrison as a place for the establishment of an immense army hospital to receive invalided and wounded soldiers back from France. Whether Fort Harrison will be turned over to the medical department of the army is now a question under consideration at the war college.

Marion.—The Sims bottle plant, now owned by Marion and Sims men, will resume operations March 20 with a force of 200 employees.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

ANOTHER CORPORATION TAKES A WHACK AT JOHN BARLEYCORN.

From a statement recently put in the pay envelope of each employee of the Pennsylvania Rubber Co.

"The money in this envelope is yours, to use as you see fit. It may be devoted to the good of your family if you have one; if not, to your own betterment or the improvement of those who are to any degree dependent upon your efforts. . . . What we have to say is a statement for the guidance of some, if they desire to remain in our employ. Eighty-five per cent of the discontent and trouble generated in this factory can be traced to men who, on account of careless habits, have become discontented with themselves and have endeavored to spread dissatisfaction.

"Do not think that you can wake up with a headache and wish the consequences on us. Also eliminate at once the idea that you can continue to lay off without cause and retain your position. The 'cramps in the stomach' is becoming old to a point that it is almost moss-covered. Above all, remember that the man who does not take proper care of his family cannot remain in the employe of the Pennsylvania Rubber Co. . . . We announce the platform upon which we stand in order that any who may desire to work under more liberal conditions may migrate before extremely cold weather sets in."

WHY WORRY ABOUT CONCURRENT LEGISLATION?

The antiprohibitionists are making a fearsome bugaboo out of the difficulties that supposedly will arise from concurrent enforcement of the prohibition amendment by federal and state governments. They suggest the possibility of the inflicting of a double conviction for one crime, a conflict between the laws of the state and federal government, etc.

As a matter of history, concurrent legislation by the federal and state governments has been tested and found to work successfully. Attention was called to this fact by Congressman E. Y. Webb at the time of the hearing and vote on the amendment in the house: "Counterfeiting is peculiarly a national offense," said Mr. Webb, "because it is offensive to the integrity of the national money, and yet nearly all the states have statutes condemning and punishing counterfeiting. But there the jurisdiction is concurrent, and if the state gets hold of a counterfeiter first the federal government sometimes lets the state handle it, but often asks the state to turn him over to the federal government. But the states have the right to enforce their laws against counterfeiters because the congress has given them the jurisdiction."

A TRAITOR TO HIS OWN BODY.

One of the strongest arguments that a physician can offer against the use of alcohol is its paralyzing effect upon the white blood corpuscles. These are our chief agents in defense against disease. When some morbid element enters the blood stream it is the duty of the white corpuscles to cast out. But the user of alcohol is lacking in this defense because he has been a traitor to his own body, taking into it that which destroys the power of his defenders. This is the explanation of the high death rate when pneumonia, typhoid, or other serious diseases attack habitual drinkers. It also explains the reluctance of the surgeon to operate upon a heavy drinker. The patient is lacking in that vital element known as "resistance." He has destroyed himself.—From "A Physician's Testimony on Alcohol," by Charles H. Lertigo, M. D.

BANKS CASH PAY CHECKS.

The Deseret Evening News, recounting the changes wrought in Salt Lake City in five months of prohibition, says that very few of the places formerly occupied by saloons are vacant. These vacancies, we are told, are not chargeable to lack of would-be tenants or to a general slump in business, but to the undesirability of the locations for other business. The percentage of vacant buildings existing at present in the business district is no greater, according to real estate men, than before prohibition went into effect. The people today have the pleasure of seeing restaurants, grocery stores, meat markets, dry goods and clothing stores and many other sorts of stores in rooms formerly occupied by saloons.

The impetus given to other business, particularly amusements and savings institutions, has been gratifying. Motion picture theater proprietors freely admit that much of their prosperity during the fall and early winter has been due to prohibition.

BANK DEPOSITS INCREASE SEVENTY-FOUR PER CENT.

From the Idaho Statesman we learn that during the last two years—the period in which state prohibitoin has been in force—the bank deposits of the city of Boise have increased 74 per cent; also that the assets of Boise's six banks are 52 per cent greater. These increases are shown by the figures prepared by the banks showing their conditions as of November 20, the date set by the comptroller in his last call

THE BIG WORK IN THE WAR

The War Lord Salutes the Field Marshall.

Such is the striking title to a well-timed cartoon in an agricultural paper, showing the War Lord in salute to the farmer. The meaning of it is that without the assistance that the farmer renders in the matter of providing food for the army the fighting ability of that body would be proportionally decreased. While the army is fighting, the farmer is busy. The promptness with which he sprang into the breach was a patriotism equal to that of the man who enlisted and the farmer's record in this particular was worthy of the high record that has become his. All over the United States the appeal is being met by more production. Fields are enlarged, intensive agriculture has taken the place of slipshod methods, more cattle are being fattened, more hogs grown, veal and lamb have become scarce commodities. This is all in keeping with the food-controller's demands, and with the heartiness that is now prevalent, it would seem as if the requirements of the boys at the front and the allies in Europe would be fully met.

Not only are the tilled acres of the United States being brought into requisition, but the wild pasture lands are doing tribute with their cattle and sheep. Working in conjunction with the United States, Western Canada is also doing its share and a pretty large share it is, too. By an arrangement with the United States Government it will now be possible through its employment bureau to secure for the Western Canada fields such help as can be spared. It is thought in this way Canada will have its help to seed its millions of acres of wheat land fairly well met. The large number of young men of the farms who have enlisted and gone to the front has left many of the Western Canada farms weak in the matter of man power. This means that Canada can take all that the United States can spare. The wages will be good and the housing comfortable.

In addition to this the free homestead lands of Western Canada offer the greatest inducement to the man with limited means who is willing to undergo some of the hardships naturally accompanying this enterprise. There is also the large area of uncultivated lands that are waiting the man with sufficient means to purchase and equip. And this is not expensive. The cheap lands are cheap and the terms very reasonable. Equipped with tractor or horse power the cultivation cost is slight when the return is considered. Yields of wheat varying from 20 to 40 bushels per acre may be relied upon, and with a set price of over $2.00 per bushel, it is an easy matter to arrive at the cost. Production, including interest on land, has been estimated at figures not exceeding ten dollars an acre. With a twenty bushel yield, at a two dollar price—forty dollars. Ten from forty and you have the profits many farmers made in Western Canada the past year.

The Dominion and Provincial Governments are working conjointly in an increased production propaganda. Among the important steps that have been taken to bring this about is the recent order by which it is made possible to take into Canada tractors that cost fourteen hundred dollars and less in the country of production. This will give those residing in the United States, owning lands in Canada, the opportunity to place them under cultivation at much less cost than in the past. Another inducement is the privilege of taking sheep and cattle in free of duty. Automobiles form a necessary part of the outfit of a good many farmers that would like to move to Canada. These are now accorded free duty. Provision is also made that those requiring seed and unable to obtain it in any other way, may get it from the Government. So from this it will be seen that it is not only the fertile lands of Western Canada that invite the settler, but the ease and cheapness with which a farmer may establish himself.—Advertisement.

French Fashions Feature Economy

New York.—There is some exceedingly good feature about the French gowns that are beginning to arrive in America, which will not cause disapproval over here. That is the striking similarity between afternoon and evening costumery, according to a fashion writer.

It was once said, in a slightly contemptuous manner, that in certain sections of this country the women wore guimpes in their ball gowns for afternoon occasions and that no one was capable of such an economical combination but the American woman, or at least, no other woman who moved in fashionable circles.

It has long been the opinion of the French, whenever they were sufficiently lenient to be interested in the American type of dressing, that we never knew the exact shade of difference that existed between an afternoon gown and all other kinds of gowns.

The French women have often said, in their polite manner, that they could not understand why the American was lacking in that finer feeling which automatically governs the choice of clothes.

Did Not Always Change.

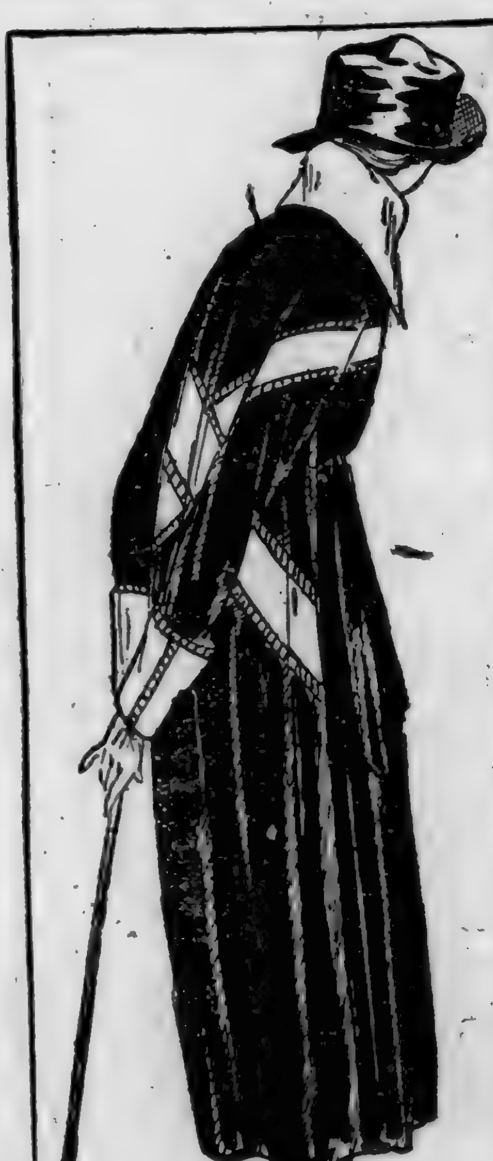
Now, whether or not the American lacked the finer feeling or whether she was conscious that custom produced fashions, she continued to dress at ten o'clock in the morning in the clothes that she would wear until seven o'clock in the evening. In truth, she did not always change for dinner or the theater. She went on through the entire routine of the day with its diversified interests, its business appointments, its marketing, shopping and restaurant lunching, its afternoon teas, weddings, card parties, home dinners and the play in a coat and skirt that should only be worn, as the French put it, in a public mob.

The American woman has always held up to herself, and very earnestly, that she was too busy a woman to change her clothes several times during the day. Let the women of the European nations do what they would, she thought, in a social atmosphere that was fostered by generations of leisure and inactivity. Her own environment, she said, called for a different adjustment of clothes and life. So, as a rule, she presented a somber appearance at all those social festivities that were intended to make women gay as birds of paradise.

However, this manner of dressing has changed. For several years a woman has not depended on her tailored suit to do the work for every hour of the day.

This transition to better dressing has come about through the domination of the one-piece frock. As soon as the American could be divorced, or rather, wedged away from her lifelong friend, the tailored suit, she found that the one-piece frock had its attractions.

She was willing to accept it in tailored style, but she began to play with it a bit and make it suitable for her leisure time. No sooner had she acquired this wisdom than the top coat of fur or heavy material came in to further her manner of dressing. She found that thin frocks were still available for winter wear in the open, if she was securely buttoned up from chin to shoe top in a warm garment.



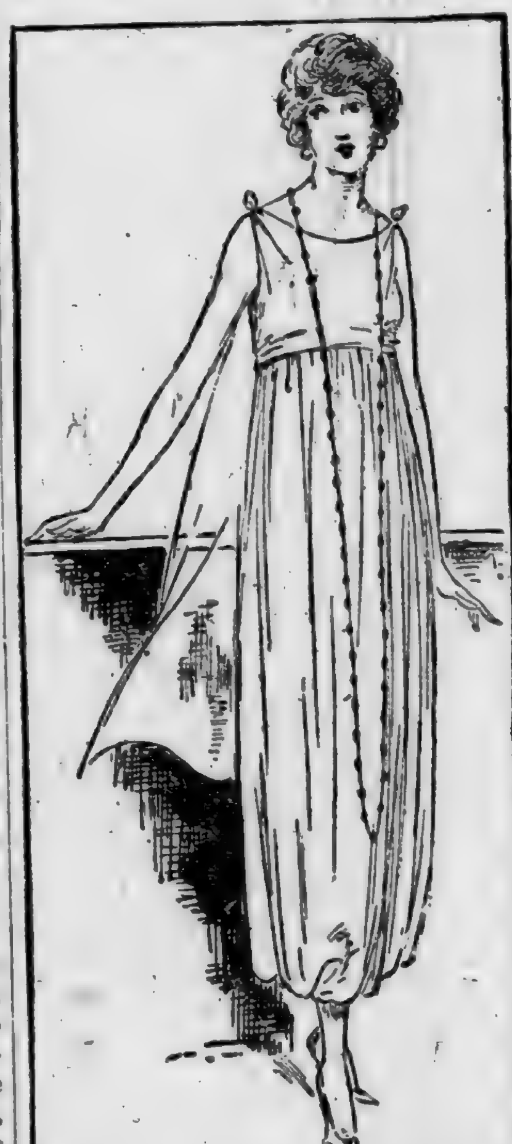
Sketch from Paris shows short dolman of bordeaux gaberdine trimmed with bands of old blue. There is a deep collar of blue.

She found that the chiffon gown which she wore at eleven o'clock in the morning was quite suitable for an afternoon dance, a cup of tea or a game of cards at five in the afternoon. This rather pleased her, so she bought coats, and more coats, just as she bought sweaters, and more sweaters in the summer.

She realized that the separate blouse was an excellent garment under a coat, but not for social affairs when the coat was removed.

Three years ago, she ceased to remove her jacket in all public places, and one year ago, she substituted the loose, Russian blouse for the tucked-in muslin shirt the moment she entered the house.

In this connection, France strikes a vibrant, resounding note on the anvil of fashion in giving approval to the afternoon gown that will serve for the evening. This is not a whim on her part. It is a fashion born through necessity. This is the best part of the clothes of the last three years; they are the results of demand and supply, not the creatures of caprice.



The Turkish trousered skirt for evening is introduced on the Paris stage by Mlle. Vana in this gown of silver tissue with a shoulder cape of silver tulle. The hem is turned up at the bottom and clings to the ankles.

France sends the narrow silhouette to help us in the conservation of wool. She sends us embroidery of wooden beads and fringes of twine in order to give work to those who need it and to substitute a cheap form of ornamentation for an expensive one.

She sends us all the common, everyday fabrics such as gingham, cotton, voile, canvas and sacking. She teaches us to be economical and go to the attic, through her use of old laces of every kind. She sends us high puttees and cloth-top shoes in order that we may do with little leather.

She makes fashionable American Indian embroideries so that we may go right into our own West and find pieces of material and inspiration that will build us new gowns without much cost.

She sends us piece-meal gowns which are made from two, three and four odds and ends of material skillfully combined to produce a harmonious whole, but, mark you, to also provide a way to use up short pieces of fabric which we have in the house or can purchase in the shops.

She sends us the thin crepe de chine petticoat and the plaid voile blouse to save laundry and soap and flour. She uses small bouquets and large, single flowers for trimming instead of expensive buckles and other costly trifles. She knows these flowers can be made at home or re-dipped in a good dye after they have seen service in other days.

She shows us a multiplicity of tea gowns made of sterner stuff than we have been accustomed to accord to negligees. Those indoor frocks are to be substituted for the serviceable cloth frock for the street and the evening frock for a gay occasion. They are intended to save clothes.

Gown for Afternoon and Evening.

Now, as a crowning effort of conservation and economy, she sends us the new afternoon gown which is worn in the evening. It is made of thin material, it has transparent sleeves, long or short, and it has a half-decolletage. It has indefinite variety, often it blazes with color, again it is subdued to black and white combined, and it can be worn for every indoor occasion from four in the afternoon until midnight.

Such a frock saves the buying of many shoes. It is a stroke of that illuminating inspiration that the French have when they put their minds to economy. There is nothing drab or mournful about French economy; they raise the sordid thing to a pedestal and make it desirable for even those who do not stare economy daily in the face.

MORE WOOL FOR ARMIES; MORE MUTTON, TOO.

The Wool of 20 Sheep Is Needed to Clothe and Equip a Soldier.

SHEEP INCREASE NEEDED BY ARMY

Wool Production Now Only 50 Per Cent of Amount Required for Peace Times.

RAISE MORE FOR SOLDIERS

Department of Agriculture Urges More Attention to Industry Especially in Eastern and Southern Portions of Country.

Pointing out the serious shortage of wool at a time when this material is of such vital importance in war operations, the department of agriculture in its agricultural program for 1918 urges that an effort be made to increase the production of sheep and wool. Increase in farm flocks is recommended wherever conditions are favorable and the first cost of stocking is not too high.

Amount of Wool Produced.

The wool produced in this country furnishes only about 50 per cent of the amount used in peace times; the war demands have emphasized the seriousness of this domestic shortage. To equip two million soldiers and clothe them for one year would require the entire quantity of wool grown annually in this country.

During recent years we have shorn about 35 million fleeces annually, and the pulled wool taken from sheep and lambs slaughtered for meat brings the total clip up to the equivalent of about 40 million fleeces. If all this wool were suitable for military use, it would supply only two million men. The production of wool in the United States has remained practically stationary from 1914 to 1917, while imports increased 48 per cent, and the estimated net supply increased only about 21 per cent.

Mutton and Wool.

That mutton and wool production in this country can be increased greatly admits of no doubt. This can be accomplished by developing sheep husbandry on farms, especially in the Eastern and Southern states. Steps should be taken in the East and South to do away with the sheep-killing dog menace by state or local action. Large results can be secured by improving methods of breeding and management on the range; by securing the restocking of improved farm lands with sheep; by the larger use of forage crops and pastures; by encouraging sheep and lamb clubs; by the elimination of parasites; by protection against losses from predatory animals; and by having lambs ready for market at from 70 to 80 pounds weight, thereby requiring a minimum of grain to finish them and making possible the maintenance of larger breeding flocks.

Clean Barns, Cleaner Milk.

Construction of the dairy barn may be less important than careful methods in handling milk when keeping down the bacterial content of the milk is considered, but the barn construction may be such as to lighten the labor necessary to keep the barn and its equipment in a clean condition.

The stable should have a hard floor which can be readily cleaned; for this reason a dirt floor is undesirable. A cement floor is easily cleaned and prevents waste of the liquid manure. It is likely to be cold, however, and therefore extra bedding is required for the cows.

The gutter back of the cows should be large enough to hold the droppings—one 16 to 18 inches wide and 7 inches deep is usually sufficient—and it should incline so as to drain readily unless the liquid is taken up by absorbents. The best types of stalls and mangers are those which present the least surface for collecting dust and dirt and the least obstruction to the circulation of air. Stalls of wood have many flat surfaces and cracks which are difficult to keep clean and are not easy to disinfect thoroughly when such disinfection is necessary in case of an epidemic. Stalls made of metal pipes are, therefore, preferable. A swing stanchion is usually preferred, as it allows the cow plenty of freedom. A low, smooth manger without sharp angles is easy to keep clean. If the cows are tied facing the center of the barn the walkway behind them should be five feet or more in width, so that the walls will not be soiled by the spattering from the gutter and the manure carrier.

How to Keep Tools.

Tools should be kept dry, for moisture causes rust, which is very injurious, especially to sharp-edged tools. In climates where the atmosphere is moist keep tools in a wall cabinet or tool chest. If the atmosphere is dry they may be hung on the wall about the work bench or arranged on shelves. It should be the aim to have a place for every tool, and then cultivate the practice of returning it to its proper place immediately upon the completion of the work in hand. A very good plan for keeping the tools in their respective places is first to draw an outline of each tool in its place upon the wall and then paint this space black or some color in contrast with the wall itself, so that when any tool is not in its place its absence will be readily apparent.

Many persons are in the habit of leaving tools where they finish using them. In the first place, a tool can not be kept in working condition if allowed to remain exposed to the weather, and in the second place the time lost in locating the tool when it is next required for use will be much greater than that which would be required to return it to the proper place.

Brighten Bank Barns.

Very few farm buildings constructed 15 or 20 years ago meet the sanitary requirements of today. Bank barns are generally dark and damp.

Light is often excluded from one or more sides, thus making the stable difficult to keep clean. Stables which have basements open on one side for the manure furnish a breeding place for flies. Barns which have many exposed beams, braces and ledges on which dust may lodge are undesirable. In these old types of buildings little or no attention was paid to proper ventilation and distribution of the light. Many of them, however, can at small expense be remodeled to meet all sanitary requirements.

Aiding Farmers by Groups.

One of the important ways in which a county agricultural agent serves the farmers in a community is by means of farm management demonstrations. In most communities there are a few farmers who are much more successful than the average of the rest of the farmers in that community, and at the same time they are working under very similar conditions, with similar soil, climate, transportation facilities, and the same markets. In conducting farm management demonstrations, groups of farmers are assisted in keeping records of their business. Each farmer is assisted in determining from these records what labor income he receives for his year's work and what each part of his farm contributed toward this income. At the same time he is given certain information regarding how some of his more successful neighbors conduct their business.

Sell the broken-mouthed ewes and any others that have not proved good producers, and get the ewe flock in good condition before breeding begins.

GROW MORE WOOL FOR OUR SOLDIERS!

There must be 20 sheep back of every soldier to clothe and equip him.

The army and navy need 300,000,000 pounds of wool for the year ending September, 1918. The total production in the United States last year was about 291,000,000 pounds.

Grow more wool.

JESUS MINISTERING TO THE MULTITUDES.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 6:32-56.

DEVOTIONAL READING—John 6:35-40.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Exodus 16:14-18; Matt. 25:31-46; Luke 4:16-21; James 1:27; Rev. 17.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus a helper at all times.

MEMORY VERSE—Be of good cheer: It is I; be not afraid.—Mark 6:50

INTERMEDIATE TOPIC—Helping the needy.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—(?)

This parable marks the high level of the year of popularity in the life of our Lord. It is such an important miracle as to be the only one recorded by all four gospel writers. The returning disciples (v. 31) are urged by the Master to come with him into a desert place and rest and also that he might comfort their hearts over the death of John the Baptist. "They had no leisure." Jesus knew the need and also the proper use of leisure, but the multitude would not grant him this but flocked to his retreat in the desert. They followed that they might listen to his gracious words, or behold some new wonder, but Jesus also saw and ministered, (v. 24). Carlyle said he saw in England "forty million people mostly fools." Not so with Jesus; he saw and was moved, not with sarcasm, but with a compassion that took the form of teaching (v. 34). It is better to teach a man how to help himself than to help the man without the teaching. We also infer that the soul of a man is of more value than his body. It is not enough, however, to say "God bless you; be warmed and fed," when a man is hungry. Sympathy must issue in action.

A Great Task.

John tells us of the conversation with Phillip. Phillip lived in Bethsaida nearby, but to feed this multitude was too great a task, even with his knowledge and resources (John 6:5, 7). Yet we need not be surprised at Phillip's slowness of faith. Moses in a similar case was once nonplussed as to how to feed the thousands in the wilderness (see Numbers 11:21-23). The central fact concerns neither the need nor our poverty, but the absolute surrender of our all—however little—to God.

Another disciple, Andrew, who had brought his brother, Simon Peter, to the Savior, in his desperation found a boy whose mother had thoughtfully provided him with a lunch consisting of five barley biscuits and two small dried herrings (John 6:9). This is a great commentary on the tide of interest at this time—that even this hungry boy should have forgotten his lunch; the circumstances emphasized the helplessness of the disciples in order that Jesus might show his power. His command "Give ye them," (v. 37) teaches us that we are to give what we have, not to look to others, nor to do our charity by proxy (Pro. 11:24, 25). Again the Savior asks his disciples to seek (v. 38) as though he would teach them the boundless resources of his kingdom. Give what you have and he will bless and increase it to meet the needs of the multitude. The secret of success points to the moment when he took the loaves and looking up (to God who also saw their needs), he blessed it.

Living Bread.

This conservation process was a stinging rebuke to the orientals, and is being emphasized in these days of food conservation in connection with war needs. Too long we have been prodigal of God's marvelous bounties. God gives us that we may use; and we lose it unless it is shared. Jesus, the living bread, (John 6:48) will satisfy hunger and give life. As bread generates in the human body heat, energy, vitality and power, so he will feed the hungry souls of men. We have at hand the Word. It is for lack of it that men die in the deepest and truest sense of that Word. The poverty and perplexity of the disciples in the presence of similar great need, is being repeated over and over again, and yet how faithless it is. We have not enough to feed the multitude. Our few loaves of comfort, amusement, counsel, etc., will not sustain them in the present world's crisis; but when we break unto them the living bread, it meets the deep hunger of the human heart; and they will have enough and to spare if they will only eat it. In these days when the emphasis is being laid on material bread for the sustenance of the nation, there is great danger lest we forget the necessity of breaking the living bread to the starving multitudes of the world. We must maintain the supremacy of the spiritual, or lack the dynamic to provide the material.

How true the words of the late Dr. Maltbie Davenport Babcock:

Back of the loaf is the snowy flour;
Back of the flour the mill:
And back of the mill is the wheat,
And the showers, and the sun,
And the Father's will.

The problem which the disciples could not meet, Jesus discerned and solved. As they co-operated with him and gave of that which he had first blessed, each had a basketfull to take away and thus was well repaid for sharing with the multitude.

Registering of the Women.

The women of St. Joe and DeKalb county will soon be called upon to register. This work is under the supervision of Mrs. Monte Green, the woman member of the county council of defense.

The official registration will start on April 19, and assisting Mrs. Green will be a chairman selected from each township and such other helpers as she may find necessary.

The registration cards to be used in Indiana are those planned by the national defense council. The responsibilities and interests of women are divided into definite heads, comprehending social and welfare workers, home economics, agricultural, industrial, medical and nursing, motor driving, general service, health, civics, signalling, map reading, wireless and telegraphy. Each and every woman should make it her duty to register as soon as the call is made.

Mrs. Nora Ramsten of Garrett, is chairman of the enrollment and woman's service committee, and she has selected the following to assist her in the work:

Mrs. Will Clark, Ashley; Mrs. Milo Thomas, Corunna; Mrs. H. K. Leas, Waterloo; Mrs. Amanda Spayd, St Joe; Mrs. J. N. Lowe, Butler; Mrs. Geo Muhn, St Johns; Mrs. E. W. A number of our citizens attended the funeral of Gray Erick at Fort Wayne, Wednesday. Friday afternoon he was badly injured in Fort Wayne by his automobile and a switch engine coliding, breaking five ribs, his arm, puncturing one lung and badly bruising his body. Gray was near the Berghoff brewery where the accident occurred and was immediately taken to the hospital where he died on Sunday morning.

Mesdames Iona Woodcox, John Engle and Ray Reasoner were Auburn visitors, Saturday; upon their return home a surprise awaited Mrs. Engle. A large crowd of friends and neighbors had gathered at the Engle home to celebrate her 34th. birthday. On last Thursday night, practically the same bunch of friends and neighbors gathered at the D. R. Kosht home and spent the evening, because of them leaving the neighborhood.

All sorts of gossip has been circulating about St. Joe and the case of Small Pox. Frank Scholes is the unlucky fellow having been sent home Thursday, a week ago, from Auburn, where he was taken sick. Dr. Sheffer is attending Mr. Scholes and he reports him having a genuine case, having been broken out thick, and having a high fever. Some precaution should have been taken at Auburn, and Mr. Scholes kept there at the Y. where he was taken sick.

W. S. S. NOTES

Every body should get ready for "The Joan of Arc Drive" for War Saving and Thrift Stamps which is to take place during the week beginning March 25. The women will have charge of this drive in everg city, town and township. The following organization has been perfected for Concord Tp., Mrs. Arline Koch, chairman for St. Joe.

Section 1-Lela Wallace, Captain
Pauline Andress
Dorothy Scholes
Olive Ridgway

Sec. 2-DeVeta Bayman, Captain

Inez Hart

Sec. 3-Agnes Sechler, Captain.

One hundred per cent efficiency is the goal, that is every member of the home saving thrift and War Saving Stamps. Every family with 100% efficiency is entitled to a 100% efficiency card to hang in their window with the food and Red Cross cards. These can be secured from the bank, postoffice and Joan of Arc canvassers. Every person entitled should secure a 100% efficiency card.

The St. Joe business men have manifested their patriotism by becoming Sales Stations. The following business men have agreed to buy stamps and keep them on hand during 1918:—Barney's grocery, Leighty's grocery, E. R. Kinsey's hardware, J. C. Hull's barber shop and The News office.

Look for the Blue for sale cards.

The business men who have agreed to become Sales Stations should buy their stamps at once at the postoffice and always keep a few on hands for sale.

The following reason why we should buy War Saving Stamps given by W. G. McAdoo should be pondered over: "The main reason for the purchase of War Saving Stamps is because your country is at war. Your country needs every penny which every man, woman and child can save and lend in order to feed, clothe, arm and equip the soldiers and sailors of America and to win the righteous war in defense of American honor and the cause of democracy throughout the world. If we are to win the war, we must win it as a united people. The savings of every man, woman and child are necessary if we are to hasten the victorius ending of the war. War Savers are Life Savers."

Aside from the matter as a patriotic duty we should remember that War Saving Stamps are a first class investment yielding as a savings account 4% interest compounded quarterly

It is the safest security in the world, non taxable and paying a good rate of interest.

The Third Liberty Loan.

The campaign for the Third Liberty Loan will be opened on the 6th. of April, the anniversary of the declaration of a state of war between the United States and Germany.

The amount, terms, and conditions of the loan are dependent upon further legislation and will be announced as soon as Congress has granted the necessary powers.

Secretary McAdoo chose the 6th of April as the day to open the campaign as the most fitting date to call for a patriotic response to the summons to duty to every American, to ask from the people at home the same fervent patriotism that actuates our gallant sons on the battlefields of France and on the waters of the Atlantic.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

A NERVOUS BREAKDOWN

Miss Kelly Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Health.

Newark, N. J.—"For about three years I suffered from nervous breakdown and got so weak I could hardly stand, and had headaches every day. I tried everything I could think of and was under a physician's care for two years. A girl friend had used Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and she told me about it. From the first day I took it I began to feel better and now I am well and able to do most any kind of work. I have been recommending the Compound ever since and give you my permission to publish this letter."—Miss FLO KELLY, 476 So. 14th St., Newark, N. J.

The reason this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, was so successful in Miss Kelly's case was because it went to the root of her trouble, restored her to a normal healthy condition and as a result her nervousness disappeared.

ANOTHER PROBLEM TO SOLVE

Little Matter of "Scientific Training" of Modern Child That Seems to Call for Consideration.

The parent who wishes to train his children according to the "scientific method" has his troubles. Witness this letter, published in the Survey:

"I write to see if any of your readers can help me out in the matter of finding some book or pamphlet that will tell me the logical and scientific order in which to teach my two little girls, aged eight and six, the indoor games of lotto, parchesi, checkers, backgammon, halma, chess and the like, such as authors and the different card games. Which should come first, checkers or parchesi? Any information will be welcome."

As the problem is not solved by the editor of the Survey, suggestions seem to be in order. Why not let the children start with bridge and chess and gradually work up to the point where they can appreciate lotto, halma and tiddledywinks?—From the Outlook.

Nothing to Be Frightened About.

Emilie had a visitor about the same age. Her father had bought her a Mother Hubbard book and she began. "Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard to get her poor dog a bone, but when she got there it was bare—empty—it won't hurt you," as she thought her playmate might be frightened at the word bare.

SURE OF ALLIES' TRIUMPH

© FAWCETT

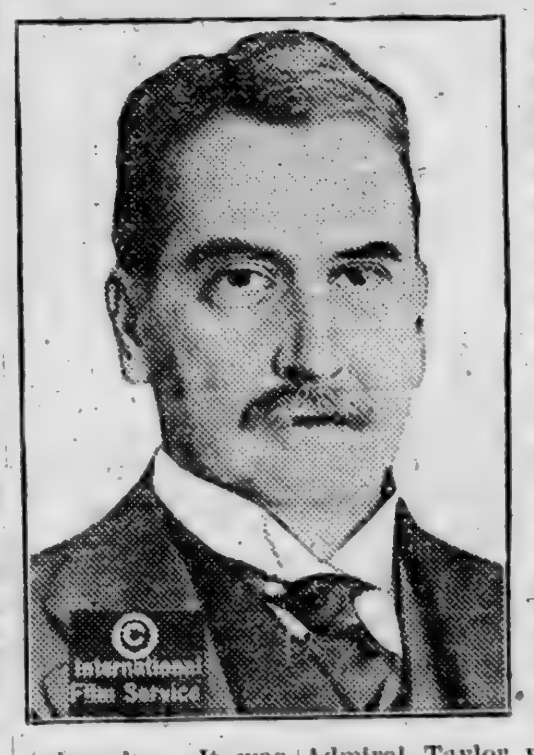
Triumph for the allies was predicted at Billy Sunday's tabernacle at Washington by Ambassador Jusserand of France. The occasion was a celebration of Washington's birthday.

Ambassador Jusserand declared the United States is under a handicap in fighting across the ocean, but, said he, "to fight so far from home is your only chance not to have to fight at home."

"There isn't any question about our fighting the war to a triumphant ending," said Senator Harding, and continued: "We have the duty to preserve the inherited government of the fathers; we have the obligation to hand on to succeeding generation the very republic which we inherited. If this generation will not sacrifice and suffer, in this crisis of the world, the republic is doomed. If this fortunate people cannot prove popular government capable of defense in a war for national rights, then it must be admitted popular government fails."

"The fight is on," Ambassador Jusserand said. "As we shall no more desist than Washington did even at his most perilous hour, the result is certain. The work must be done so that it may not have to be done again. In this we are all of us with you, whose enthusiasm, valor, resourcefulness and inexhaustible generosity bring us such cheer and comfort."

HIGH NAVAL AUTHORITY



© International Film Service

No man in the American navy today is better known or held in higher regard by the naval powers of the world than David Watson Taylor, chief of the bureau of construction and repair. Rear Admiral Taylor is probably the world's greatest expert in the construction and design of battlecraft. Admittedly he knows more about hull design than any other man and is the acknowledged master of the science of ship propulsion.

The bureau of construction and repair is charged with the responsibility for the structural strength and stability of all ships built in the navy. This means that the present great war construction program of the navy, the greatest in the history of any navy in the world, is being carried out under the personal supervision of Admiral Taylor, including the additional building of a large number of destroyers with which to fight the German submarine. It was Admiral Taylor who originated the high forecastle destroyer some twenty years ago, a feature since copied in its essential details by every foreign navy. His new type, soon to be in service, will revolutionize destroyer construction.

In 1895 he first proposed the center-line disposition of turrets, although this feature was not adopted in American battleships until ten years later. Now it is the universal practice of all navies of the world. He has had the principal share in the design of practically all vessels of the navy since 1900.

POINTS OUT WAR AIMS

That the ideal which brought victory to the American colonies in the War of the Revolution, and which stamped out slavery in the Civil war, are again at stake, not only in this country but throughout the world, was the theme of an address by Gov. Charles S. Whitman of New York at the Washington birthday banquet of the Creve Coeur club at Peoria, Ill.

"This is not a war on the German people," he said, "nor is Germany merely making war on the people of other lands. This is a combat between ideals of government. Belgium, broken, but unconquered; England, struggling as she has never struggled before; the sons of France, singing as they bleed and smiling as they die, are just as truly fighting for an ideal as were the ragged Continentals at Saratoga or at Yorktown, or the men whose bloody feet left their impress in the snow at Valley Forge. I know that there was a Germany in the past that her sons and daughters have had every reason to love—a Germany of poetry and song, of literature, art, science and of education, of folk song and folk lore and folk love—but that Germany is no more. It has given place to a Germany of the iron heel and the clanking saber, to a mighty nation dedicated to the proposition that 'might makes right'—that there is no such thing as freedom of thought, freedom of heart or freedom of life; that its power to slaughter is the final test of a nation's greatness; that slavery is the natural and proper condition of the human race."

HAS IMPORTANT POST

Experts on labor questions from all parts of the country, business men, labor leaders, and economists, have been drawn upon by the department of labor to head the new divisions created by the reorganization of the department for effective war service.

Otto Eidlitz, architect and builder, of New York, heads the sections on housing and transportation of workers. It will administer the adjustment service, the conditions of labor service, the section on information and education, the section dealing with women in industry, the training and dilution service, and the employment division.

Conferences between the joint board of representatives of capital and labor, which was appointed several days ago, began at the department in an effort to outline a basis to govern relations between employers and workers during the war. The conferences and the administration of their decisions by the reorganized department will be, in effect, the first attempt to carry out a national and definite labor policy in this country. The department plans a countrywide system of adjustment boards, to safeguard the nation from industrial disputes. A zone system is proposed, under which the country would be divided into 13 districts, in each of which would be constituted an arbitration board, acceptable to employers and workers alike. Subordinate to the board would be adjustment representatives in each locality. In addition, federal mediators would be sent out from Washington if necessary to compose any differences.

DADDY'S EVENING FAIRY TALE

BY MARY GRAHAM BONNER

THE AOUDAD.

"Mr. Aoudad," said Daddy, "is a vain creature and I must tell you the story of him and of his conceit."

"Evidently he is an animal," said Dick.

"Yes," said Nancy. "Daddy tells us of animals we've never heard of before. Often we're not sure they're animals. They may be birds or fish, for all we know."

"Maybe Mr. Aoudad is not an animal," said Dick. "He somehow sounded like one, but perhaps he's a bird."

Daddy wouldn't give them any hint for quite a little time. He liked to hear them try to guess.

"Mr. Aoudad," he began, "is one of the Barbary wild sheep family, and a distant relation of our mountain sheep and goats.

"His home is in the north of Africa where he lives in the hottest, dryest part of the country he can find."

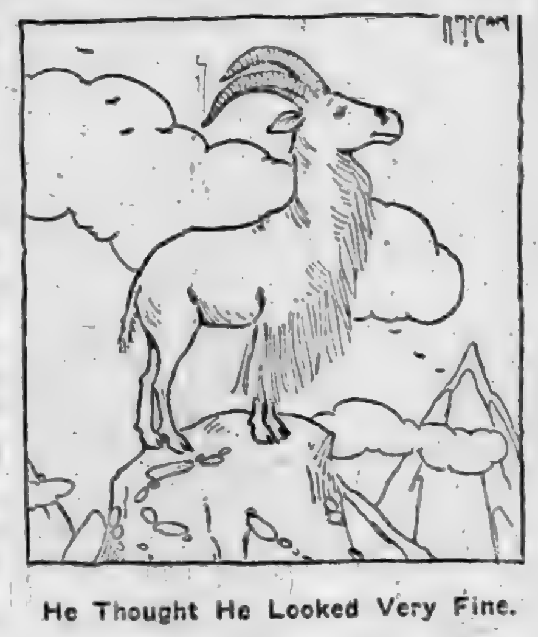
"I suppose," said Nancy, "they can't put him in the zoos—or any of his family—here in America. We don't have hot, dry weather all the time. We have all sorts of weather."

"Strange to say," said Daddy, "he thrives in any zoo. He stands different climates far better than our own Rocky Mountain sheep and goats do. He doesn't seem to mind any kind of weather, though in his native land he chooses the hot and dry mountains."

"That's probably the kind he likes best of all," said Dick.

"Probably," said Nancy. "But I think he must be quite a fine animal not to be a weather grumbler."

"That's his very best point," said Daddy. "But as I began to tell you he is very vain. Once he was standing on top of a high rock over in the mountains of his home.



He Thought He Looked Very Fine.

"He posed and stood first this way, and then that. He held his head high, then he dropped it a little. He looked as though ready for a great battle and attack, and then looked gentle and pleasant, with a different change of pose each time.

"He thought he looked very fine on the high rocky peak and the thought that he was so handsome made him very happy. Pretty soon several creatures came along—they were cousins of his but not nearly so handsome. Still they were rather vain, too, and liked to think they were fine looking.

"'How do you do?' they said. 'What in the world are you doing?'

"'Posing for my picture,' said Mr. Aoudad.

"'Who is going to take it?' asked his cousins.

"'I didn't say anyone was going to take my picture,' answered Mr. Aoudad. 'I said I was posing for it. That means I am getting in fine positions so that should I ever want to have my picture taken I would know just how to stand so I would look my best.

"'I would never have a photographer say to me, "Now, hold your head a little to one side, please. And smile—just a trifle." No, I would know how to stand and look.'

"'Of course that must be a fine thing to know,' said the cousins. 'We do believe we'll go home to our rocky peaks and try the same thing. It would be so useful to know how to stand for our photographs.'

"'I'm not so sure that it would be useful,' said Mr. Aoudad, 'but it's very nice practicing at any rate. And I've heard of another animal who does just the same thing.'

"'Who?' asked the cousins.

"'The peacock, they say, is as vain as we are. Yes, I've heard that nothing pleases the peacock more than to admire himself. And I think I'd rather like to meet him. I'd say, "You've got a great deal of good sense, old chap. There is nothing in the world like appreciating ourselves."'

"'What is the peacock proud of?' asked the aoudad cousins.

"'He has a marvelous tail of many colors and beautiful feathers,' said Mr. Aoudad. 'But we have big curved horns and shaggy hair. And not only are we fine looking but we are wild and strong. We don't look where we're going, because we go just where we want to, and bump into anything that gets in our way.' And that," ended Daddy, "is perfectly true."

What Papa Meant.

"Mamma," asked a little three-year-old miss, "is papa's picture torn?"

"Not that I know of, dear. Why do you ask?" replied her mother.

"Because," answered the little one, "this morning he said, 'Darn my picture.'"

To The American People

There is no foundation for the alleged violations of law attributed to our Company by agents of the Federal Trade Commission and I want to say emphatically that Swift & Company is not a party to any conspiracy to defraud the Government. Nor has Swift & Company been guilty of improperly storing foods or of making false entries or reports.

Conferences of packers, where prices have been discussed, have been held at the urgent request and in the presence of representatives of either the Food Administration or the Council of National Defense. And yet the packers have been accused of committing a felony by acting in collusion on Government bids!

We have done our best, with other packers, large and small, to comply with the directions of the United States Food Administration in all particulars, including the furnishing of food supplies for the U. S. Army and Navy and the Allies, now being handled through the Food Administration.

We will continue to do our utmost, under Government direction, to increase our production and assist the Food Administration. We consider that the opportunity to co-operate whole-heartedly and to our fullest powers with this branch of the Government is our plain and most pressing duty.

The Trade Commission Attorney has, by false inference and misplaced emphasis, given to disconnected portions of the correspondence taken from our private files and read into the Record, a false and sinister meaning with the plain purpose of creating antagonistic public opinion.

The services of the packers of the United States are most urgently needed, and I regret exceedingly that we should at this time have to spend our efforts in defending ourselves against unfounded, unproved, and unfair assertions such as are being daily made public.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

Our boys are going "Over the top" and into "No man's land" this spring. No one has any doubt of their ability to get there. There will also be a spring drive on this side of the ocean, because March is the year's "blue Monday." It is the most fatal month of the year. March and April is a time when resistance usually is at lowest ebb. It is a trying season for the "run-down" man. But medical science steps in, and says, "it need not be"! We should cultivate a love of health, a sense of responsibility for the care of our bodies. Do not allow the machinery of the body to clog. Put the stomach and liver in proper condition. Take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, to be had at most drug stores in tablet or liquid form, tablets sixty-cents a vial, composed of native herbs. This puts the stomach and liver in proper condition. U. S. DEP'T. OF AGRICULTURE

HOW TO GROW

GARDEN PEAS.

Early peas require a rather rich sandy loam with good drainage in order that the first plantings may be made early in the spring. Fertilizers that are high in nitrogenous matter should not be applied to the land immediately before planting, as they will have a tendency to produce too great growth of vines at the expense of pods. Land that has been manured the previous year will be found satisfactory without additional fertilizer. While the sandy loam is to be preferred for early varieties, a good crop can be produced on almost any good soil.

The first plantings should be of such varieties as Alaska, or some of its modifications, which make a small but quick growth and may or may not be provided with supports. These should be planted about two weeks before the date of the last killing frost, or in fact may be planted as soon as the ground is in condition. The tall-growing sorts of the Telephone type are desirable for still later use, on account of their large production and excellent quality.

Peas should be drilled in rows, one to two pints being sufficient for a 100-foot row. The individual peas should be placed about 1 inch apart in the rows. The distance between rows will depend upon the kind of cultivation to be employed, and upon the varieties used. The dwarf varieties need not be any farther apart than necessary to insure cultivation, while the tall-growing sorts should not be planted closer than 3 to 3½ feet apart.

A good scheme is to plant two parallel rows of peas about 6 or 8 inches apart, then leave a space of 18 inches or two feet and plant two more rows of seed close together. Fewer strings or less brush will be required to support them than when planted in single rows at the greater distance.

If peas are to be grown for immediate use only, a quart will be enough to plant at one time. However, if it is desired to grow peas for canning, large plantings should be made. If space is available, it is an excellent plan to make considerable planting at one time of some one variety, so that the peas for canning will be available in considerable quantities. This enables the housewife to get the canning out of the way in a comparatively short time. Successive plantings of the various varieties of peas should be made at intervals of about two weeks, until the weather begins to grow warm, when the plantings should be discontinued. It is possible in some sections to grow a fall crop of peas. When this is done, early varieties should be used.

ONIONS.

Onions can be produced on almost any good garden soil, and constitute one of the standard crops found in almost every garden. The usual plan in the home garden is to plant sets in rows far enough apart to suit the method of cultivation to be followed. The sets need not be more than 2 or 3 inches apart in the rows.

Onion sets may be planted as soon as the ground can be worked and before frosts are over. Some kinds may be planted in the autumn. The potato or multiplier onion can be planted from sets in the autumn and will produce excellent early green onions.

Onions may be grown from seed either by starting the seed in the hotbed and transplanting to the open ground or by drilling in rows directly in the garden. With good soil and proper care it is possible to produce good-sized bulbs from seed in a single season.

Onions require frequent shallow cultivation, and it may be necessary to resort to hand work in order to keep the crop free from weeds.

If it is desired to use the onions as green or bunch onions they may be pulled at any time after they are large enough, otherwise they should be allowed to grow until they reach maturity. If the onions start to throw up seed stalks these should be removed, or the seed will be formed at the expense of the bulbs

MUSKMELONS.

A sandy loam with plenty of well-rotted manure incorporated in the soil is well adapted to the production of muskmelons. The muskmelon is a heat-loving crop, requiring a long growing season, about four months, and cannot be planted until the ground has become warm. For this reason it is useless to attempt to grow the muskmelon in sections where the growing season is not sufficiently long or where the temperature is not uniformly high. The northern portion of the United States is not suited to the growing of this crop for the reasons cited above.

It is advisable to start the plants in berry-boxes, or on sods in the hotbed, transferring these to the open ground after the ground has become warm. In this way considerable time can be saved and much better results obtained. It is a good plan to place plenty of well-rotted manure in the hills, which should be about 6 feet apart. Sufficient seed should be planted so that four good strong plants may be had in each hill. Another plan is to sow in drills in rows 6 or 7 feet apart, thinning the plants until they are from 18 inches to 2 feet apart in the rows.

Cultivation should be frequent and thorough until the vines begin to run. After this the only cultivation required is to keep weeds down.

Muskmelons are liable to be attacked by several diseases and have at least one serious insect enemy. For information on the control of insects and diseases affecting the muskmelon, refer to Farmers' Bulletin 856, entitled "Control of Diseases and Insect Enemies of the Home Vegetable Garden."

SPINACH.

Spinach thrives in a rather cool climate and attains its best development in the middle South, where it can be grown in the open ground during the winter. Farther north it is necessary to protect the plants during the winter with a mulch of straw or leaves. To produce good spinach a rich loam which will give the plants a quick growth is required. Fall planting is to be recommended wherever this is possible, as the fall-planted spinach is not as much inclined to go to seed as that planted in the spring. One ounce of seed is sufficient for a 100-foot row, and this crop may be sown in drills about 1 foot apart.

Spinach is an easily grown garden crop, and there is perhaps no other of its kind that will give as good satisfaction. In gathering spinach the entire plant is removed rather than merely cutting off the leaves. The larger plants are selected first, and the smaller ones are thus given a chance to develop.

CAULIFLOWER.

The cauliflower requires a rich, moist soil, and thrives best under irrigation. It will not withstand as much frost as cabbage, but is very sensitive to hot weather. To make a success of the crop it is best to plant it about the time of the last killing frost in spring, using plants grown in the hotbed or window box. This gives it time to mature before hot weather comes. The rows need not be more than 2½ to 3 feet apart for horse cultivation, or 24 to 30 inches apart for hand work. The plants should be from 14 to 18 inches apart in rows. The culture is the same as for cabbage until the heads begin to develop, after which the leaves may be tied together over the heads to exclude the light and keep heads white.

This crop is one of the aristocrats of the garden. If you succeed in growing high-grade cauliflower you will qualify as a good gardener.

WATERMELONS.

The watermelon requires considerable room, and unless there is an abundance of space available it should not be planted in the garden.

It is a heat-loving plant and the seeds should not be planted in the open until the ground is warm. This will be about one month after the last hard frost. They do best in a sandy soil, and require plenty of well-rotted manure for their best development. The usual method is to plant them in hills made up with plenty of well-rotted manure, about 10 feet apart each way. Some eight or ten seeds should be placed in each hill, and when the plants are well established they should be thinned to four plants in a hill. For full directions as to the control of insects and diseases affecting the watermelon, see Farmers' Bulletin 856, entitled "Control of Disease and Insect Enemies of the Home Vegetable Garden."

KALE.

Kale is closely related to and possesses many of the characteristics of cabbage. It is very hardy and may be planted in the autumn in the entire southern portion of the United States. It will thrive on any good soil and responds readily to liberal applications of stable manure.

Kale may be sown in drills or in some cases may be sown broadcast. When sown in drills a quarter ounce of seed is sufficient for a 100-foot row. Kale may be sown as soon as the ground is in condition to work. Successive plantings may be made at intervals through the summer, but pickings can be made from the first planting during the entire season. When planted in drills the plants may be thinned as soon as large enough, using the ones removed for greens.

Distribute Hand Labor.

It is, of course, possible to do the work just as well by hand, but a considerable amount of labor is involved. For small areas, however, this method is the only practical one. When the garden is to be worked by hand it is especially desirable that the spading be done as early as possible, as the sooner it is done the easier it will be to get the ground in condition. The ground should be worked down only as needed, as this will distribute the labor; and as the rough ground will dry off quicker than that smoothed down, it is possible to get on the ground sooner if left in the rough than when well worked down. It is extremely desirable to get such crops as early peas, early potatoes, and early cabbage plants in as soon as the ground is dry enough, and it is often possible to get these crops planted a week or two earlier by following this plan.

Ashes Made Useful.

Well-sifted coal ashes, unlike wood ashes, have no fertilizing value, but are useful in lightening soil. Lime will lighten soil and at the same time correct acidity.

Plan Your Garden Early.

Diagram your ground, allot the space to the vegetables you want to grow, buy your seeds, have your tools at hand, prepare for the opening of the growing season.

VOL. XXXII | ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, MARCH 21 1918 | NO.

Obituary

Daisy Keller, daughter of Fredrick and Alice Keller, was borm in DeKalb county, Indiana, December 29, 1880. She was married to Edward Schrader February 1, 1902. To them were born three children, Beulah, Ruth and Lloyd, who together with the broken-hearted husband, her father and mother, four brothers, four sisters and other relatives survive her. Her entire life had been spent near here, and she was respected and beloyed by all who knew her. She had been afflicted for several months but only the last few weeks was it known that her condition was so serious.

A brave fight was put up against the dread malady that had seized her body and no effort was spared by her husband for her relief but death came stealing in and the home was left desolate. Not only in the home where it is felt so keenly will she be missed, but the community at large has sustained a great lose in her death. She was a good neighbor as well as good wife and mother. She peacefully fell asleep at her home, 1 mile north of Concord, on Sunday morning, March 24, 1918, at the age of 37 years, 2 months, 29 days.

Funeral was held from the Concord M. P. Church, Wednesday morning at 10:00 o'clock, Rev. J. C. Coons, officiating. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director. Interment in Riverside cemetery.

Given Fine of $5.00.

The suit in which the Lutheran church at Spencerville, charges Raymond Bowser with removing a shade tree unlawfully on October 6, 1917, when the defendant moved his barn from the down town district to his lot near his home, occupied the attention of the court last Monday, and the jury after two hours deliberation, resulted in a verdict for the state, a fine of $5 being assessed. The only witnesses put on the stand by Prosecutor Oak Husselman and his assistant, James R Nyce, were the Rev. A K. Mumma, pastor of the Evangelical Lutheran church at Spencerville, and Jerry Markle.

Attorneys C. M. Brown, of Auburn, and E. V. Harris of Fort Wayne, fort he defense, put Bowser, Jack Beams and Frank Hart on the stand. Bowser did not deny that he cut down the tree, or that he had been warned by the Rev. Mumma to not do so. In their arguments to the jury the attorneys for the state declared it was a clear violation of the law to cut the tree and asked that Mr. Bowser be punished.

Has Lost Her Soul.

In conclusion I want to call your attention again to my text, and show you how Germany has lost her soul by violating the Ten Commandments. "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." She has a German god eagraven on souvenirs presented to her soldiers. "Thou shalt not kill." She has been instrumental in killing millions of innocent non-combatants, women and children. "Thou shalt not commit adultery." The rape of Belgium, France and Armenia is the blackest cloud today hanging over Germany. "Thou shalt not steal." She has taken everything she could get her hands on, even the dead bones of her victims. "Thou shalt not bear false witness." She has broken treaties held most sacred by nations. "Thou shalt not covet" She has spent 50 years getting all ready to possess, rule or ruin this world. God have mercy on Germany's soul.—Billy Sunday.

Over the Top

By an American Soldier Who Went
ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

When the Lusitania was sunk Arthur Guy Empey decided that he could not wait for his country to declare war—so he sailed without orders for England, and enlisted as a Canadian.

He recounts this incident in "OVER THE TOP" in less than five hundred words. In a few thousand more words he completes his experiences in England—and after that he is in France—for the greater part of the eighteen months before he was invalided home, in the "Front Line Trenches."

"OVER THE TOP" is the first story by one of the American soldiers who went to France, has been a real combatant and has seen long service in the trenches.

Sergeant Empey tells what it actually means and feels like:

to be wounded seven times;
to live for a year and a half with mud and rats and shells;
to be covered with "cooties" and never to get rid of them;
to go "over the top" in a charge;
to grasp for your gas helmet when a second's delay mean's death;
to capture a Prussian;
to get tangled up in barb-wire with that machine gun working a few yards away;
to lie for thirty-six hours wounded and unconscious in "No Man's Land."

The Greatest War Story Ever Written

For a year and a half, until he fell wounded in "No Man's Land" this American soldier saw more actual fighting and real warfare than any war correspondent who has written about the war. His experiences are grim, but they are thrilling, and lightened by a touch of humor as original as the Soldiers Three. And they are True.

We take pleasure in announcing that we have secured serial rights to this remarkable story and that it will appear in installments

M. P. Church Re-Dedicated.

The re-opening of the St. Joe Methodist Protestant church was held last Sunday, with three sessions. This is the second service of this kind since the church was built in 1885 and Mr. Sol Bar helds the distinction of being the only person present who attended the 1885 opening. The day dawned bright and a fine attendance at Sunday School after a vacation of several months.

Rev. Lyman E. Davis, D. D, of Pittsburg, and Rev. W. W. Lineberry, D. D., president of the Indiana Conference, were secured for the addresses, the latter handling the raising of the funds.

An expense of nearly $1,000 was put upon the church in way of repairing the roof, redecorating the interior of the house, building in a choir loft and Sunday School rooms in the east end of the church and other miscellaneous improving. Half of this indebtedness had been provided for and Dr. Lineberry was successful in raising $556 05.

The afternoon session was well attended and Dr. Davis, Rev. A. K. Mumma, Rev. C. C. Farmer and Dr. Lineberry were the speakers The balance of the money was raised in the evening and the dedication was taken charge of by Dr. Lineberry. The writer will not use much space this week as the report from the church paper will be printed in THE NEWS next week.

C. A Woodcox and Saxe Hadsell assisted the choir in the music.

The work of the repairing was entirely in the band of the Ladies Aid and much hard work and worry was done because of the slow process of the repairs.

The decorating was done by G. A. Kinsey, and the carpenter work by A. Copp, both of St. Joe.

Dawn of Easter

EASTER SUNDAY NEW YEAR'S DAY

Originally Marked the Beginning of the Twelve Months—Spring Festivals in Vogue Long Before the Time of Christianity.

By REV. ARTHUR HOLT.

EASTER Sunday was formerly equivalent to New Year's day; though not the first day of the year it was the day on which the opening of the year was celebrated. Historically the Christian Easter is simply a continuation of the Jewish Passover, which was celebrated on the 14th day of the first month of the Jewish year—that is, on the day of the first full moon next following the day of the equinox. It has been questioned whether any special observance of this day was practiced or enjoined by the apostles and the early Church Fathers; yet the words of St. Paul (I Cor. 5:7-8) seem to sanction if they do not recommend an observance of some sort and foreshadow the thought which came finally to underlie it: "For even Christ our passover is sacrificed for us. Therefore let us keep the feast, not with old leaven, neither with the leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth." According to the Jewish tradition, the Passover commemorated the passing of the Angel of Death over the houses of the Israelites in Egypt, the doorposts and lintels of which had been sprinkled with the blood of the paschal lamb. The Christians, in adopting the festival, gave it a new significance. For them the Savior became the true Paschal Lamb, and the new festival commemorated His resurrection on the third day following the Crucifixion.

The proper day for celebrating Easter was one of the questions which the Council of Nice (A. D. 325) was called upon to decide. By the Eastern Christians it was at that time celebrated on the same day as the Jewish Passover, without regard to the day of the week on which it might fall. Among the Western Christians, who held that the crucifixion occurred on a Friday and the resurrection on a Sunday, there had arisen a custom of celebrating Easter on the first Sunday following the 14th of the first month, and to this custom was given the official sanction of the council. Furthermore, the rule then established for fixing upon the proper Sunday was designed partly to prevent the possibility of Easter ever falling on the same day as the Passover, but the rule has failed on several occasions to prevent this coincidence, and at rare intervals the two festivals came together.

Changes in Calendar.

The old Roman year, like the Jewish year, began in March, when the sun entered the constellation Aries. When the calendar was reformed under Julius Caesar, the year was made to begin on the first day of January. After the adoption of Christianity in Europe, the date of the beginning of the year was changed to March in most countries, so that Easter became recognized as a New Year's day. The reform of the calendar by Pope Gregory, in 1582, again changed the day on which the year began, although in England it continued to begin on the 25th of March until the adoption of the "new style" there in 1752.

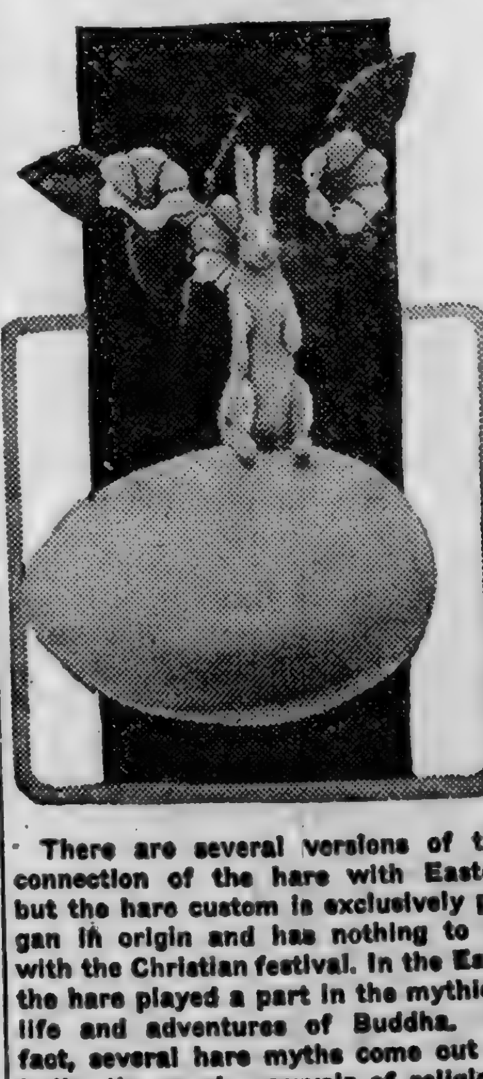
Christianity found Spring festivals already in vogue in heathen Europe, and to these oldtime festivals many of the customs and superstitious rites still connected with Easter are clearly traceable. The name Easter, given to the day by the Teutonic nations—the Roman nations have retained the old Hebrew name, pascha, under modified forms, as the Jour de Paques, of the French—is derived by Bede from Eoster or Ostara, the name of an old Anglo-Saxon goddess, in whose honor a Spring festival was celebrated. Grimm was unable to find any mention of a deity of this name among the ancient Germans, but from the fact that the month of April still bears the name ostermonat (in Old High German ostarmanoth), he did not doubt that such a goddess, probably "the divinity of the radiant dawn," had been known among them. The old Oster festival was clearly of a solar character, a celebration in honor of the birth or the rejuvenation of the sun of the new year. This is made evident, aside from the known character of similar festivals in other parts of the world, by many of the observances which it bequeathed to Easter. Thus it was formerly a custom all through the north of Germany, on the night of Easter Sunday or the third night following, to kindle bonfires on all the heights, affording a magnificent spectacle, when these fires were to be seen here and there over miles of country. This custom had become simply a mode of merrymaking, but it is held with plausibility that originally the bonfire was symbolical of the new fire that was to warm the earth and quicken it into renewed life after the cold embrace of winter.

Ancient Popular Belief.

Another indication of the ancient solar character of this festival is an old popular belief, said to survive still in Brandenburg and Saxony, that the sun at the moment of rising on the morning of Easter gives three joyous leaps, that he dances with youthful joy. This curious belief was not confined to Germany. In the middle districts of Ireland, according to Brand, it was customary, after spending Easter eve in merrymaking and carousing—watching the pot boil, the contents of which were to break the long Lenten fast, yet must not be touched before the crowing of the cock—for the whole company of revelers to go out just at daybreak to see the rising sun take his three Easter leaps. Sir Thomas Browne, writing of popular errors, mentions thus quaintly the existence of this belief in England: "We shall not, I hope, disparage the resurrection of our Redeemer, if we say that the sun doth not dance on Easter day; and though I would willingly assent unto any sympathetic exultation, yet we cannot conceive therein more than a tropical (figurative) expression." Perhaps there is no more striking illustration than this of the power of an inherited belief to live on in spite of the testimony of all experience against it. In some places, apparently as an alternative for giving up the belief wholly, it was held that in order to witness these three leaps one must look, not at the sun itself, but at the reflection of it in a pool of clear water. As a last resort, to save the belief, the sun might be made to dance. Brand could recall that when he was a boy he had seen "a vessel full of water set in the open air, in which the reflected sun seemed to dance, from the tremulous motion of the water." If the mountain will not come to Mahomet, then Mahomet must go to the mountain.

Among the customs handed down through long ages and accepted by the Church were those of Easter eggs and the Easter tale which the preacher told from the pulpit, in lieu of a sermon, connecting it with Christian reminiscences. Later still there were in Germany dramatic shows, named Osterspiele, executed by twelve performers, one of whom, apparently, was the leader, and represented Summer beating Winter out of the land. The dances and sports prevalent at this season in Germany among the youths and maidens appear sometimes to have been marked with something of the looseness characteristic of the floral games in Italy.

The Easter Hare



There are several versions of the connection of the hare with Easter, but the hare custom is exclusively pagan in origin and has nothing to do with the Christian festival. In the East, the hare played a part in the mythical life and adventures of Buddha. In fact, several hare myths come out of India, the great reservoir of religious symbolism.

SHOE PRICES CUT IN TWO COUNTRIES

ENGLAND AND ITALY BENEFIT BY STANDARDIZATION AND CONTROL OF PROFITS.

GOODS ARE ALL OF LEATHER

Agricultural Department Estimates Show Range of War Emergency Work—Vast Amount of Food Sent by America to Allies.

(From the Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—There has already been a drop in the prices charged by retailers for footwear in England in view of the government's action in placing on the market standardized shoes made at controlled rates of profit, according to a report to the United States department of commerce.

At a recent exhibition of "wartime" boots 39 samples were shown, ranging from heavy boots for carters and laborers to shoes for ordinary street use, and children's shoes. Prices range from $2.06 to $6.38 a pair. The shoes are made entirely of leather and the retailer's price is stamped on the sole.

Italian shoe factories are manufacturing standardized shoes, using leather furnished by the government, which controls the system of sales to the public.

In England the manufacture of standard cloth for men's suits has made rapid progress, 24 patterns being included in the first goods shown. As now planned, provision is made for 750,000 to 1,000,000 suits ready for delivery from June to August. The project may later include production of certain classes of cloth for woman's wear.

Of the total of nearly $20,000,000 asked for war emergency activities by the department of agriculture it is proposed to use $8,000,000 for the purchase and sale of seed to farmers for cash at cost; $6,100,000 for the development of the co-operative agricultural extension work in co-operation with the state agricultural colleges; $1,269,655 for combating animal diseases, stimulating the production of live stock, and encouraging the conservation and utilization of meat, poultry, dairy and other animal products; $911,300 for the prevention, control, and eradication of insects and plant diseases, and the conservation and utilization of plant products; $2,368,958 for extending and enlarging the market news service of the bureau of markets, preventing waste of food in storage, in transit or held for sale, giving advice concerning the market movement or distribution of perishable products, making inspections and certifications regarding the condition of perishable agricultural products, and gathering information in connection with the demand for and the production, supply, distribution and utilization of food; and $1,080,980 for dealing with the farm-labor problem, enlarging the informational work of the department, printing and distributing emergency leaflets, posters and other publications, and extending the work of the bureau of chemistry, the bureau of entomology, and the bureau of biological survey.

Statistics compiled by the food administration show that the grand total of all food experted to the four allies—the United Kingdom, France, Italy and Russia—from July 1, 1914, to January 1, 1918, would furnish complete yearly rations for 57,100,933 adult persons, with a surplus of protein capable of supplying this portion of the diet for 22,194,570 additional men.

Since the beginning of the war the United States has averaged to supply the allies with food enough each year to support 16,314,552 persons, and with an excess of both protein and fats sufficient for several millions more.

The total exports of wheat and wheat flour to the three principal allies, Russia getting but a very small per cent of the whole, were equivalent to about 384,000,000 bushels, or an average of about 110,000,000 bushels a year. Of this total amount the United Kingdom got 145,348,000 bushels of wheat and 8,512,000 barrels of wheat flour; France got 79,798,000 bushels of wheat and 5,462,000 barrels of wheat flour; Italy 87,136,000 bushels of wheat and 1,895,000 barrels of wheat flour. Russia received only 130,000 bushels of wheat and 25,000 barrels of wheat flour.

The toal exports of pork products were nearly 2,000,000,000 pounds, a yearly average of about 570,000,000 pounds. The total sugar exports were over 2,269,000,000 pounds, a yearly average of about 648,000,000. Of corn there was exported 23,332,000 bushels; oats, 207,981,000; rye, 3,407,000.

Reports based on figures from the department of agricultural show that January 1, 1918, the number of meat animals in the United States was greater by more than 6,000,000 head than it was January 1, 1917. The number of inspections for slaughter indicate a decrease in consumption.

The summary shows the total number of cattle in the United States January 1, 1918, was 66,830,000, an increase of 1,247,000 head over the same day the year before. Hogs increased 3,781,000 head, or 5.7 per cent. The increase in sheep was 1,284,000 head.

Of the 3,082,949 persons called under the selective service act, 252,291 or 8.18 per cent, mailed to appear for examination, according to a statement issued by the provost marshal general. This number, however, included men who had previously enlisted or been commissioned and had failed to notify their boards, some who had died, and many who were transferred to other boards but by mistake had been carried on the books of their local boards—estimated at 100,000.

Many of the remaining 150,000 were aliens, a number of whom left the country to enlist in their own armies.

The statement estimates the number of real "slackers" at not more than 50,000, or an average of less than ten for each local board.

Translations of editorial comment in the German press, made public by the committee on public information, include the following from the Berliner Tageblatt:

"The terms of the ultimatum to Russia will please even the most unrelenting advocates of violence. It would be interesting to hear Hertling, who accepted Wilson's second principle that people are not to be bartered about from sovereign to sovereign, explain just what differences exist between the political methods of the past and those of today. It may be conceded that today the German reichstag is informed of coming changes, but not until the matter has been settled without it. We all hope this policy will bring peace and prosperity, but we cannot conceal our anxiety at the birth of these new states."

Soldiers, sailors, or their beneficiaries under the soldiers' and sailors' insurance law need not employ attorneys or claim agents to collect the insurance, according to the treasury department. Circulars have lately been sent out by claim agents and attorneys offering to assist persons entitled to the benefits of this insurance in collecting their claims.

The procedure for the presentation and collection of insurance claims is simple. Blanks may be secured from the bureau of war-risk insurance at Washington. The name of the person in service who was killed or injured, and the relationship which he bore to the person making the claim, should be given.

Germany's war leaders are using the submarine to prevent fulfillment of America's agreements to feed and relieve European neutrals, according to a statement by the war trade board. It says:

"A mass of cumulative evidence and indications in the possession of the war trade board shows that Germany is employing the submarine menace to prevent neighbor neutrals receiving any food or favors at the hands of the United States and its associates in the war, and to coerce these neutrals through starvation and political and economic dependence upon Germany, quite as much as to strike at the communications of its opponents—Germany's ostensible aim in proclaiming the ruthless submarine campaign.

"Further indications tend to show that the submarines are being used along similar dog-in-the-manger lines, to destroy neutral shipping without regard to its employment."

Persons who send mail to members of the expeditionary forces are particularly requested, in a statement issued by the post office department, to use ink only in writing the addresses. Every piece of mail matter should also bear the name and address of the sender.

Heavy paper, canvas, or cloth should be used for wrapping packages. When canvas or cloth is used the address should be written on a shipping tag, with the name and address of the sender on the reverse side.

Given names should be written in full, instead of initials. The title of the addressee and the full name of the unit or organization to which he is assigned should be added, it being sufficient in the way of further address to use the words "American Expeditionary Forces."

Over $41,000 in 5-cent Smileage coupons has come in from the big camps to headquarters at the commission on training camp activities in Washington. These coupons represent admissions to theatrical events at the camps. Soldiers from the smaller towns received their books early, because of the prompt response of these places when Smileage books were placed on sale, and in many cases have used them up.

An investigation for the purpose of improving methods for prevention and control of communicable diseases, especially near army camps, is being made by the United States public health service. The work will relate largely to the standardization and preparation of serums.

The first serum to be studied will be that used in cerebro-spinal meningitis, which has lately been prevalent in camps.

Although bakers who use less than three barrels of flour and meal a month are not required to secure food administration licenses, a recent rule gives them the right to come under license.

The new submarine fighters which are being built at the Ford plant will be known as "Eagles" and will constitute the Eagle class of boats.

The sale of British and Irish wool to persons other than those authorized by the government has been forbidden.

Heavy Editorial.

Alexander H. Stephens, vice president of the Southern Confederacy, who after the Civil war was repeatedly elected to congress from Georgia, was an exceedingly thin man. One day there fell under his obsevation a newspaper item saying that he weighed 90 pounds. In reply to this he wrote a letter to the editor of the offending journal demanding an immediate retraction. "I will not be slandered in this matter," he protested, "my weight is 94 pounds." The former vice president was himself an editor, with a habit of writing very long articles for his paper in Georgia, and the contemporary which had made the unwelcome statement regarding his weight refused to retract it for the reason, he said, that "Mr. Stephens must have had one of his editorials in his pocket when he last tried the scales. This would account for the difference of four pounds between the two figures."

Strength Gave Out
Mrs. Schmitt Was Miserable From Kidney Trouble Until Doan's Came to Her Assistance. Now Well.

"My kidneys gave out during the change of life," says Mrs. Margaretha Schmitt, 63 Alabama Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y. "My back ached and pained as if it were broken. When I moved in bed, sharp, darting pains caught me across my back and I couldn't turn. Mornings I was stiff and sore and it felt as if heavy weights were tied to me, I was so worn-out. I often came near falling from dizziness and flashes of fire would come before my eyes, blinding me.

Mrs. Schmitt

"I had the most severe headaches and my kidneys didn't act regularly. The secretions passed too often and caused much distress. I was hardly able to do my housework and just to walk upstairs took all my strength.

"As soon as I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills, I improved and six boxes put me in better health than I had enjoyed for years."

Mrs. Schmitt gave the foregoing statement in 1916 and on April 6, 1917, she said: "My cure has been permanent. I keep Doan's on hand, however, and take a few doses occasionally."

"OVER THE TOP"

by

AN AMERICAN SOLDIER WHO WENT ☆ ☆

ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

MACHINE GUNNER, SERVING IN FRANCE

©1917 BY ARTHUR GUY EMPEY

FOREWORD

"Over the Top" is a true story of trench warfare on the French front, written by an American soldier who got into the great war two years ahead of his country. Sergeant Empey tells what the fighting men have done and how they have done it. He knows because he was one of them. His experiences are grim, but they are thrilling, and they are lightened by a delightful touch of humor.

CHAPTER I.

—1—

From Mufti to Khaki.

It was in an office in Jersey City. I was sitting at my desk talking to a lieutenant of the Jersey National Guard. On the wall was a big war map decorated with variously colored little flags showing the position of the opposing armies on the western front in France. In front of me on the desk lay a New York paper with big flaring headlines:

LUSITANIA SUNK! AMERICAN LIVES LOST!

The windows were open and a feeling of spring pervaded the air. Through the open windows came the strains of a hurdy-gurdy playing in the street—"I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier."

"Lusitania Sunk! American Lives Lost!"—"I Didn't Raise My Boy to Be a Soldier." To us these did not seem to jibe.

The lieutenant in silence opened one of the lower drawers of his desk and took from it an American flag which he solemnly draped over the war map on the wall. Then, turning to me with a grim face, said:

"How about it, sergeant? You had better get out the muster roll of the Mounted Scouts, as I think they will be needed in the course of a few days."

We busied ourselves till late in the evening writing out emergency telegrams for the men to report when the call should come from Washington. Then we went home.

I crossed over to New York, and as I went up Fulton street to take the subway to Brooklyn, the lights in the tall buildings of New York seemed to be burning brighter than usual, as if they, too, had read "Lusitania Sunk! American Lives Lost!" They seemed to be glowing with anger and righteous indignation, and their rays wigwagged the message, "Repay!"

Months passed, the telegrams lying handy, but covered with dust. Then, one momentous morning the lieutenant with a sigh of disgust removed the flag from the war map and returned to his desk. I immediately followed this action by throwing the telegrams into the wastebasket. Then we looked at each other in silence. He was squirming in his chair and I felt depressed and uneasy.

The telephone rang and I answered it. It was a business call for me, requesting my services for an out-of-town assignment. Business was not very good, so this was very welcome. After listening to the proposition I seemed to be swayed by a peculiarly strong force within me, and answered, "I am sorry that I cannot accept your offer, but I am leaving for England next week," and hung up the receiver. The lieutenant swung around in his chair, and stared at me in blank astonishment. A sinking sensation came over me, but I defiantly answered his look with, "Well, it's so. I'm going." And I went.

The trip across was uneventful. I landed at Tilbury, England, then got into a string of matchbox cars and proceeded to London, arriving there about 10 p. m. I took a room in a hotel near St. Pancras station for "five and six—fire extra." The room was minus the fire, but the "extra" seemed to keep me warm. That night there was a Zeppelin raid, but I didn't see much of it, because the slit in the curtains was too small and I had no desire to make it larger. Next morning the telephone bell rang, and someone asked, "Are you there?" I was, hardly. Anyway, I learned that the Zeps had returned to their fatherland, so I went out into the street expecting to see scenes of awful devastation and a cowering populace, but everything was normal. People were calmly proceeding to their work. Crossing the street, I accosted a Bobbie with:

"Can you direct me to the place of damage?"

He asked me, "What damage?"

In surprise, I answered, "Why, the damage caused by the Zep-"

With a wink he replied:

"There was no damage; we missed them again."

After several fruitless inquiries of the passersby, I decided to go on my own in search of ruined buildings and scenes of destruction. I boarded a bus which carried me through Tottenham Court road. Recruiting posters were everywhere. The one that impressed me most was a life-size picture of Lord Kitchener with his finger pointing directly at me, under the caption of "Your King and Country Need You." No matter which way I turned, the accusing finger followed me. I was an American, in mufti, and had a little American flag in the lapel of my coat. I had no king, and my country had seen fit not to need me, but still that pointing finger made me feel small and ill at ease. I got off the bus to try to dissipate this feeling by mixing with the throng of the sidewalks.

Presently I came to a recruiting office. Inside, sitting at a desk was a lonely Tommy Atkins. I decided to interview him in regard to joining the British army. I opened the door. He looked up and greeted me with "I s'y, myte, want to tyke on?"

I looked at him and answered, "Well, whatever that is, I'll take a chance at it."

Without the aid of an interpreter, I found out that Tommy wanted to know if I cared to join the British army. He asked me: "Did you ever hear of the Royal Fusiliers?" Well, in London, you know, Yanks are supposed to know everything, so I was not going to appear ignorant and answered, "Sure."

After listening for one half-hour to Tommy's tale of their exploits on the firing line, I decided to join. Tommy took me to the recruiting headquarters, where I met a typical English captain. He asked my nationality. I immediately pulled out my American passport and showed it to him. It was signed by Lansing. After looking at the passport, he informed me that he was sorry but could not enlist me, as it would be a breach of neutrality. I insisted that I was not neutral, because to me it seemed that a real American could not be neutral when big things were in progress, but the captain would not enlist me.

Guy Empey.

With disgust in my heart I went out in the street. I had gone about a block when a recruiting sergeant who had followed me out of the office tapped me on the shoulder with his swagger stick and said: "S'y, I can get you in the army. We have a 'leftenant' down at the other office who can do anything. He has just come out of the O. T. C. (Officers' Training corps) and does not know what neutrality is." I decided to take a chance, and accepted his invitation for an introduction to the lieutenant. I entered the office and went up to him, opened up my passport and said:

"Before going further I wish to state that I am an American, not too proud to fight, and want to join your army."

He looked at me in a nonchalant manner, and answered, "That's all right; we take anything over here."

I looked at him kind of hard and replied, "So I notice," but it went over his head.

He got out an enlistment blank, and placing his finger on a blank line said, "Sign here."

I answered, "Not on your tintype."

"I beg your pardon?"

Then I explained to him that I would not sign it without first reading it. I read it over and signed for duration of war. Some of the recruits were lucky. They signed for seven years only!

Then he asked me my birthplace. I answered, "Ogden, Utah."

He said, "Oh, yes, just outside of New York?"

With a smile, I replied, "Well, it's up the state a little."

Then I was taken before the doctor and passed as physically fit, and was issued a uniform. When I reported back to the lieutenant, he suggested that, being an American, I go on recruiting service and try to shame some of the slackers into joining the army."

"All you have to do," he said, "is to go out on the street, and when you see a young fellow in mufti who looks physically fit, just stop him and give him this kind of a talk: 'Aren't you ashamed of yourself, a Britisher, physically fit, and in mufti when your king and country need you? Don't you know that your country is at war and that the place for every young Briton is on the firing line? Here I am, an American, in khaki, who came four thousand miles to fight for your king and country, and you, as yet, have not enlisted. Why don't you join? Now is the time.'

"This argument ought to get many recruits, Empey, so go out and see what you can do."

He then gave me a small rosette of red, white and blue ribbon, with three little streamers hanging down. This was the recruiting insignia and was to be worn on the left side of the cap.

Armed with a swagger stick and my patriotic rosette, I went out into Tottenham Court road in quest of cannon fodder.

Two or three poorly dressed civilians passed me, and although they appeared physically fit, I said to myself, "They don't want to join the army; perhaps they have someone dependent on them for support," so I did not accost them.

Coming down the street I saw a young dandy, top hat and all, with a fashionably dressed girl walking beside him. I muttered, "You are my meat," and when he came abreast of me I stepped directly in his path and stopped him with my swagger stick, saying:

"You would look fine in khaki; why not change that top hat for a steel helmet? Aren't you ashamed of yourself, a husky young chap like you in mufti when men are needed in the trenches? Here I am, an American, came four thousand miles from Ogden, Utah, just outside of New York, to fight for your king and country. Don't be a slacker, buck up and get into uniform; come over to the recruiting office and I'll have you enlisted."

He yawned and answered, "I don't care if you came forty thousand miles, no one asked you to," and he walked on. The girl gave me a sneering look; I was speechless.

I recruited for three weeks and nearly got one recruit.

This perhaps was not the greatest stunt in the world, but it got back at the officer who had told me, "Yes, we take anything over here." I had been spending a good lot of my recruiting time in the saloon bar of the Wheat Sheaf pub (there was a very attractive blonde barmaid, who helped kill time—I was not as serious in those days as I was a little later when I reached the front)—well, it was the sixth day and my recruiting report was blank. I was getting low in the pocket—barmaids haven't much use for anyone who cannot buy drinks—so I looked around for recruiting material. You know a man on recruiting service gets a "bob" or shilling for every recruit he entices into joining the army, the recruit is supposed to get this, but he would not be a recruit if he were wise to this fact, would he?

Down at the end of the bar was a young fellow in mufti who was very patriotic—he had about four "Old Six" ales aboard. He asked me if he could join, showed me his left hand, two fingers were missing, but I said that did not matter as "we take anything over here." The left hand is the rifle hand as the piece is carried at the slope on the left shoulder. Nearly everything in England is "by the left," even general traffic keeps to the port side.

I took the applicant over to headquarters, where he was hurriedly examined. Recruiting surgeons were busy in those days and did not have much time for thorough physical examinations. My recruit was passed as "fit" by the doctor and turned over to a corporal to make note of his scars. I was mystified. Suddenly the corporal burst out with, "Blime me, two of his fingers are gone." Turning to me he said, "You certainly have your nerve with you, not 'alf you ain't, to bring this beggar in."

The doctor came over and exploded, "What do you mean by bringing in a man in this condition?"

Looking out of the corner of my eye I noticed that the officer who had recruited me had joined the group, and I could not help answering, "Well, sir, I was told that you took anything over here."

I think they called it "Yankee impudence," anyhow it ended my recruiting.

In training quarters, "somewhere in France," Empey hears the big guns booming and makes the acquaintance of the "cooties." Read about his experiences in the next installment.

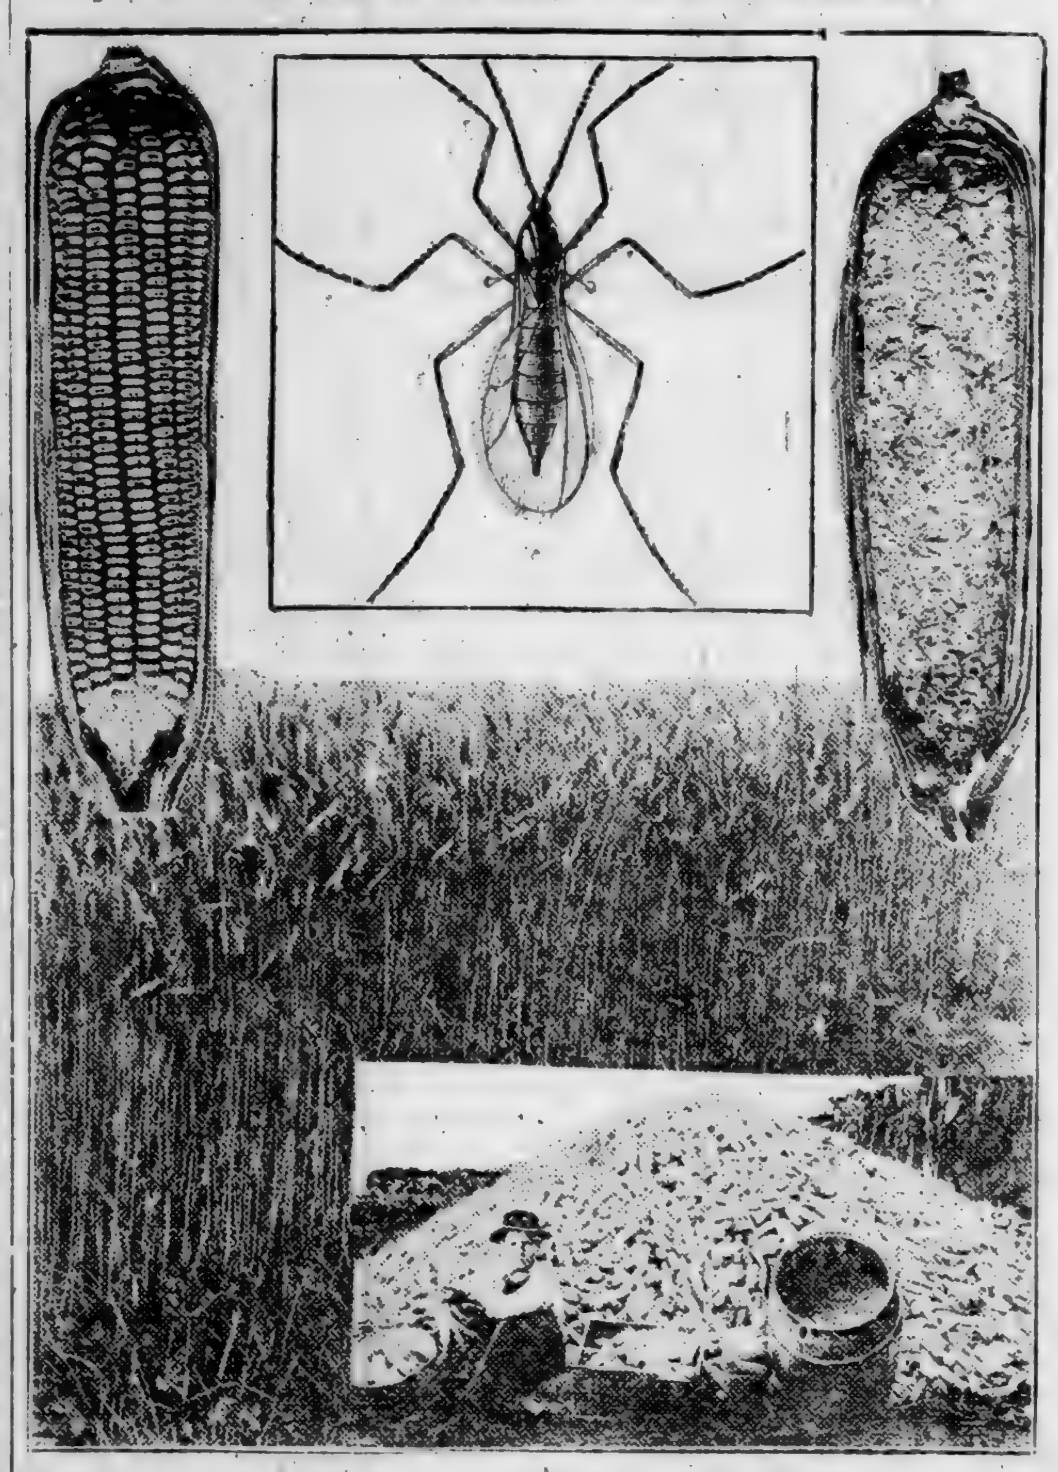
"Newport News."

In Virginia's early days communication with the mother country was, of course, wholly by ships, and when one was expected the colonists were all eagerness for the news from home. On the occasion of one, it may have been the first, of a certain Captain Newport's expected return from England, at or near the place now bearing his name, a large number of persons collected to receive "Newport's news." Hence the name, now shortened to its present form.

Our Part in Feeding the Nation

(Special Information Service, United States Department of Agriculture.)

SAVE BILLIONS BY STOPPING FOOD LOSSES.



Increased Forces of Federal and State Experts Will Help Farmers Fight Pests of Wheat, Corn, and Other Crops This Year.

MAKE BATTLE ON FOOD PARASITES

Billions of Dollars' Damage to Crops Has Been Prevented.

SPECIALISTS URGE BIG WAR

Assistance to Be Given Farmers to Reduce Injury Caused by Insects, Diseases, Mice, Rats, Squirrels and Other Rodents.

Every effort should be made to prevent losses in production, storage, and transportation of food in these days when the conservation of every product contributing to our food supply means so much, states the United States department of agriculture in its 1918 campaign just announced.

Billions of dollars are lost every year, says the statement, from such preventable causes as insects, plant and animal diseases, carelessness in breeding, predatory animals, rats, mice, ground squirrels and other rodents. These losses are being held in check by present agencies and can be further greatly reduced or prevented at a cost which is insignificant when compared with the amount of damage done. Methods of controlling many of these harmful factors are now well established and should be more widely adopted. A large loss on the farms of the United States results from the improper care of manure, and its careless and ineffective use. In these times of scarcity of fertilizing materials more attention than ever should be paid to the conserving of plant food from this source.

Animal Diseases and Parasites.

It has been estimated that diseases of animals, such as hog cholera, tuberculosis, contagious abortion, dourine, Texas or tick fever, and others, cause annual losses aggregating many millions. Many of these diseases, to a still greater extent, can be prevented or their ravages reduced considerably. The department has greatly extended its facilities for dealing with these matters and will assist farmers in every feasible way.

The annual losses from insects and plant diseases are enormous. It has been conservatively estimated that smuts of wheat alone cause losses aggregating $60,000,000 annually. The staff of specialists in the department of agriculture, as well as the staffs in the state institutions, has been increased, and, in co-operation with the forces in the various states, they will be able to render more effective assistance to farmers during the coming season than ever before.

Predatory Animals and Rodents.

The losses from animals injurious to agriculture and to animal husbandry are enormous. Native rodents cause losses of grain, forage and other agricultural products estimated at more than $150,000,000. House rats and mice levy a toll of $200,000,000 upon the nation's food supply. On the western cattle ranges predatory animals alone cause losses of live stock amounting to $20,000,000 to $30,000,000 annually. Methods of eradication have been developed, especially in the case of rodents which will make it possible to reduce the losses at a relatively small expense. The department will vigorously prosecute its activities in this field and will assist farmers in every feasible way, in co-operation with the extension forces of the states, to control or eliminate these pests.

HELPING MILL WORKERS TO GROW FOOD GARDENS

"If the South neglects this year to provide her own food and feed she is likely to suffer serious privation and she will be a burden upon the nation which may prolong the war and even imperil our victory."

Acting promptly on this statement from the department of agriculture, the superintendent of a mill at Calhoun Falls, S. C., issued a poster quoting this statement and advising employees to "Get Busy With Your Spring Garden." Free garden seeds will be furnished by the mill as usual, the poster said, and five cash prizes for the best garden, with three special prizes were offered. Further, the company agreed to plow gardens where it was desired and to furnish meal and acid fertilizer at a nominal price.

More Beans, Peas, Peanuts.

As important features of its supplementary program for feeding the nation, its armies, and the allies, the United States department of agriculture recommends that great attention be paid to the production of beans, peas and peanuts. On these subjects the program states:

"The production of beans and peas should be increased in regions to which they are adapted, because of their high food value, keeping qualities, and availability for domestic or export trade.

"Soy beans and peanuts should be increased in order to supplement beans and peas as human food, as a source of much-needed oil, and as animal feeds.

"The production of beans last year in the six leading states increased from 10,715,000 bushels to 15,701,000 bushels, and peanuts from 35,324,500 bushels to 60,222,000 bushels. But these increases proved to be greatly needed, and there is every indication that large increases will be readily absorbed in 1918.

"The peanut is especially valuable because of the oil it contains, for which the need is great. In the South, especially, soy beans and peanut meal are proving very satisfactory as partial substitutes for wheat. Both soy beans and peanuts are of great value as forage crops."

Some 1918 Garden Needs.

Market gardens near large consuming centers should be increased so as to meet, as nearly as possible, the needs of the community, and in order to obviate the necessity of transporting such products from distant points.

The planting of home gardens, especially for family needs and for preserving food for future use, again should be emphasized.

The commercial production of perishables generally should be increased above normal wherever it is reasonably clear that transportation and marketing facilities will be available.

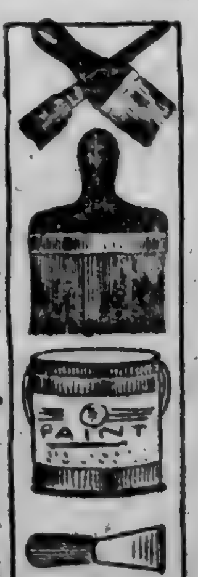
WONDER WASHER



Formaldehyde Solution,

Treat your Oats for SMUT this year and help DeKalb County to produce a full crop. We have the preparation and its a small job with big pay. $100,000 was lost in DeRalb last year by farmers not treating their Oats.

Seed Corn For DeKalb

Through the efforts of Purdue University, a car of seven hundred and fifty bushels of excellent seed corn has been located in New York state and will be shipped to DeKalb County. This corn is on the cob and is of the yellow white cap variety, testing 90% and better. Former County Agent Henry, of Allen County, but now of Purdue, having inspected this corn states that it is of very fine quality. The price delivered will be approximately $6 00 per bushel, and considering quality and germination, this price is not excessive this year. About two hundred bushels of the car have been spoken for, and if there are any more DeKalb County farmers who wish good seed corn they should communicate with County Agent A. Z. Arehart, at Auburn, at once. The corn will not arrive for about ten days and due notice of its arrival will be given in all the county papers, as well as in the Journal-Gazette and Ft. Wayne News.

A Little Out Of Season

The world is all torn up side down and nearly everything is reversed. To hear the thresher whistle in March is very unusual in DeKalb county, but last Thursday E. W. Saylor threshed his wheat crop. Now this is very early, nevertheless he got 551 bushels of the very best quality. Mr. Wearley, of Spencerville done tne job and surely did credit to himself as a thresher. Mr. Saylor hauled 238 bushels to the St. Joe mill which Mr Haifley said was as clean a job as he had bought.

To Swallow The Dust.

The following letter was received by Wm. Curie as member of town board and is self explanatory.

Have just received a communication from our representative, Mr. C. J. Koehl, requesting us to quote you price on tank car of Road Oil. Regret to advise that we have received notification from our Refinery connections to the effect that the United States Government has prohibited the manufacturing of Road Oil until further notice. This looks very much as though it would be almost impossible to secure any of this product until the war is over. (Let's hope it will be soon).

Regretting our inability to serve you and thanking you for courtesies extended our representative, we are

Yours very truly.

MUST CONSERVE WHEAT TO MEET THE DEMANDS

Important Announcement Issued by United States Food Administration at Washington.

Washington, March 24.—If we are to furnish the allies with the necessary proportion of wheat to maintain their war bread from now until the next harvest—and this is a military necessity—we must reduce our monthly consumption 21,000,000 bushels a month as against our normal consumption of about 42,000,000 bushels, or 50 per cent of our normal consumption. Reserving a margin for distribution to the Army and for special cases leaves for general consumption approximately 1½ pounds of wheat products weekly per person. Many of our consumers are dependent upon bakers' bread. Such bread must be durable, and therefore requires a larger proportion of wheat products than cereal breads baked in the household. Our Army and Navy require a full allowance. The well-to-do in our population can make greater sacrifices in the consumption of wheat products than can the poor. In addition, our population in the agricultural districts, where the other cereals are abundant, are more skilled in the preparation of breads from these other cereals than the crowded city and industrial populations.

With improved transportation conditions we now have available a surplus of potatoes. We also have in the spring months a surplus of milk, and we have ample corn and oats for human consumption. The drain on rye and barley as substitutes has already greatly exhausted the supply of these grains.

To effect the needed saving of wheat we are wholly dependent upon the voluntary assistance of the American people, and we ask that the following rules shall be observed.

1. Householders to use not to exceed a total of 1½ pounds per week of wheat products per person. This means not more than 1¾ pounds of Victory bread containing the required percentage of substitutes and one-half pound of cooking flour, macaroni, crackers, pastry, pies, cakes, wheat breakfast cereals, all combined.

2. Public eating places and clubs to observe two wheatless days per week—Monday and Wednesday, as at present. In addition thereto not to serve to any one guest at any one meal an aggregate of breadstuffs, macahoni, crackers, pastry, pies, cakes, wheat breakfast cereals containing a total of more than 2 ounces of wheat flour. No wheat products to be served unless specially ordered. Public eating establishments not to buy more than 6 pounds of wheat products per month per guest, thus conforming with the limitations requested of the householders.

3. Retailers to sell not more than one-eighth of a barrel of flour to any town customer at any one time and not more than one-quarter of a barrel to any country customer at any one time, and in no case to sell wheat products without the sale of an equal weight of other cereals.

4. We ask the bakers and grocers to reduce the volume of Victory bread sold by delivery of the three-quarter pound loaf where 1 pound was sold before and corresponding proportions in other weights. We also ask bakers not to increase the amount of their wheat-flour purchases beyond 70 per cent of the average monthly amount purchased in the four months prior to March 1.

5. Manufacturers using wheat products for nonfood purposes should cease such use entirely.

6. There is no limit upon the use of other cereals, flours and meals, corn, barley, buckwheat, potato flour, etc.

Many thousand families throughout the land are now using no wheat products whatever, except a very small amount for cooking purposes, and are doing so in perfect health and satisfaction. There is no reason why all of the American people who are able to cook in their own households can not subsist perfectl well with the use of less wheat products than 1½ pounds a week, and we especially ask the well-to-do households in the country to follow this additional program in order that we may provide the necessary marginal supplies for those parts of the community less able to adapt themselves to so large a proportion of substitutes.

In order that we shall be able to make the wheat exports that are absolutely demanded of us to maintain the civil populations and soldiers of the allies and our own Army we propose to supplement the voluntary cooperation of the public by a further limitation of distribution, and we shall place at once restdictions on distribution, which will be adjusted from time to time to secure as nearly equitable distribution as possible. With the arrival of harvest we should be able to relax such restrictions; until then we ask for the necessary patience, sacrifice, and cooperation of the distributing trades.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

IN THE SPRING

will be the great test of a life and death struggle on the Western front. In the everyday walks of life, it is the spring time that brings ill health. One of the chief reasons why the run-down man finds himself in a bad state of health in March or April, is because he has spent nearly all his hours for the past four or five months penned up within the walls of house, factory or office. It is the reason for our diminished resistance—that is, lack of out-door life, coupled with perhaps over-eating, lack of good exercise, insufficient sleep, and constipation. In other words, we keep feeding the furnace with food but do not take out the "clinkers," and our fire does not burn brightly. Always keep the liver active.

There is nothing better for health than taking an occasional mild laxative, perhaps once a week; such a one as you can get at any drug store, made up of May-apple, jalap, aloes, (sugar-coated, tiny, easily taken), which has stood the test of fifty years of approval—namely, Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. But for the "Spring Fever," the general run-down condition, the lack of ambition, the "blues," one should take a course of treatment every spring; such a standard tonic as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, now to be had in tablet form in sixty-cent vials. Watch the people go plodding along the street. There's no spring, no vitality. A vitalizing tonic such as this vegetable extract of Dr. Pierce's gives you the power to force yourself into action. The brain responds to the new blood in circulation, and thus you're ready to make a fight against stagnation which holds you in bondage. Try it now! Don't wait! Today is the day to begin. Gain a little "pep," and laugh and live. Vim and vitality are the natural out-pouring of a healthy body. It does not spring up in a night. Try this spring tonic, and you gain the courage that comes with good health.

RECALLED DAYS OF YOUTH

Middle-Aged New Yorker Succumbed to the Almost Forgotten Fascination of Coasting.

Riverside drive on a winter day with snow everywhere aplenty.

Between the drive and the river there are many places that make good coasting; there are short, gentle inclines that are nice for small children, and then there are longer, steeper, more varied slides that suit the bigger boys better.

At a slide of the latter description halted a father and mother with their six-year-old son, who had his sled along.

"There's a good place," said father.

"Too steep, isn't it?" said son.

"No. I'll show you."

And with that, his boyhood days coming back to him as he saw the boys sliding, father seated himself on the sled and a moment later away he went.

Presently he was back again at the top of the hill ready for the next slide and from now on carrying his son.

"It seems to be as much fun for you as it is for John," the smiling mother said.

"It is. I am going to buy a sled for myself tomorrow," said father.—New York Times.

Little "Slam" at Tacoma.

In examining applicants for naturalization papers, Judge Cushman, in the federal court at Seattle, asked an applicant how long he had lived in the country. The reply came:

"I've lived in the United States ten years, except three months I was in Tacoma."

As the judge is from Tacoma, he deliberated several minutes before granting the papers.

HOW TO GROW

IRISH POTATOES.

The culture of the Irish potato is familiar to almost everyone who has ever had a garden. In brief, the potatoes should be planted as soon as the ground can be worked in spring, two weeks before the average date of the last killing frost being none too early. The tubers should be cut so that each piece contains from one to two eyes, and the pieces planted in rows from 24 to 30 inches apart, and from 10 to 15 inches apart in the rows, depending on the variety. Cultivation should be frequent and thorough. It is an excellent idea to work soil up to the plants as they develop, so that there will be plenty of soil to cover the potatoes as they form.

Early potatoes in the central and southern sections of the country will mature in sufficient time for the gardener to grow a crop of sweet corn, late cabbage or turnips on the same ground. It is often possible to plant the second crop between the potato rows before the potatoes are dug. Early potatoes may be used as soon as large enough, an old rule being to begin using them when they are as large as a hen's egg. The usual method is to dig them as needed, leaving the main part of the crop to develop to maturity.

In the central portion of the United States the late crop may be planted from June 15 to July 1, but in the northern sections the main crop is planted earlier than this, no attempt being made to produce early and late potatoes, as in many sections the growing season is too short for the production of but one crop. Late potatoes are allowed to grow until they mature or until the frost kills the vines. The cultivation of the late crop is similar to that employed in the case of the early crop.

SWEET POTATOES.

The sweet potato thrives best in the southern part of the country, as it is a tropical plant. It cannot be successfully grown in the extreme northern sections of the country. The plants are started in hotbeds by bedding potatoes in sand and allowing them to sprout. The plants are broken off the parent potato as soon as they have formed a few leaves and a root system of their own, and as soon as the ground in the open is well warmed up. This will be one month after the date of the last killing frost.

Sweet potatoes are a heat-loving plant, and cannot withstand cool weather. In setting them in the open, the usual method is to throw the soil up in ridges about 4 feet apart. The plants are set in a row on top of these ridges some 12 or 14 inches apart.

Sweet potatoes thrive best in a sandy soil that is well fertilized throughout. It is a good plan to open furrows where the row is to be, fill these furrows with manure and turn the soil back on top of the manure. This should be thoroughly mixed with a shovel plow or cultivator, as too much manure in one spot under the hole will produce a large growth of vines at the expense of the potatoes.

Sweet potatoes may be dug at any time after they become large enough to use, but improve in quality as they approach maturity. They should be dug as soon as the vines are killed by frost.

SNAP BEANS.

Bush and pole beans are among the most valuable and dependable crops of the garden. "When in doubt what to plant—plant beans."

Beans thrive best in a rather warm sandy loam, but may be grown on almost any kind of soil. For the best results the soil should not be too rich in nitrogenous matter, or the plants will run to foliage and stems at the expense of the crop. Beans will not withstand frost, and the first plantings in the spring should not be made until about two weeks after the average date of the last killing frost. The soil should be in good condition and the rows should be laid out perfectly straight so as to make cultivation easy. One pint of the seed of most varieties of snap beans is sufficient for a 100-foot row. When the cultivation is to be done by horse, the rows should be from 30 to 36 inches apart. When hand cultivation is to be employed, the rows should be from 18 to 24 inches apart. It requires from 40 to 60 days for snap beans to be ready for use if the weather conditions are favorable.

Successive plantings of string beans should be made at intervals of ten days to two weeks throughout the growing season. By following this scheme a constant supply of tender beans will be assured.

EARLY CABBAGE.

When set in spring, the cabbage plants should be started in the window box or in hotbeds some six weeks before the average date of the last killing frost in the particular locality. They may be set in the gardens as soon as the ground is in condition. For horse cultivation the rows should be from 2½ to 3 feet apart and the plants from 12 to 20 inches apart in the rows. Cabbage requires a rich warm soil for early maturity, a loam constituting a good type of soil for the purpose. It is an excellent plan to put a shovelful of compost under each plant.

Early cabbage must be used as soon as it reaches maturity, or the heads are liable to burst and be lost. It is an excellent plan to grow early cabbage for summer kraut making, as it has been found that kraut may be made at the time that early cabbage matures and will keep successfully. It is much easier to produce early cabbage than the later varieties for this purpose.

SQUASH.

There are two types of squash—the bush varieties, which may be planted 5 and 6 seeds to the hill in hills 4 or 5 feet apart each way, and the running varieties which require considerable more room for their development. Squash may properly be grown in the garden, as three or four hills will produce all that is required for the average family. They require a rather rich soil, preferably one that is well mixed with rotted manure.

Squash for summer use should be planted as soon as the ground is thoroughly warmed up, which will be about one month after the last killing frost. Such varieties as the Hubbard for fall and winter use may be planted at any time during the spring after the ground is thoroughly warmed up, and will grow the entire season. They should be gathered in fall, as soon as hard frosts occur. They may be kept in a storage room in the basement, or in any cool, dry place. It is necessary to handle them carefully to avoid bruising, or rot is liable to occur.

TURNIPS.

The turnip requires a rich soil and may be grown either as an early or late crop. For an early crop, sow the seeds in drills 12 to 18 inches apart as early in the spring as the condition of the soil will permit. A half-ounce of seed is sufficient for a 100-foot row. After the plants appear thin to about 3 inches apart. The roots will be ready for use before hot weather.

For late turnips, the seeds are usually sown broadcast on land from which some early crop has been removed, and for this reason the turnip is a good crop to grow for storage for winter. They are quite hardy, and the roots need not be gathered until after the first frosts. They may be stored in banks or pits or in the out-door cave or cellar, and keep best when kept rather cool.

The turnip is a good crop for interplanting between rows of late corn or late beans.

EGGPLANT.

The seed for eggplant should be sown in the hotbed about six weeks before the time to set the plants in the open. The eggplant is a heat-loving plant and cannot be successfully planted until the ground has become warm and the weather settled.

The soil best adapted to the eggplant is a rich, sandy loam, well drained. The plants should be set in rows 3 feet apart, with the plants 2 feet apart in the rows. Cultivation should be frequent and thorough. Fresh manure should not be used on eggplant, but well-rotted manure may be applied freely. In fact, there is little danger of getting the ground too rich. Eggplants may be used as soon as large enough and cannot be kept for any length of time.

OKRA.

Okra is a delicious vegetable that deserves a better acquaintance with the home garden than it now possesses. Say "Chicken Gumbo, Southern Style" to the initiated; that is all the argument needed in favor of growing this crop.

It thrives on any good soil, and the seeds should be sown in rows 4 to 5 feet apart after all danger of frost is past, or about the same time as tomato plants are set in the open. The plants should be thinned until they stand about 2 feet apart in the rows. The edible portion of the okra is the pods, which must be gathered while young. They are used in soups or as a stewed vegetable.

Simple Test for Soil.

A simple test to determine when garden soil is ready for plowing or working is to take a handful of earth from the surface and close the fingers tightly on it. If the earth compacted in this way is dry enough for cultivation it will fall apart when the hand is opened. This test is applicable only to comparatively heavy soils, but it is these which receive the most injury if they are worked when wet.

Apple Tree.

There is little doubt that where apple trees are fertilized highly the fruit tends to be green and not "color up" well. This seems quite reasonable.

Don't Let Roots Waste.

Don't let any cabbage or other roots go to waste. Tie a stout string around the roots of several cabbages, and hang them in the henhouse so that the hens can just reach them nicely.

Convert Waste Into Food.

Poultry is the only class of domestic animal which is suitable for converting the kitchen waste, right where it is produced in the city, into wholesome and nutritious food.

Means of Reducing Pests.

Collect and burn all dried, rotten fruit that remain on the trees or that has fallen. This is a means of reducing disease and insect pests next summer.

Level Garden Soils.

Perfectly level gardens please the eyes but are not always well drained.

BEER AND THE WAR.

Save, save, save! These are words that we face at every turn, says Cora Stoddard in the Union Signal. Money for Liberty loans; food for the allies and the war-tossed peoples; and for the boys and youths who are to fight the battle for democracy. Save!

Through all the grave or sometimes gay aspects of this many-sided thrift endeavor there recurs a jarring element. Questions arise which will not be silenced. What of the money, the food, the man-power involved in the production and use of beer?

We know from government statistics that the amount of foodstuffs used in making beer was greater in 1917 than in 1916 or 1915. We knew the world's food supply was low yet we allowed the brewers to use more foodfstuffs last year than in either of the two preceding years.

A 30 per cent reduction in the grain used in brewing has been ordered for 1918, but this still leaves an amount of food material to go into the brewery vats, appalling under the circumstances.

Take the single item of barley. The barley used by American breweries last year, if made into flour or sent into France for bread, would have been equal to the normal bread ration of 8,600,000 people for a year. This we learn from no less an authority than a new book on food written by Vernon Kellogg and Dr. Alonzo E. Taylor of the United States food administration, which gives the bread values for 50,000,000 bushels of barley—bread enough for our army many times over, or more than enough for all Belgium or the smitten people of the French war zone.

WORSE THAN WASTED.

The liquor men are wasting food. Last year the waste amounted to 7,000,000,000 pounds of foodstuffs.

They are wasting labor. About 300,000 men are engaged in the manufacture, sale and distribution of booze in breweries, saloons and restaurants, as brewers, bartenders and waiters—at a time when every man is needed in some useful occupation to help win the war.

They are wasting life. Bartenders, brewery workers and waiters in saloons lose an average of six years of life on account of their occupations. If the 300,000 men who make and sell booze lose an average of six years of life, it makes a total of 1,800,000 years of life. The average man works about 30 years—so that the liquor traffic is using up the equivalent of 60,000 men in each generation. And this is too great a price for the nation to pay.

For these reasons—(1) the waste of food, (2) the waste of labor, (3) the waste of life—we have a right to demand that the liquor business be abolished.—From Publicity Material Sent Out by the Federal Council of Churches in Its "Strengthen America" Campaign.

RATIFICATION PLAN CONSISTENT WITH AMERICAN DEMOCRACY.

"Prohibition in the organic law will forever destroy the keystone in the arch of true democracy," is the charge by the opponents of the federal amendment. They deplore the fact that a big, populous state like New York should count for no more than a small, sparsely settled state like Nevada in the matter of ratification of the amendment. They go even farther and insist that such a method of procedure is undemocratic and un-American. It is certainly too late in the history of the nation to make such a claim. As has been logically said, this method of amending the Constitution not only is not opposed to the American system, it is inherent in that system. If the principle involved in this method is wrong, if it is against public policy, the way to remedy it is to amend article 5, which provides this method of changing the fundamental law, rather than to denounce the provisions of the article as inconsistent with American institutions.

FOE MOST TO BE FEARED.

"The foe that I fear most," said Arthur Mee, author of "Defeat or Victory," at a recent meeting in Queen's hall, London, "is the man who is destroying the food I shall want for little Marjorie Mee when famine comes." And an outraged audience cheered to the echo Mr. Mee's indictment of "a trade which from the first day of the war till now, has never strained a nerve to help this land; has hindered it, hampered it, kept back ships and guns, caused the loss of thousands of our soldier's lives, and has all the time been the greatest pro-German force outside the German army."

SHOULD WE?

In the face of the terrific struggle for human freedom should we spend approximately a billion dollars a year for beer when this money is needed for Liberty loans, the Red Cross and those thousand and one beneficent agencies essential to all humanity in this crisis? Should we give the brewer foodstuffs that a hungry world could use, or coal needed for heat, light and power, or transportation needed for men, food, fuel and munitions.

The Cockney's Tact.

Watkins, a cockney private, was lecturing his mates one day on the need of employing tact in their dealings with the French people.

"Now, I got in a bit of a fix the other day," said Watkins. "I was billeted with a French family, and after I'd been shown to my room I started out for a walk. Well, I 'appened to open the wrong door. It was a bathroom and there was a lady in the tub. She let out a scream, and it might 'ave been a deucedly embarrassing situation, but my tact saved the day."

YOU NEED NOT SUFFER WITH BACKACHE AND RHEUMATISM

For centuries GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil has been a standard household remedy for kidney, liver, bladder and stomach trouble, and all diseases connected with the urinary organs. The kidneys and bladder are the most important organs of the body. They are the filters, the purifiers of your blood. If the poisons which enter your system through the blood and stomach are not entirely thrown out by the kidneys and bladder you are doomed.

Weariness, sleeplessness, nervousness, despondency, backache, stomach trouble, headache, pain in loins, and lower abdomen, gall-stones, gravel, difficulty when urinating, cloudy and bloody urine, rheumatism, sciatica, lumbago, all warn you to look after your kidneys and bladder. GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules are what you need.

They are not a "patent medicine" nor a "new discovery." For 200 years they have been a standard household remedy. They are the pure, original imported Haarlem Oil your great-grandmother used, and are perfectly harmless. The healing, soothing oil soaks into the cells and lining of the kidneys and through the bladder, driving out the poisonous germs. New life, fresh strength and health will come as you continue this treatment. When completely restored to your usual vigor, continue taking a capsule or two each day. They will keep you in condition and prevent a return of the disease.

Do not delay a minute. Delays are especially dangerous in kidney and bladder trouble. All reliable druggists sell GOLD MEDAL Haarlem Oil Capsules. They will refund the money if not as represented. In three sizes, sealed packages. Ask for the original imported GOLD MEDAL. Accept no substitutes.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY
TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR MARCH 31

JESUS OUR EXAMPLE IN SERVICE.

GOLDEN TEXT—Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus.—Phil. 2:5.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus our example in helping others.

MEMORY VERSE—Follow me.—Matt. 9:9.

EASTER LESSON.

LESSON TEXT—I Cor. 15:50-58.

GOLDEN TEXT—Thanks be unto God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ.—I Cor. 15:55.

(Read Phil. 2:1-11.)

A great many Sunday schools will probably omit the review lesson and devote the day to some special Easter exercises. This practice we cannot wholly condemn, but we would urge every school to devote some time to a consideration of the lesson text.

Review Sunday is dreaded by many superintendents, but it is a test of knowledge and skill in teaching, as well as the character of work done during the past three months.

Some codemn Bible-school teaching by comparing it disparagingly with that of the day school without taking into consideration the difference between paid and volunteer teachers, the limited time devoted to study, discipline and other features. It is manifestly unfair to judge the Sunday school by the same pedagogical standards as are applied to our public schools. The Sunday school deals with spiritual realities and not alone with moral issues. It is a wonderful testimony to the blessing of God that with such meager equipment, training and time at our disposal, the results of the Sunday school are so wonderfully effective in the Christian development of our country. With religious education legislated out of our public-school system, almost entirely neglected in our homes, and not one family in five or six connected with the Christian church, this suggests a condition savoring of cultured paganism. This ought not to discourage the Sunday-school worker, but rather challenge him to greater concentration and more valiant endeavor.

If a review is desired, summarize the lessons by allowing twelve classes or twelve persons to each bring in a brief digest.

Lesson 1 gives us the testimony of John the Baptist concerning the one "mightier" than himself, "whose shoes he was not worthy to unloose." Lesson 2 shows the impeccability of Jesus, in that he was "tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." Lesson 3 reveals him as the holy one of God, with power over unclean spirits and other sicknesses. Lesson 4 shows us Jesus as Savior who has power on earth to forgive sins. If he be not the Son of God the worship of Jesus is nothing less than paganism or idolatry. Lesson 5 shows us Jesus as Lord of the Sabbath. Lesson 6 as the Son of God, not only in his healing power but in his authority over unclean spirits with power to delegate that authority to others. Lesson 7 shows Jesus as the great teacher who will bring forth abundant fruit and eternal life. Lesson 8 shows the marvelous germinal power of the divine seed. Lesson 9 shows Jesus as the Son of God, whom even the winds and the sea must obey. Lesson 10 shows us Jesus as the Son of God with power over death. Lesson 11 shows us Jesus as not only having authority over unclean spirits, but possessing power to impart that authority to others, while Lesson 12 shows us his compassion upon the unshepherded multitude, and the exercise of his divine creative power in feeding them.

Of course such a review will be rapid and perhaps incomplete, but it will show that Jesus meets every situation and that his grace is sufficient for all the conditions of life. It will also show that his words communicate vitality to society but that their effectiveness depends upon the response which is accorded to them.

If a test is required of the pupils, a set of questions covering the work of the quarter should be prepared and given to them a week in advance, from which a half dozen might be selected for written review during the class hour. This is no theoretical plan. The writer knows of many Sunday schools where written reviews are being successfully conducted.

The Holy Land where Christ lived, suffered, died and rose again, has recently been captured from the control of the Ottoman empire, and current history indicates the probable early establishment of a Jewish state in this land of prophecy.

A Christian on his knees can get a clearer vision of heaven than a sinner can with a telescope.

The first law that God gave unto man was the law of pure obedience—for as much as to obey is the proper office of a rational soul.—Montaigne.

"It is only when tomorrow's burden is added to the burden of today that the weight is more than we can bear."

An inconsistent Christian is no evidence that the Bible is not true.

He who keeps close to God will not be close with God.

FIRST COUSIN WORTH HAVING

Would Be Grand if Every Nephew of Uncle Sam Could Have One Just Like Her.

The home-body on her way to market had been buried in her shopping list until the voices of her neighbors reached her.

"What did you hear from Jack?"

"I had a nice letter yesterday from him; so interesting. He told about some girl—perfect stranger—who sent him a box of home-made stuff. There were socks and wristlets and a helmet and candy."

"Why, the idea of sending all that to a strange chap."

"But you see," Jack's mother went on to explain "by way of apology for taking the liberty—it seems she had got his name out of a list of boys in camp down there—she explained that as Uncle Sam was her uncle, and Jack's too, that made them first cousins, and so he couldn't possibly be offended with her. Wasn't that cute?"

"I should say so."

"Then she told him if he opened the candy when he was on 'open' or 'neutral seas he must divide with his other cousins, and if there was any of the candy left by the time he landed in France he must give it to his second cousins—the English and the French. It was the cheeriest letter! And so interesting! So much so that he sent it to me to read. Cunning little minx, using that Uncle Sam gag."

"Sure," remarked her companion, "but that's the girl of it!"

Knows Mother Now as Heroine.

The woman who plows is not a new woman, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

"My mother had 13 children," said a prosperous shipbuilder. "She plowed—and she didn't have one of these 12 horse-power, three-plow, ten-acres-a-day tractors either. She had to cleave a straight furrow among the rocks and stumps behind the horses.

"She never pretended it was easy work, for it wasn't. But she was a heroine, and she did not complain. I know now, in the perspective of the years, the woman that she was."

Royal Wit Not Slow.

Rich in sly humor was the reply of Henry IV of France, who one day reached Amiens after a prolonged journey. A local orator was deputed to harangue him, and commenced with a lengthy string of epithets;

"Very great sovereign, very good, very merciful, very magnanimous—"

"Add also," interrupted the weary monarch, "very tired."

Now I want to say to every sufferer from piles, either blind, bleeding or itching, that I will guarantee that a 30 cent box of PETERSON'S OINTMENT will rid you of piles or your druggist will return your money.

"For years I suffered terribly with itching and bleeding piles. I tried everything and despaired of ever getting rid of them. Red Cross Department

Next year, if this war continues, we hope to see our schools organized in a "Junior Red Cross." We regret that it could not be accomplished during this past year but the organizing of the various parts of our Chapter proper has been no light task and we feel that the foundation is laid for a good line of work for another year and also the way clear to organize the Junior membership of the St. Joe Branch.

Dr. Mac Craken, Pres. of Vassar College and Natr'il Director of Junior Red Cross, gives the meaning of our Red Cross in the following beautiful language:

The red in our cross stands for sacrifice, for giving life, as the warm, crimson blood gives life to the body. The cross has the same length on all four sides of its arms, to signify that it gives life equally to all, high or low, east or west. It stands alone always, no words or markings on it, to show that the Red Cross workers have only one thought—to serve. They ask no questions, they care not whether the wounded be ours or of another people—their duty is to give, and to give quickly.

The Red Cross stands on a white ground, because real sacrifice can come only from pure hearts. Service must come not from hate, but from love; from the noblest thoughts and wishes of the heart, or it will fail. That is why children love this flag. It is drawing them by millions in the schools of our land, in a wonderful army of rescue under the President, to make, to save, to give for others. And some day the children of all lands, under the Red Cross, will teach the grown people the ways of understanding and of friendship; the beautiful meaning of the Red Cross which is echoed in their lives.

We have been asked if any one of the general public may come in and see the Surgical Dressing Class at work. We thought we had made this plain but again we will say "Everybody welcome!" We are glad to have callers and our instructor will explain the work and show you the different kinds of bandages we are making. We have had several callers and find the men are as interested as women. We have no desire to make this an exclusive Class. If you are not working with us, or if you desire to see the work and have not done so, that is your fault and not ours for we will gladly welcome anyone.

In our Knitting report Mrs. Wm. Randall should be credited with 4 prs. of socks instead of 3 pairs.

This winter the attendance in the sewing room has been excellent and we hope it will continue. Of course we understand about the spring housecleaning and the gardens, etc: but never-the-less this work should be paramount. The boys who will be wounded in this spring drive must be cared for and it is up to the Red Cross to have a supply of hospital garments and bandages. Will you do your part?

OFFICIAL FOOD NEWS

By Dr. Harry E. Barnard, Federal Food Administrator for Indiana.

The present purpose of the Federal Food Administration is now directed to re-establishing a normal flow of wheat to the mills, as evidenced by the following telegram from Herbert Hoover:

"In order that we may comply with the urgent demands of the allies for wheat and at the same time take care of our own domestic supplies we urgently need, this year, an earlier and more complete marketing of the wheat in farmers' hands than usual. The allies are taking from us 50 per cent. of other cereals than wheat to mix in their bread. Inasmuch as the people in allied countries and the soldiers must be fed with bread baked in bakeries, it is impossible for them to prepare bread made wholly out of other cereals and we must furnish them with sufficient wheat to maintain their bakery loaf. I therefore appeal to all of the farmers in the State of Indiana that they shall bring all of their wheat except their necessary reserves for seed to market before May 1. This is a war call and a service for Uncle Sam who is fighting for his life. If your local miller is unable to buy all the wheat that is offered, market it in the customary trade channels through which it will reach the Food Administration Grain Corporation.

"HERBERT HOOVER."

Hot Cross buns for Easter consumption must be without icing and made by the Victory recipe which calls for a minimum of 20 per cent. substitutes for wheat flour.

The waste of eggs either by unusual consumption or by rendering them inedible by coloring matter is considered unpatriotic, and is taboo this year.

Bakers must conform to the Victory recipe or quit business after March 20. By that time if the required 20 per cent. of substitutes is not available bakers will be forced to quit. In the meantime they are urged to combine the substitutes, which will serve to remove many of the difficulties that have been experienced where only one substitute has been used.

Modified regulations relative to the sale of wheat flour prohibits an extension of credit for the purchase of substitutes except at the time and in equal quantity of the purchase being made.

Paste used for hanging wall paper must be no better than a very low grade of wheat flour, which is unfit for bread making. This statement comes in anticipation of the house cleaning season. Paper hangers who have always used white wheat flour for paste making must find some other material as wheat flour fit for bread-making is entirely too precious for such use at this time.

Farmers who have been feeding wheat to live stock on the theory that it is a more economic practice than feeding corn, are laboring under a misapprehension of the chief statistician. The United States Food Administration at Washington has tabulated cereal prices as follows:

Cereal.	Average price received by farmer during 3 pre-war years (per bu.)	Price received by farmer now (per bu.)	Percentage Increase of present over pre-war price.
Wheat ...	$0.869	$2.006	131
Corn	.665	1.388	109
Oats	.404	.787	105
Barley ...	.642	1.319	105

From these figures it is clear that the price of no other grain has advanced so much respecting net return to the farmer as compared with pre-war conditions, as has that of wheat. Transportation difficulties have operated to create higher prices to the consumer because it has not been possible for the railroads to get grain to primary markets as fast as the demand for export and domestic use could and would have absorbed.

VOL. XXXII ST. JOE DeKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, APRIL 4 1918 NO. 14

FROM The BOYS in SERVICE

Sunday, March 24, 1918.
Corpus Christi, Texas.

Dear Parents:

Well this is another beautiful day and I trust this letter finds you as well as it leaves me, fine and happy. It is pretty hot just now, 3 o'clock and 83 in the shade. I went to church this morning at eleven o'clock. Next Sunday the Knight Templar services are held in the same church, Presbyterian Hospitality shown a soldier here is fine, people shake hands and welcome you and invite you out in automobiles to see the city and ride around the bay, home to dinner, out to parties, etc., which we all participate with great joy.

The scene y along the bay is fine and a great place to bathe, the water is salty and so clear, one can wade out to his chin and see your feet. Salt gets in your eyes but you soon learn to shut your eyes when dipping the waves. We get swimming instructions along with our military training, one can swim three times farther in salt than in fresh water, but afterwards it is necessary to get a shampoo for salt water leaves the hair gummy.

The song birds are singing here. There are millions of summer birds plants and palms. The palms are beautiful when kept trimmed. Mulberry trees are thick and ripe wild cheeries too. There are many beautiful bungalows, people seem to try and out do his neighbor in neatness and in their flower beds. I've seen all kinds, canaries, blue birds, red birds, wrens, and many other kinds. There are hundreds of wild geese and say, they are beautiful when doing squads right and left, when the sun shines on their silvery sides Cranes are as thick as flies. I saw some speckled trout that would average one and a half pound each and they sold for thirty cents apiece. Haven't tried to hook any of them yet, they troll for same out of motor boats. The natives make a living by fishing and selling to markets. The fishing boats are very interesting to me, would love to go out with them.

Well, our regiment is now filled up to war strength, I am trained down to hard blue steel and never drew a healthier breath in my life than right now. I am the happiest man in the army when on the field of range rifle practice, am trying for expert sharp shooting and I already gained the title of excellent, at 100—200 and 300 yards to kill twelve men every fifteen seconds and laying down when skirmishing. We run on a skirmish line and drop to the ground and shoot, and shoot to kill every time. This fills one with inspirations and courage as he lays there shoulder to shoulder and about fifteen to twenty-five thousand men in skirmish line, all doing the same actions with perfect regularity.

Air-planes are thick here lately they fly over to our camp from Kelly Field, San Antonio, Texas, a distance of about one hundred fifty miles in very short time stay awhile and fly back. They say flying is very fascinating after the first flight.

Well I will close for this time.

Lovingly, Merritt A. Hull,
Co. F. 5th., Regiment Engineers

Camp Greenleaf.
Ft. Oglethorpe, Ga.

Dear Editor:

Camp Greenleaf. Just two words, but what a wonderful place they represent. It is the home of 80,000 men. Indiana is better represented here than any other state in the union. It is a great city by itself, where everyone lives, dresses and eats alike and where each individual is training to take a part in the greatest war the world has ever known. At dawn when the sun risese from behind great pine forests and sends its rays across the camp upon hundreds and hundreds of tents each in its exact spot like a grest checker board, with everything quiet save for the warbling of many feathered songsters, it is inspiring and makes me glad that it is my city, my camp and my home.

Soon a bugle blazes forth first call for revellie, the day has begun for the soldier boy and within five minutes the camp is awake, and woe be unto him who doesn't get up. After mess everybody takes up his work, whatever it may be, some with pick and shovel, others have a saw. The teamsters are busy hauling supplies, great U. S. auto trucks go rattling by, carrying tents, ammunitions, etc., there are no idlers, everybody works unless he is sick. You hear the tramp tramp of many feet and a regiment goes marching by on their way for a four hour drill. Our officers are all fine fellows. We eat our meals in mess shacks built of pine lumber, with windows on all sides, furnished with long tables and seats. Every company has its own mess shack and the food is all inspected by U. S. army inspectors. The shower baths are in great long buildings at the lower end of the streets where we splash and yell and have a good time. Everyone is kept clean to the 'steenth degree.

Every regiment has its Y. M. C. A. where we get the best of entertainment. Then comes retreat when Old Glory is taken down, the sun sets beyond the distant hills and the day is over. Peace, contentment and quiet comes over the camp and as the southern harvest moon goes sailing across the sky we lie down in the knowledge that Uncle Sam is taking care of us and praying that our Father in Heaven will so keep us and guide us, that some day we may come marching back carrying the stars and stripes once more victorious, and that we may meet old friends again to be with them until we cross the great divide and the final taps are sounded, "so mote it be."

I will tell you of my personal experience since we landed in Chattanooga, Tenn., Wednesday March 20, about 10:30 A. M. We had about five hours beforo our train left for camp so we took a car and went out to Lookout Mountain and walked to the top of it. It is a wonderful sight. When we arrived in camp we took a walk around the Chickamauga battle grounds. There are several monuments erected there by the several states of the union, I noticed the one put up by the state of "Indiana." I will close for this time wishing you good luck. I am

U. S. Army Hospital

March 16, 1918.

Dear Mother and All:

Received the first letter from you this afternoon since I left home. Have not received any mail from Georgia yet.

Was surely shocked to read that the Big Four burned to the ground, I was dumbfounded for a couple of hours afterwards. Send me all the particulars besides what you did send.

Yes you bet, I have seen the most wonderful scenery since I left home and the trip from Oglethorpe to Hoboken, N. Y., was great. Went through the Blue Ridge mountains, crossed the Potomac, saw the white house after night, went through Washington, Philadelphia and Baltimore. Have been to New York six times, see th statue of Liberty about every five minutes in the day and can now look out the window (8:00 p. m.) and see it all lit up, it surely is wonderful. Can look out another window and see New York's sky line and the thousands of lights in their windows, saw beautiful Broadway after night, crossed the Brooklyn bridge. My I wish you could see the ocean liners out in the Harbor all lit up and hear the whistles of the tug and ferry boats.

Well this is some busy island, in reality three islands compose Ellis Island and each island is connected with a bridge. The naval hospital is on number one, the army hospital on number two and the sailors and marine home on number three. But on this island is where most of the business is done. I was at first assigned to an Orderly position in ward D, but have been transferred to the officers headquarters, I like the job, so everything is O. K. Twenty of us sleep in a large room, we have regular beds etc., and the meals are surely fine. You will be surprised to know that only 107 men were picked from 4,300 to be sent here. We have to be absolutely clean and account for taking at least three baths a week, two changes of under clothing, six changes of socks, a hair cut every ten days and our face clean shayen. If pimples break out, we are given an electric massage and treated. If ony one spits on the floor in offices, corridors, wards, etc., they will be court-martialed. Shoes are shined every morning, pants kept pressed, hair combed good, etc. Every fellow here is an intelligent looking person and not a one is afraid to work

The government has just recently made these hospitals, all base hospitals where the wounded men from France will be put. There are 250 wounded men now on their way here. Next week there will be one hundred more recruits shipped here, and as we are the first medical students to arrive here we will be in a position to receive non-commissions soon, if we show that we deserve same. I am going to try real hard for one, and am satisfied that I can make it. Well I will write more next time. Answer whenever you can.

As ever,
Paul Curie.

Camp Greenleaf.
March 8, 1918.

Dear Friend:

As I have nothing to do any more until 11:30 I thought that I might write a few lines to you as it is about time I think. Well Clarance I am well satisfied with army life. I think that it is simply great. There sure is some sight seeing here. It is very mountainous and rocky. There are some places here that are almost solid rock. You thought that your farm had lots of rocks on it but I wish that you could only see this camp and then you would see rock for sure.

The United States owns twenty-five thousand acres of ground here and there are forty-five thousand boys a prison with five thousand Germans in it, so I think we have quite a camp here, don't you? Say, my tent mate and friend just came in and he said that they were going to open a new mess house and he is appointed chief cook and he said that he wanted me to go with him and that will mean second cook for me. We are in the same mess hall now but I am only an assistant cook now I do not have to wash a pan or anything only just help with the cooking. I have to get up at three o'clock in the morning to start breakfast until the other chief cook comes and then he helps finish. We have just even two hundred ninety-one to cook for, some family I think.

The climate here Clarance gets neither too cold or too warm during the day but at night it gets quite chilly and damp. We very seldom have a fire our tent that we sleep in for it is hardly cold enough for that. As for me crossing the pond I kon't know anything about it. We don't even know when we are detailed out to a camp until we get there. When you write be sure to let me know how mother is and tell her not to worry about me for I am alright. Well Clarance I cannot write you all that I know it would take too long, so I will have to divide up and write the rest some other time, so I will close with best wishes from your old hired hand.

HUNS PAY DEARLY FOR EVERY GAIN

DETAILS OF FIRST WEEK OF THE GREAT BATTLE TELL OF BRITISH HEROISM.

OVERWHELMED BY NUMBERS

Fiercely Contesting Each Position, Haig's Men Fell Back in Good Order, Mowing Down the Advancing Foe and Often Counter-Attacking.

London.—Details of the first week of the great battle in France show that, while the fighting has been more severe than in any previous offensive, there has been no cause for pessimism.

The German losses have been terrific, probably 250,000 casualties having been suffered by the kaiser's hosts. At such cost they won less than one-third of the ground on which they had counted. The morale of the British troops has been perfect throughout and they have fought magnificently.

Million Germans in Action.

These facts stand out:

It is known that at least 1,000,000 Germans were engaged on the whole front of attack. In the Somme area not less than 52 army divisions were identified. The British line suffered its most severe buffeting in this stretch, but was firm everywhere.

The Germans believed that a loss of 500,000 would be a cheap price for success in the west, but with a loss already of 250,000 there is no prospect of their attaining the victory they seek.

They regained all the ground lost in the Cambrai battle and have taken back sections of the territory taken from them in the Somme offensive of last year.

The fighting was not by any means a continual German advance. The British counter-attacked heavily and fought for every foot of ground.

Details of the Fighting.

In one battle on the extreme left the Germans employed not less than nine divisions in an effort to break through. For three days the three British divisions held them at bay. Finally, under weight of numbers, the British retired behind the line marked by the ruined villages of Bullecourt, East Noguell and Croiselles.

The next morning the Germans renewed the attack, striking northward from Fontainelles and Croiselles and westward from Cherissy. They drove in mass formation, wave after wave, toward the heights between Henin-sur-Cojeul to Henin hill.

Two hours of drum fire, in which gas and high-explosive shells were mingled, preceded the infantry attack. From eight o'clock in the morning until noon continuous waves of gray-clad troops stormed the heights.

British machine guns posted on the ridge swept down line after line of Germans. By three o'clock in the afternoon the Teutons had succeeded in pressing past Henin hill on both sides and threatened to cut off the machine gunners posted on the crests. Not until then did the latter retire and rejoin the main British force.

Similar fighting was going on at the same time on the right wing. Tremendous pressure was brought to bear around St. Leger, Vaulx and Vraucourt. It lasted all day.

At times under the German blows the British line sagged heavily, but at no point did it give way.

Desperate Defense of Vaulx.

A bitter battle was fought for possession of Vaulx, but British machine gunners posted in the ruins of the village held the Germans at bay. A ruined factory served as a fortress despite the shelling to which it was subjected.

Not until late in the afternoon was it impossible for the British to hold the town longer. Even then the retreat only went for a thousand yards. The British rear guard fought every step of the way, and, returning to the main body, a counter-attack was launched against the Germans in possession of Vaulx and the village was regained.

The fighting continued all night. Finally Vaulx had to be abandoned before heavy night attacks, but only because German forces had pushed past further up the line and were driving to the attack of Mory.

Another bitter struggle was fought around Croiselles. At Mory Scottish and English troops inflicted tremendous losses on the Germans.

Sunday Battle South of Peronne.

The fighting Sunday was tremendous. All day long heavy forces of Germans endeavored to force a crossing of the Somme south of Peronne, while further along the line they concentrated their efforts against Bapaume.

Repeatedly German engineers attempted to throw pontoon bridges across the river. On the near-by heights British field guns firing practically at point range smashed every effort. On some occasions British infantry, counter-attacking, dashed into the water to fight the Germans.

With the object of capturing Urvillers and Essigny, southwest of St. Quentin, the Germans employed at least six divisions, or 72,000 men of storming troops, the 50th, 45th (reserves), 11th, 88th, 187th anr 238th, in the proportion of one division to every British battalion. The average width of each attack was 2,000 yards.

Ten Tanks Wreak Havoc Amid Foe.

Passing through Urvillers, there was a bloody struggle in a chalk quarry, where many German dead now lie. After the Germans had come some way forward ten British tanks drove into them and shattered some of their battalions with their machine-gun fire, dispersing groups of the advancing units.

The British fought many rear guard actions and made numerous counter-attacks in the neighborhood of Roisel, falling back to the line of the Somme only when new masses of Germans passed through those battalions which they had not met and beaten.

Between Gozeaucourt and Epephy occurred a most desperate struggle. The Germans attacked in overwhelming strength. Their previous bombardment had had little effect and the British troops had suffered but slightly.

The weather was misty, and, screened by this mist, the Germans were on top of the British before the latter were aware of it. In dense formation they came on, offering excellent targets. Ground was yielded by the British only under pressure of overwhelming numbers.

Heroic Deeds of the British.

Fighting Saturday between Arras and Bapaume for possession of the heights between the Cojeul and Sensee rivers was especially bitter. Outnumbered eight to one, the British troops clung to their positions to the last.

In Gauche wood, where Scots and South Africans were placed, another terrific struggle ensued. The Germans several times managed to reach the wood but were repeatedly thrown back. Their losses in killed were especially heavy, as they came on in mass formation. Attempt after attempt was frustrated.

From a height below Gauche wood known as Chapel hill to Epephy three German divisions and parts of a fourth were thrown against the British. At one point the enemy was actually among the British advance posts before he was discovered. The fog thoroughly screened him.

Waves of Germans flowed past the farm and around it, but in the farm itself the Leicesters held out, fighting and refusing to surrender until every man was killed or so severely wounded he could fight no more.

The British showed the greatest strength between Bapaume and Peronne and above Bapaume as far as Arras. The Germans, however, concerned with the southern flank, at the Franco-British junction point, concentrated their most terrific blows against the Peronne-Ham-Chauny line, relying on the necessity of an automatic British withdrawal in the north if their line was bent or broken in the south.

Bapaume was an obstacle on the northern side, to capture which they sacrificed thousands of their best troops. Rivers of blood were shed for the town's possession in a combat that lasted almost all night, until the British finally yielded the ruins, after having exacted a fearful price.

Kaiser Orders Jubilation.

The kaiser was with Feld Marshal von Hindenburg in Peronne surveying the bloody fields where thousands of his best fighting men were killed or maimed before the British finally withdrew. The emperor ordered a general jubilation throughout the empire, rockets and flags and a holiday for the children being the chief symbols of celebration. He conferred a gold inlaid iron cross on Hindenburg.

Wilhelm also sent dispatches to the empress telling of the progress made by his armies.

ROLL STEEL FOR $215 WEEK

Many Workers in St. Louis Mills Average $5,000 a Year, Official Says.

St. Louis.—Rollers employed at the St. Louis and Granite City plants of the National Enameling and Stamping company are making as much as $215 a week, working eight hours a day, an official of the company said.

He explained that rollers were paid on a tonnage basis, and that such a figure was unusual, but estimated that many of the 175 rollers employed in the two plants average $4,000 to $5,000 a year.

Rolling steel is one of the forms of labor requiring the highest degree of skill, although men sometimes serve their apprenticeship in three or four years. The work consists of superintending the heating of steel bars that are to be rolled, adjusting the rolls and feeding the steel into them.

HELP WAR ON PRAIRIE DOGS

Government to Assist in Fighting Rodents Whose Depredations Menace Food Productions.

Santa Fe, N. M.—Co-operation of the United States department of agriculture has been promised farmers of New Mexico in their war on prairie dogs and other rodents whose depredations are a growing menace to the food production of the state.

The New Mexico State Council of Defense has called upon all county defense councils to furnish maps of counties with the area infested by the rodents plainly marked. A campaign will be launched shortly to treat all the infected areas with poison, furnished by the department of agriculture.

A scheme is on foot to take tin ore from Bolivia via the Panama canal to Jamaica bay, where a European firm of tin smelters has just purchased nine acres of land.

IF WOMEN SHOULD BE NEEDED IN FARM WORK

English Women Learning How to Do Dairy Work Should They Be Needed to Replace Men and Boys.

WOMEN WORKERS NEED TRAINING

Essential Points Given for Consideration by Department of Agriculture.

URGE CAUTION IN PREPARING

Volunteers Should Be Organized in Units and Provision Made for Their Own Living Quarters—Matron for Each Unit.

PRELIMINARY TRAINING

If it becomes necessary in case of an acute farm labor stringency to accept woman volunteers for farming operations other than the lighter ones to which they are accustomed, some sort of preliminary training will be necessary to utilize the large class of woman volunteers from the cities who are unfamiliar with farm work. This article points out some suggestions and precautions that should be taken into consideration in preparing women for these tasks. The suggestions given here have been obtained in a study of this problem by specialists of the United States department of agriculture, both in this country and in other countries. Many of the suggestions are based on the experiences of England, which has trained and is using 300,000 women on farms.

Women should not be trained to go on farms before there is an actual and imperative need for their services. The department of agriculture hopes that it will not be necessary to employ women in heavier lines of farm work than they have been accustomed to doing. If, to save the food harvest, women are needed in the heavier operations and the development and training of unskilled woman workers appears advisable, the following points should be taken into consideration:

No woman should be accepted who is not at least eighteen years of age. The wisest policy would be first to register those women who are willing to undertake this kind of work, having them indicate their previous training and experience, kind of farm work they desire to take up, and length of time they can devote to it.

Two Weeks' Training.

Before going on the farm, the women should if possible undertake a course of training extended over two weeks or more under a skilled instructor. This course might be given at an agricultural or a woman's college, agricultural schools, or on a farm donated by some patriotic individual as a practice farm. In some instances the course might be under the auspices of the extension division of the agricultural college. Care should be taken that no institutions are built up to perform functions that might be performed by institutions already in existence.

This two weeks of training would give opportunity to eliminate those not physically able to endure farm labor, and also those whose mental make-up is such as to make them unavailable. It would also give them sufficient skill so that they would be acceptable to the farmers. Such experience in obtaining woman laborers as has been had indicates that the farmer usually is not willing to take woman farm workers into his home, and therefore the women will have to be organized in units and provide for their own living quarters. This fact restricts the types of farm enterprises in which the women will be able to engage to such as are very intensive in character, and highly localized. The types of farm enterprises of this kind would be such crops as apples, peaches, grapes, onions, cabbage, potatoes, strawberries, etc. The training should be such that when the women went to the farmers they would have at least sufficient skill to be acceptable to the farmer.

Ascertain if Needed.

Before training the volunteers some method should be devised for ascertaining whether there is a demand for the woman workers in the kind of work they are preparing to undertake. This information could be obtained from the state agricultural college and the state farm help specialist employed by this department. Great care should be exercised not to prepare women to go on farms before there is an actual demand for their labor.

After completing the training, the women should not be sent into the localities where they are to work until some one has preceded them to make arrangements for their housing and to determine the basis of wages, etc. In most instances the living quarters would consist of a camping outfit, as such quarters as they might obtain in the community would be the least desirable of those in the community. Generally it would be desirable to have one person in the group who would do no farm work, but would act as general chaperon and matron and would see to the domestic phases of their living and welfare.

Aiding the Labor Supply.

The departments of agriculture and labor through representatives of the various states co-operating with the agricultural colleges and other agencies are doing the following things to aid the farm labor supply, according to a recent statement of Secretary Houston: (a) Making a survey of the farm-labor situation in each community with a view to discovering possible surpluses of labor in order to be ready to assist in furnishing labor wherever it is needed; (b) assisting again in shifting labor from community to community and from state to state, as in past years; (c) promoting fuller co-operation among farmers in the same community; (d) making available, so far as possible, high school boys in rural districts who have had experience in farming and who are not normally regularly or fully employed in farming operations; (e) making every effort to see that there is no obstacle in the way of the production of a larger supply of farm machinery and its fuller use as a supplement to hand labor.

"Who Cares if Bones Ache?"

Thousands of women in all parts of the country are volunteering to help out on farms that will be short of man power this season. The letter which follows is typical of many which are coming to the United States department of agriculture. Department officials do not believe that women will be required in the heavier farming operations, but in the lighter labor on fruit and truck farms and in helping farm women with their tasks there will be work for women hands.

"I want to inquire where I can volunteer my services in the agricultural labor for my country's service. I know this work is just as important as fighting, and as I was raised in the country and can drive a horse and am familiar with all the rounds of farm life, I feel I would soon qualify. My husband is now doing his 'bit' aboard a transport.

"Napoleon is quoted as saying, 'A man fights on his stomach,' so I would like to work to enable our men to become good fighters. The German Bismarck in his world plans once said: 'America is a fine fat pig to be stuck later.' So I guess the kaiser thought. I would even enjoy helping raise some American fat pigs to defeat them in their designs.

"Hoping you answer quickly and tell me where I can enlist my services, I remain, Very sincerely,

"——."

Make Farming a Business.

A young man who is now starting to farm needs to know his business. Through farm management demonstrations the county agent can show him his labor income, that is, what he had left of his receipts after paying expenses and allowing for interest on the investment and can show him how his labor income compares with those of the most successful farmers in that community. The showing will help him make a study of his farm business and to determine upon changes that should be made to make it more profitable.

YOUR LOYALTY TO COUNTRY'S CAUSE

ARE YOU MAKING SACRIFICES EQUIVALENT TO THOSE OF OUR SOLDIERS?

ALL CAN FIND WAY TO HELP

Make No Ridiculous Reservations; Hold Back Nothing; Share Your Money, Your Food and Your Clothing to Aid the Great War.

(By VIRGINIA TERHUNE VAN DE WATER of the Vigilantes.)

A good woman was discussing the rules of the food administration.

"I am doing a lot for my country," she said, "but there are certain trifles that I do not intend to give up. Such as white bread and bacon."

"No," she said in response to my astonished look, "I mean to have white bread when I want it. Why should I eat corn bread and other substitutes? I like white bread just as much as the soldiers and sailors do. And, anyway, what difference can it make if I use a little white flour and a few slices of bacon every day? I am only one person."

Only one of millions! Suppose they all took that attitude!

"I am no slacker," she added. "I work at the Red Cross four afternoons of each week, and I have made dozens of knitted things for the soldiers. But I draw the line at bacon and white bread and rolls."

Is this patriotism? I remembered the text: "These things ought ye to have done, and not to have left the other undone."

Another good woman was talking of the next Liberty Loan drive.

"Well," she declared, "they need not come to me for help! I am a business woman, and I have lost money on heatless Mondays, and since the government has made me do that I do not propose to help with their Liberty loan. I love my country, and I am a Red Cross worker, and all that—but there is a limit."

Should Be No Limit.

A limit! Is there any limit to what she would do if her nearest and dearest were fighting for his life? Would she stop to argue that she had given the suffered expensive woolen underwear, but that she drew the line at the renunciation of certain comforts so that he might have them? Would she be considered a good wife or mother or daughter if she held this attitude towards husband, child or parent?

Let us stop all these ridiculous reservations, these talks of what we will do and won't do. Let us hold back nothing. Do the women who are sending their sons abroad hold back anything? Do these sons grudge risking their beautiful youth, their lives, for their country? Yet some people hesitate at white bread and bacon, and refuse to buy Liberty bonds!

The last-named hesitation is not only unpatriotic, but it is absurd. Later we will know the meaning of the expression, "What I give I have." The money we invest in Liberty bonds will be ours when other money that we now have is gone.

All such talk as I have quoted is wickedly unpatriotic. Let us give as our sons give—ungrudgingly, proudly, because we are counted worthy to make sacrifices for the greatest crusade against evil that the world has ever known.

Make It An Honorable Service.

What would the Son of Righteousness say to our hesitation about trifling luxuries? He died for his cause. We women are not called upon to do that. (Some of us may wish that we were.) But we are called to sacrifice our selfishness for it.

I am not making light of the wonderful work done by those women who toil at Red Cross stations; I am not forgetting the noble and vast army of wives, mothers, sisters and sweethearts who stop at nothing in their desire to help end the war honorably.

But I hope that such sentences as I have quoted go no further than the tip of the tongue. If they do, shame to the speakers. And shame to us who let such speech pass unreproved.

"His very living—such was Christ's giving."

We women "have not yet resisted unto blood." But some of our men have, and—God help us!—many more may have to. Can we then endure the ignominy of remembering that even in our inner hearts we have paused to consider what delicacies we may use? Shall we not—in the language of our dear fighting boys—"cut out" all doubtful articles? And let us make of the trifling duty an honorable service. The cause ennobles all that it touches.

The big problem now faced by women is house cleaning.

Only in South Bend, where it is extensively used, is "SALSAD" appreciated.

It is the one preparation which neutralizes grease and dirt, causing it to melt away, and beautifies instead of harming woodwork—and the hands. In the laundry "SALSAD" is a delight.

You will not waste "SALSAD" because it is put up in tiny packets. One cleans a room. Two for the family wash—one half the soap saved.

Here the housewife buys "SALSAD" of her grocer in a 25 cent package. On account of parcel post rates, however, the way to buy "SALSAD" by mail is in the $1.00 package—100 packets.

"SOMEWHERE IN FRANCE" EMPEY FIRST HEARS THE BIG GUNS BOOMING.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army.

CHAPTER II.

—2—

Blighty to Rest Billets.

The next morning the captain sent for me and informed me: "Empey, as a recruiting sergeant you are a washout," and sent me to a training depot.

After arriving at this place, I was hustled to the quartermaster stores and received an awful shock. The quartermaster sergeant spread a waterproof sheet on the ground and commenced throwing a miscellaneous assortment of straps, buckles and other paraphernalia into it. I thought he would never stop, but when the pile reached to my knees he paused long enough to say, "Next, No. 5217, 'Arris, B company." I gazed in bewilderment at the pile of junk in front of me, and then my eyes wandered around looking for the wagon which was to carry it to barracks. I was rudely brought to earth by the "quarter" exclaiming, "'Ere, you, 'op it; tyke it aw'y; blind my eyes, 'e's looking for 'is batman to 'elp 'im carry it."

Struggling under the load, with frequent pauses for rest, I reached our barracks (large car barns), and my platoon leader came to the rescue. It was a marvel to me how quickly he assembled the equipment. After he had completed the task, he showed me how to adjust it on my person. Pretty soon I stood before him a proper Tommy Atkins in heavy marching order, feeling like an overloaded camel.

On my feet were heavy-soled boots, studded with hobnails, the toes and heels of which were re-enforced by steel half-moons. My legs were incased in woolen puttees, olive drab in color, with my trousers overlapping them at the top. Then a woolen khaki tunic, under which was a bluish gray woolen shirt, minus a collar; beneath this shirt a woolen belly band about six inches wide, held in place by tie strings of white tape. On my head was a heavy woolen trench cap, with huge earlaps buttoned over the top. Then the equipment: A canvas belt, with ammunition pockets, and two wide canvas straps like suspenders, called "D" straps, fastened to the belt in front, passing over each shoulder, crossing in the middle of my back, and attached by buckles to the rear of the belt. On the right side of the belt hung a water bottle, covered with felt; on the left side was my bayonet and scabbard, and intrenching tool handle, this handle strapped to the bayonet scabbard. In the rear was my intrenching tool, carried in a canvas case. This tool was a combination pick and spade. A canvas haversack was strapped to the left side of the belt, while on my back was the pack, also of canvas, held in place by two canvas straps over the shoulders; suspended on the bottom of the pack was my mess tin or canteen in a neat little canvas case. My waterproof sheet, looking like a jelly roll, was strapped on top of the pack, with a wooden stick for cleaning the breach of the rifle projecting from each end. On a lanyard around my waist hung a huge jackknife with a can-opener attachment. The pack contained my overcoat, an extra pair of socks, change of underwear, hold all (containing knife, fork, spoon, comb, toothbrush, lather brush, shaving soap, and a razor made of tin, with "Made in England" stamped on the blade; when trying to shave with this it made you wish that you were at war with Patagonia, so that you could have a "hollow ground" stamped "Made in Germany"); then your housewife, button-cleaning outfit, consisting of a brass button stick, two stiff brushes, and a box of "Soldiers' Friend" paste; then a shoe brush and a box of dubbin, a writing pad, indelible pencil, envelopes, and pay book, and personal belongings, such as a small mirror, a decent razor and a sheaf of unanswered letters, and fags. In your haversack you carry your iron rations, meaning a tin of bully beef, four biscuits and a can containing tea, sugar and Oxo cubes; a couple of pipes and a pack of shag, a tin of rifle oil, and a pull-through. Tommy generally carries the oil with his rations; it gives the cheese a sort of sardine taste.

Add to this a first-aid pouch and a long, ungainly rifle patterned after the Daniel Boone period, and you have an idea of a British soldier in Blighty.

Before leaving for France, this rifle is taken from him and he is issued with a Lee-Enfield short trench rifle and a ration bag.

In France he receives two gas helmets, a sheepskin coat, rubber mackintosh, steel helmet, two blankets, tear-shell goggles, a balaclava helmet, gloves and a tin of antifrostbite grease which is excellent for greasing the boots. Add to this the weight of his rations, and can you blame Tommy for growling at a twenty-kilo route march?

Having served as sergeant major in the United States cavalry, I tried to tell the English drill sergeants their business, but it did not work. They immediately put me as batman in their mess. Many a greasy dish of stew was accidentally spilled over them.

I would sooner fight than be a waiter, so when the order came through from headquarters calling for a draft of 250 re-enforcements for France, I volunteered.

Then we went before the M. O. (medical officer) for another physical examination. This was very brief. He asked our names and numbers and said "Fit," and we went out to fight.

We were put into troop trains and sent to Southampton, where we detrained, and had our trench rifles issued to us. Then in columns of twos we went up the gangplank of a little steamer lying alongside the dock.

At the head of the gangplank there was an old sergeant, who directed that we line ourselves along both rails of the ship. Then he ordered us to take life belts from the racks overhead and put them on. I have crossed the ocean several times and knew I was not seasick, but when I buckled on that life belt I had a sensation of sickness.

After we got out into the stream all I could think of was that there were a million German submarines with a torpedo on each, across the warhead of which was inscribed my name and address.

After five hours we came alongside a pier and disembarked. I had attained another one of my ambitions. I was "somewhere in France." We slept in the open that night on the side of the road. About six the next morning we were ordered to entrain. I looked around for the passenger coaches, but all I could see on the siding were cattle cars. We climbed into these. On the side of each car was a sign reading "Hommes 40, Cheveaux 8." When we got inside of the cars, we thought that perhaps the sign painter had reversed the order of things. After 48 hours in these trucks we detrained at Rouen. At this place we went through an intensive training for ten days.

The training consisted of the rudiments of trench warfare. Trenches had been dug, with barbed wire entanglements, bombing saps, dugouts, observation posts and machine gun emplacements. We were given a smattering of trench cooking, sanitation, bomb throwing, reconnoitering, listening posts, constructing and repairing barbed wire, "carrying in" parties, methods used in attack and defense, wiring parties, mass formation, and the procedure for poison-gas attacks.

On the tenth day we again met our friends "Hommes 40, Cheveaux 8." Thirty-six hours more of misery, and we arrived at the town of F——.

After unloading our rations and equipment, we lined up on the road in columns of fours waiting for the order to march.

A dull rumbling could be heard. The sun was shining. I turned to the man on my left and asked, "What's the noise, Bill?" He did not know, but his face was of a pea-green color. Jim, on my right, also did not know, but suggested that I "awsk" the sergeant.

Coming towards us was an old grizzled sergeant, properly fed up with the war, so I "awsked" him.

"Think it's going to rain, sergeant?"

He looked at me in contempt, and grunted, "'Ow's it a-goin' ter rain with the bloomin' sun a-shinin'?" I looked guilty.

"Them's the guns up the line, me lad, and you'll get enough of 'em before you gets back to Blighty."

My knees seemed to wilt, and I squeaked out a weak "Oh!"

Then we started our march up to the line in ten-kilo treks. After the first day's march we arrived at our rest billets. In France they call them rest billets, because while in them Tommy works seven days a week and on the eighth day of the week he is given twenty-four hours "on his own."

Our billet was a spacious affair, a large barn on the left side of the road, which had one hundred entrances, ninety-nine for shells, rats, wind and rain, and the hundredth one for Tommy. I was tired out, and using my shrapnel-proof helmet (shrapnel proof until a piece of shrapnel hits it), or tin hat, for a pillow, lay down in the straw, and was soon fast asleep. I must have slept about two hours, when I awoke with a prickling sensation all over me. As I thought, the straw had worked through my uniform. I woke up the fellow lying on my left, who had been up the line before, and asked him:

"Does the straw bother you, mate? It's worked through my uniform and I can't sleep."

In a sleepy voice he answered, "That ain't straw, them's cooties."

From that time on my friends the "cooties" were constantly with me.

"Cooties," or body lice, are the bane of Tommy's existence.

The aristocracy of the trenches very seldom call them "cooties," they speak of them as fleas.

To an American flea means a small insect armed with a bayonet, who is wont to jab it into you and then hop-skip and jump to the next place to be attacked. There is an advantage in having fleas on you instead of "cooties" in that in one of his extended jumps said flea is liable to land on the fellow next to you; he has the typical energy and push of the American, while the "cootie" has the bulldog tenacity of the Englishman; he holds on and consolidates or digs in until his meal is finished.

There is no way to get rid of them permanently. No matter how often you bathe, and that is not very often, or how many times you change your underwear, your friends the "cooties" are always in evidence. The billets are infested with them, especially so if there is straw on the floor.

I have taken a bath and put on brand-new underwear; in fact, a complete change of uniform, and then turned in for the night. The next morning my shirt would be full of them. It is a common sight to see eight or ten soldiers sitting under a tree with their shirts over their knees engaging in a "shirt hunt."

At night about half an hour before "lights out," you can see the Tommies grouped around a candle, trying, in its dim light, to rid their underwear of the vermin. A popular and very quick method is to take your shirt and drawers, and run the seams back and forward in the flame from a candle and burn them out. This practice is dangerous, because you are liable to burn holes in the garments if you are not careful.

The Author's Identification Disk.

Recruits generally sent to Blighty for a brand of insect powder advertised as "Good for body lice." The advertisement is quite right; the powder is good for "cooties;" they simply thrive on it.

The older men of our battalion were wiser and made scratchers out of wood. These were rubbed smooth with a bit of stone or sand to prevent splinters. They were about eighteen inches long, and Tommy guarantees that a scratcher of this length will reach any part of the body which may be attacked. Some of the fellows were lazy and only made their scratchers twelve inches, but many a night when on guard, looking over the top from the fire step of the front-line trench, they would have given a thousand "quid" for the other six inches.

Once while we were in rest billets an Irish Hussar regiment camped in an open field opposite our billet. After they had picketed and fed their horses, a general shirt hunt took place. The troopers ignored the call "Dinner up," and kept on with their search for big game. They had a curious method of procedure. They hung their shirts over a hedge and beat them with their entrenching tool handles.

I asked one of them why they didn't pick them off by hand, and he answered, "We haven't had a bath for nine weeks or a change of clabber. If I tried to pick the 'cooties' off my shirt, I would be here for duration of war." After taking a close look at his shirt, I agreed with him; it was alive.

In the next installment Sergeant Empey tell of the realization of his ambition—his arrival in a first line trench—and of how he wished he were back in Jersey City.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By E. O. SELLERS, Acting Director of the Sunday School Course of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 7.

JESUS SETS MEN FREE.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 7:1-37.

GOLDEN TEXT—If the son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed.—John 8:36.

DEVOTIONAL READING—Psa. 72:1-17.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Matt. 15:1-31; II Cor. 3:17, 18; Gal. 5:1-25.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus and the deaf man

MEMORY VERSE—He hath done all things well, he maketh even the deaf to hear and the dumb to speak.—Mark 7:37.

SENIOR AND ADULT TOPIC—Christian liberty.

This lesson deals with the last of those four events which mark the crisis in the life of our Lord at Capernaum. It occurred just before the third period of his Galilean ministry and the time of his final departure for Jerusalem. We have seen what the attitude of Jesus was toward the law of his nation. In this lesson we see his attitude toward the rabbinical traditions of the people which were the opinions of men and not the law of God. Just so many today look upon the forms and ceremonies of the church as being verily the law of God. Moreover, these traditions were made a pretext whereby men evaded the law. So today we find men very religious and punctilious in their churchly duties, who fail miserably in their application of the moral code to conduct. The analysis falls into four general divisions: One, the accusation, (vv. 1-5.; two, the answer, (vv. 6-13); three, the application, (vv. 14-23)., and four, the illustration, (vv. 24-37).

1. The Accusation. (vv. 1-5). The growing hatred of the Pharisees, led them to make long journeys from Jerusalem that they might spy on Jesus and find a pretext for accusation. While they were studying him, they revealed their ideas of the kingdom of God. They took special notice that the disciples of Jesus ate without washing their hands. We must not understand this to mean so much the removal of defilement, as the neglect of a ceremonial observance over which the Pharisees were punctilious, (vv. 3, 4). Verses three and four illuminate certain traditions to which the Jews adhered tenaciously. Thus exemplified we can see that their ideas of man's relation to God were largely a matter of external ceremony. Purity to them was an outward matter largely governed by the traditions of men, (v. 4).

II. The Answer (v. 6-13). The answer of Jesus reveals the very opposite ideal. He begins by calling the Pharisees hypocrites. A hypocrite is a play actor—one who hides behind a mask. Applying the prophecy of Isaiah, Jesus plainly tells the Pharisees that they are hiding their true character behind the mask of ceremonial cleansing. Such play acting is but a poor imitation of the real heart condition demanded of God, (Psa. 51:10). Their hearts were far from God, even though with their lips they professed to serve him. The love we express to God consists not in ritualistic worship, but in doing his will from the heart.

III. The Application, (v. 14-23). Jesus takes advantage of this discussion, and, turning to the multitude, upon whom the Pharisees would bind a grievous burden of ceremonialism and falsehood (Matt. 23:4), warns them that it is not so much that which enters into a man that defiles him, as that which issues from him (v. 15). It seems quite natural that in their perplexity the disciples should ask Jesus what he meant by that. In his reply (vv. 18-23), Jesus shows very clearly that "the issues of life" (Prov. 4:23), reveal the corruption which is within. (See Matt. 12:34, 35; Gen. 6:5; James 3:10-12). If the heart be not cleansed, what will it avail if we wash the hands? What then is the application for this present day? Clearly we are taught the danger of lip service without a change of heart. Substituting good for the best is sin. Forms and ceremonies are good and have their place; they are significant for they are important teaching factors; but they must not be substituted for a pure heart. We must beware lest we hide behind such a mask.

There is here also plain teaching as to Jesus' estimate of the Pentateuch and inferentially of the prophecy of Isaiah. He specifically calls it "the Word of God." Surely we can accept his estimate as contrasted with the tradition of the elders or the "consensus of modern thought."

Less talk and more walk,
Less wishing and more doing,
Less preaching and more practicing,
Less organization and more of the spirit.

Finally, we have two illustrations as to how Jesus sets men free. (a) Jesus' silence appears to deepen faith in the pleading Syrophenician woman (v. 24-30).

(b) We have the cure of the deaf and the dumb man, (vv. 31-37); instantaneous healing, showing divine power.

Jesus was setting his people free from their bodily infirmities and at the same time delivering them from their sins and imperfections and bringing them into his spiritual Kingdom. This he is still doing.

Win the War by Preparing the Land

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than April 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

W. C. T. U. NEWS

The St. Joe W. C. T. U. was very pleasantly entertained at the home of Mrs. Bessie Tustison, Friday afternoon. Opening song, "Bringing in the Tithes." Mrs. Jennie Sechler led the devotional by reading the 19 Chapter of St. John, as the meeting fell on Good Friday Mesdames Sheffer, Patterson and Spayd responded with short prayers. The story, "Mrs. Brocht's Confession", read by Mrs. Alice Copp; the talk on Systematic Giving by Mrs. Sheffer, and the book review of "The Victory of Mary Christopher" by Mrs. Spayd were all in keeping with the day's topic, Proportionate and Systematic Giving, were all very interesting bringing out the point very forcibly that we should give a tenth of our income to the Lord for his work. Mesdames Sechler and Alice Gee sang a duet "I Surrender All" The Union will again engage in a membership contest for the coming month. About twenty members and one guest, Mrs. John Benninghoff, Jr. of Ft. Wayne, were present. The meeting closed after a short business session by all repeating the Lord's Prayer.

W. S. S. NOTES

The Joan of Arch drive for Thrift Stamps and War Saving Stamps was began last week and is just about completed. In next week's paper we will give the list of solicitors and the amounts sold by each.

The amount of stamps sold, however, is but a small part of the achievement of the women in their canvass.

The advertising that War Savings has received is bearing fruit in the greatly increased sales of W S S., at the Post Office and other sales stations.

Those who have bought Thrift Stamps will no doubt continue to buy and others who have not bought will be induced to do so later through the literature that has been left in their home and the follow up plan—A record is being made and will be kept of those not buying and their reason for not doing so.

Sunday afternoon, at the Widney opera house, a patriotic rally will be held with Judge Dan M. Link and Attorney James E. Pomeroy, of Auburn, as the speakers. The local committee will arrange music appropriate for the day. Everyone in south-eastern DeKalb County is urged to be present and tell their friends of the meeting. We should all be alive to what is going on today, and you can be enlightened by coming to this meeting.

Here Is the Plan

THE Government is issuing during all of 1918 what is known as U. S. Thrift Stamps. These stamps are on sale at postoffices, banks, stores, factories and many other convenient places. A single stamp is sold for 25 cents.

When you buy your first stamp you will be given a Thrift Card with spaces for affixing sixteen stamps. This card will show at all times just how much money you have loaned the Government.

As soon as you have sixteen stamps on your card—$4.00 worth—you can take them to any place where U. S. Thrift Stamps are sold and there exchange them with a small cash payment for a "War Savings Stamp" that will pay you 4 per cent interest.

What is a War-Savings Stamp? When affixed to a War-Savings Certificate, it is an obligation of the United States Government to pay the holder $5.00 on January 1, 1923. All the wealth and security of the United States are behind it. It is as good as a Government bond, which is the safest investment in the world.

Now let's see how Thrift Stamps are changed into War-Savings Stamps.

Suppose you have a card full of Thrift Stamps—$4.00 worth—and want to turn them into a War-Savings Stamp in March. All you have to do is to put fourteen cents with your card and take it to any place where U. S. Thrift and War-Savings Stamps are sold. There it will be exchanged for a Five Dollar War Savings Stamp, which will put you in the investor class.

If you exchange U. S. Thrift Stamps for War-Savings Stamps in April, it will be fifteen cents; and so on a cent a month up to December, 1918, when the added amount will be twenty-three cents. The sooner you buy the less the cost.

Must Sell Their Wheat.

Everyone knows how serious the wheat situation has become, and this has necessitated further steps of the food administration to get more wheat for the allies. All farmers all requested to sell their surplus wheat before May 1st. in order that this great demand be met. The Township Council of Defense has had orders to this effect from headquarters and they are anxious that our farmers comply with this demand in order that we may do all in our power to win the war.

Registration of Women for Service.

Women, as well as men, can help the Government in this time of need, in many ways. The Woman's Committee—Council of National Defense, has ordered a registration of all the women of DeKalb County to be made April 19-29. To myself and helpers has been assigned the canvass and registrations of Concord Township. The canvassers will visit every woman in the Township To each they will hand a card indicating the many different kinds of work needed by the Government. Each woman can choose from the list the kind of work she is willing, or best qualified, to do, and sign the card offering her services for that particular work.

When these cards are handed over to the Government, it will then know where to look for workers for any line in which it needs them. The following persons have been chosen to assist me in the canvass of Concord Township for this registration demanded by the Government:

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

"TO HELP YOU"
"HELP FEED YOURSELF"
U. S. DEPT. OF AGRICULTURE

GREAT NEED FOR HOME GARDENS CALLS FOR MORE WORK IN EVERY BACK YARD

Home Food Plots Like These Help Table and Pocketbook—They Help Nation, Too.

"The obligation of every man, woman and child out of uniform to help feed himself will be greater in 1918 than in 1917. Therefore the home gardening and canning activities of last year must be repeated."

This is the message of the United States Department of Agriculture to every family. Those who cannot produce, can conserve and save food. There must be no backsliding among experienced gardeners; they must repeat their contribution of food. Absence of novelty must not deter those who tried gardening for the first time in 1917 from capitalizing their increased knowledge and skill. Those with experience must make every seed count—to get satisfactory returns from their work with hoe, rake and watering can. There must be no slacking off. Gardening is everybody's business, but in 1918 everyone must attend to that business.

And now a word of caution. Don't try to raise more than you can use. And water systematically all spring and summer. A few square yards well tilled will yield more than a half-acre allowed to run to weeds.

The department advises strongly against effort by amateur gardeners to produce truck crops for sale. Such enterprises commonly prove unwise, burdensome to all concerned, and not infrequently financially unprofitable. Much precious seed and fertilizer—to say nothing of time and labor—were wasted last year in such undertakings. The government's home gardening specialists believe that best results will be attained if each family attempts to raise only enough vegetables to supply its own table and to afford the surplus which its members can dry, can, or store for later home consumption.

The gardener who has provided for the immediate needs of his family and its canning and drying requirements therefore should devote attention to fall crops of root vegetables such as potatoes, beets, late turnips, carrots and parsnips, which can be stored easily for later use. It also would be well to give attention to the production of mature lima or other beans which can be shelled and kept in bags.

Help on Home Food Plot.

The garden specialists of the Department and of the State Agricultural colleges stand ready to help everyone make the greatest possible success of his home garden and to assist in the canning of surplus food.

With the co-operation of the press the department will carry the gardening advice of its specialists directly to many millions of readers. To supplement this "Food From Your Back Yard" series, of which this article is the foreword, the department has issued two new war garden bulletins for every home gardener who wishes to help feed himself. They are:

"The Farm Garden in the North," Farmers' Bulletin No. 937.

"Home Gardening in the South," Farmers' Bulletin No. 934.

"The City and Suburban Vegetable Garden," Farmers' Bulletin No. 936.

Your postal card to the Division of Publications, U. S. Department of Agriculture, will bring your free copy.

Read these articles as they appear. Study the handbooks around the winter lamp. You will be ready to deal with soil and seed as soon as spring weather permits.

LAST YEAR'S RECORD MUST BE SURPASSED THIS YEAR.

This (1917 home gardening) campaign . . . stimulated, it is estimated, the planting of from two hundred to three hundred per cent more gardens than had ever before produced food in the United States.—From annual report of the United States Secretary of Agriculture.

U. S. DEP'T. OF AGRICULTURE

HOW TO GROW

PARSNIPS.

Sow parsnip seed in drills from 18 inches to 3 feet apart, depending on the method of cultivation, about the time of the last killing frost in spring. The seed should be sown rather thickly and later thinned until the plants are about 8 inches apart in the rows. The parsnip requires very rich soil for its best development. The roots are usually left in the ground during the winter and dug as needed, but may be harvested in the autumn, packed in moist sand and stored in pits or root cellars. Most people consider this root improved by freezing, so as a rule it is left in the ground as suggested.

SALSIFY.

Sow seeds of salsify during the spring about the time of the last killing frost in the same manner as for carrots or parsnips. One ounce of seed is required to plant a 100-foot row, and this will be sufficient for most families. After the plants are well-established they should be thinned sufficiently to prevent their crowding. The cultivation should be frequent and thorough.

Salsify may be dug in the autumn and stored in banks or pits or in the storage room in the basement, or may be allowed to remain in the ground and dug as needed.

IN 1918

Every family must help feed itself.

Fresh vegetables must be used to lessen home consumption of staple foods needed by troops and the allies.

More food must be canned in homes than ever before.

There must be a war garden in every back yard fertile and sunny enough to grow vegetables.

Every seed planted must be made to count in the food supply.

—United States Department of Agriculture.

SPRAY FOR FRUITLESS TREES

Those Who Neglected This Work Last Season Will See Folly Next Summer, Says Orchardist.

Spraying fruitless trees is a heartless job, but those apple growers who failed to spray their trees the past season because there was no fruit on them will see the folly of this neglect next season, if the predictions of one progressive orchardist comes true.

Indiana Brevities

South Bend.—Seventy-seven counties out of ninety-two in Indiana have reported sales of War Savings and Thrift stamps amounting to $4,900,361.41. Recently seventy-four counties reported sales of $3,966,580. The increase in report of sales is therefore a trifle less than $1,000,000. Indiana has fifteen laggard counties in the War Savings campaign. They are: Carroll, Dekalb, Dubois, Fulton, Greene, Hendricks, Jefferson, Martin, Newton, Owen, Orange, Posey, Spencer, Warren and White. The Indiana War Savings committee has no way of finding out what the approximate sales of these counties are at this time, it says, but if they have been in proportion to the sales in the other seventy-seven counties, the total sale of War Savings and Thrift stamps to date would be $5,845,880.

Indianapolis.—Representatives of all the principal fraternal organizations in Indiana met at the statehouse to complete an organization of statewide character that will bring the force and influence of every lodge in the state into the third Liberty loan drive. A plan was worked out calling for a Liberty loan meeting of each local lodge early in the drive, at which sales organizations of the lodgemen are to be formed to assist and co-operate with the various Liberty loan county organizations.

Indianapolis.—Charles F. Kennedy, secretary of the state board of agriculture, has written a letter to Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, saying the board will take special pains to advise exhibitors of the requirements of the government. Premiums will not be offered for pure flour products, but for products in which substitutes are largely used. The board also will notify concessionaires that the food they sell must comply with government regulations.

Petersburg.—Unless the government comes to the immediate relief of the coal operators along the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad many of the mines will be forced to shut down, because, operators say, the freight rates are so high that none of the coal companies can successfully compete with coal companies on other railroads. The Chicago & Eastern Illinois railroad will allow none of its coal cars to be loaded at any mines along the Evansville & Indianapolis unless they are billed over their road, or some subsidiary, it is said.

Terre Haute.—The Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators' association denied charges that its members have been violating federal fuel price regulations. P. H. Penna, secretary-treasurer, issued a statement in which he called on every person in the state, whether official or private citizen, to start criminal action against any violator of federal coal regulations, with the assurance that the association will finance the prosecution if the evidence is obtained.

Lafayette.—Preachers of the gospel have entered the field of garden supervision, two ministers entering the school for garden supervisors at Purdue. They will take time from their ministerial duties to work in behalf of war gardens in Crawfordsville. The two ministers are Rev. George Hill and Rev. J. W. Little. They were among a large delegation of new arrivals at the garden supervisors' school.

Indianapolis.—Indiana fair associations are called on in an appeal by Harry E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Inidana, to eliminate this year from their premium lists all wheat flour products and substitutes therefor products of war recipes. The food administration suggests that these articles be continued on the premium lists, but that the qualifications for competition be changed to meet present conditions.

Indianapolis.—That the "dry" law enacted by the 1917 legislature attempts to give to pharmacists a monopoly in the sale of alcohol and intoxicating liquor and hence denies the equal protection of the laws to saloon keepers and others, is the burden of the brief filed in the supreme court by attorneys for Valentine Pisarski, a retail liquor dealer of Gary.

Michigan City.—Samuel J. Taylor, whose suit to oust Fred C. Miller, enemy alien mayor of this city, is pending in the superior court, filed a motion for a change of venue from this county. Taylor cited in support of his motion the alleged undue influence which he says Miller wields aver the citizens of this county. The hearing was set for April 3.

Terre Haute.—An increase in wages of $150 a year, which was asked for by the federation of local teachers, at a recent meeting of the school board, was granted. Forty of the 400 schoolteachers had given notice to the board they would sign up for government service unless the increase was forthcoming.

Clinton.—The proposal of a joint conference with the coal operators was voted down by the delegates attending the District No. 11, United Mine Workers' convention. Instead it was voted to refer about 30 resolutions involving working conditions or social questions to the convention which is to be held in July.

Rochester.—In order to increase crop production, the directors of the County Fair association here tripled and quadrupled all premium offers on grain, dairy and cattle exhibits at the fair September 24 to 28. It was decided to stage a race card here July 4.

Indianapolis.—Governor Goodrich has set apart April 7 as Patriots' Sunday, in a proclamation, part of which reads: "Indiana, I feel sure, will go over the top in the third Liberty Loan campaign about to begin. But to do this it will be necessary that every Hoosier divert some time from his everyday occupation and donate it to the success of this campaign. Indiana is organized as never before for the success of this movement. Politics has been laid aside, all differences have been forgotten. The work of providing the funds which will back up our boys in their fight against power-mad autocracy is in every mind. Every great organization in the state is lending itself to the important task at hand. I request and suggest that ministers in the churches of Indiana and leaders of people everywhere utilize this day to launch the all-important third Liberty Loan campaign, and I do further suggest to all to work for the succeeding days of the campaign to make the third Liberty loan in Indiana a tremendous success."

Gary.—Plant enlargements and additional bills, presumably for war work, are noted in the annual report of the United States Steel corporation. The report shows that during 1917 the Gary plant of the Illinois Steel company had its blast furnaces increased from eight to twelve and also completed two rolling mills of four power units. There are also under construction, according to the report, a napthalene plant, three merchant mills and a forged steel wheel plant. Coke-oven capacities are being increased from 560 to 700 tons. No mention is made of the $9,000,000 heavy artillery plant being erected here by the American Bridge company for the Gary Ordnance company.

Indianapolis.—A committee consisting of Dr. Frank B. Wynn of Indianapolis, Dr. George T. McCoy of Columbus, Dr. G. W. H. Kemper of Muncie and Dr. Charles Stoltz of South Bend has been appointed by Dr. J. Rilus Eastman, president of the Indiana State Medical association, to promote the organization in Indiana of a volunteer medical service corps which will include all reputable physicians and surgeons not eligible for service in the Medical Officers' Reserve corps. Doctor Eastman, who is a member of both the national and state councils of defense, acted promptly on receipt of word from Washington that the new organization was to be formed.

Indianapolis.—In a report on the state prison made by W. M. Madden and C. T. Blizzard of the state board of accounts, reference is made to the inability of institution managers to estimate with any degree of accuracy the cost of maintenance under present uncertain prices, and the suggestion is made that "when contemplated purchases exceed the appropriations, or are to be paid from appropriations not intended to meet such disbursements that before any action is taken, the board of trustees submit to the governor a detailed statement, giving estimates both in quantity and cost and other information showing the necessity for such action."

Indianapolis.—The advisability of a special session of the legislature to deal with extraordinary conditions resulting from the war and from the big fire at the Jeffersonville reformatory is being discussed. Reasons that were put forward some time ago are now being urged with still greater emphasis. It is submitted that as the war goes on the problems it has already created will become graver and will call more insistently for a solution.

Lafayette.—In 75 of the 92 Indiana counties farmers have applied for 11,377 boys between sixteen and twenty-one years of age for work this year. These figures were compiled by the seed stocks and labor survey conducted by Purdue university in co-operation with the United States department of agriculture. The number of boys asked for does not include extra harvest hands, nor boys for picking tomatoes, berries and fruit.

Indianapolis.—Action on accepting the Muncie National Institute as a gift of Ball Brothers of Muncie to the State Normal Institute was deferred at the meeting of the board of trustees of the state institution. The donors will be required to provide a satisfactory deed and bond that they will bear any expense the state may be put to in event a suit to overthrow its title to the property should be brought.

Washington, D. C.—Pensions of $25 have been granted the following Indianians: Almira Rowe, Fort Wayne; Julia E. Ware, Gosport; Anna J. Vannuys, Fountain City; Sarah A. Teague, Pendleton; Sarah E. Brown, Columbus; Elizabeth M. Jepson, Seymour; Bridget Murphy, Covington; Caroline Redman, Princeton.

Bedford.—The J. P. Falk stone mill, which had been closed for four months, has resumed operation with a full force of men. The Bedford foundry has all the orders they can handle, but they say help is so scarce that they find it difficult to get men enough to run the plant.

Washington.—Preliminaries to the establishment for the first general government school for training men for staff corps duty have been completed. Provost Marshal General Crowder announced, in calling 4,509 draft registrants to equip themselves to assist in the maintenance of America's air fleet. The call was made on Illinois, Minnesota, Iowa and Indiana, and men will have a thorough training in woodworking and gas-engine operation and repair at 14 educational institutions throughout the country. For Indiana 500 are to go to Purdue university, Lafayette.

Bureau of Ordnance Program Calls for $2,000,000,000 Expenditure By Gun Division—Employment Service Plans to Supply Farm Workers.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington—American troops are armed with a faster firing and more accurate rifle than used by the Germans, according to our expert designers, manufacturers, and marksmen, says a statement by the bureau of ordnance. One military critic and writer claims the German Mauser does not permit the most skilled user to get more than 50 per cent of the firing speed of the modified Enfield adopted for the United States service.

The superiority claimed for the American weapon is supported on three counts: Quicker firing as a result of bolt-handle design, easier and quicker sighting as a result of sight design, greater accuracy of bullet flight resulting from bullet design and greater mechanical accuracy of chamber and bore.

A summary of the work of the gun division of the bureau of ordnance shows it has been necessary to equip 16 large plants for manufacture of mobile artillery cannon. The total program of the gun division calls for an expenditure of nearly $2,000,000,000.

The major projects have included:

Construction of smokeless powder plants in face of the necessity of doubling the present output. These are now under way.

Expenditure of approximately $40,000,000 for plant facilities to manufacture artillery cannon, with an estimate that $300,000,000 will be spent for cannon alone within two years after the beginning of the war.

Preparations for the erection of plants to extract toluol from the illuminating gas being furnished cities by private gas companies.

Conservation of the supply of ammonium nitrate and acids and construction at government expense of a plant for the fixation of nitrogen and its final conversion into ammonium nitrate.

Construction, now undertaken, of a gas filling plant to cost approximately $1,500,000 and five large shell filling plants with a total cost of $25,000,000.

A special farm-service division is being established in most of the 100 offices of the United States employment service as one of the plans for meeting the labor requirements of the farmers. Special field agents are being sent into districts where acute farm-labor shortage exists or where unusually large numbers will be needed.

A weekly bulletin will be issued in which opportunities for farm employment and the needs of certain districts will be listed. Posters announcing the location of federal and state employment offices are being hung in post offices, railway stations, and other public places.

All third and fourth class post offices, of which there are 55,000, are now authorized farm-labor employment offices. During the harvest season in certain states temporary offices will be opened in a number of cities for the purpose of furnishing accurate information as to where harvest hands are needed.

A weekly report of farm-labor conditions is being sent to the main office at Washington by all the branch offices and by many state employment offices.

The use of gas as a substitute for gasoline for motor traction is increasing in England. According to a report to the United States department of commerce about 4,500 commercial vehicles have already been equipped to run on coal gas, with an estimated saving of gasoline of 3,000,000 gallons a year.

Over 20 large companies are manufacturing airplanes, 15 are producing engines, and more than 400 are producing spare parts, accessories, and supplies.

Naval training camps have a capacity of 102,000 in summer, 94,000 men in winter.

In 16 cantonments 650,000,000 feet of lumber were used.

Paymaster general of the navy drew checks for more than $30,000,000 in one day—February 23—for munitions; total advertised purchases for the navy for 1915 were $19,000,000.

During February, with 23 business days, $13,878,811 were loaned to farmers by the federal land banks, according to a statement of the farm loan board. This is $2,091,294 more than the January total.

On March 1 the total amount of mortgage loans placed since the establishment of the federal land banks is $64,532,348, covering 28,495 loans.

Since the declaration of war 1,591 employees of the department of commerce have entered military and naval services.

The following statements are from the official review of the first year war, made public by the committee on public information.

The total estimated expense of the United States government in the first year of war, without loans to the allies is $12,067,278,679.07.

During the first year of war the United States army has increased in actual strength from 9,524 officers and 202,510 enlisted men to 123,801 officers and 1,528,924 enlisted men. Strength of the navy today is nearly 21,000 officers and 330,000 enlisted men; strength a year ago was 4,792 officers and 77,946 enlisted men. The total number of persons now in the naval establishment exceeds 425,000.

The first contingent of the expeditionary forces landed safely at a French port 88 days after war was declared. American troops went on the line for their baptism of fire 187 days after war was declared.

Nearly 73,000 mechanics and other civilian employees are working at navy yards and stations.

More than 700 privately owned vessels have been purchased or chartered by the navy.

Some 300 woolen mills are working on army contracts.

Over 20,000,000 pairs of shoes have been ordered for the army.

Treasury department floated $6,616,532,300 supscriptions to Liberty bonds.

Loans to a total of $3,882,900,000 had been made to co-belligerent nations to end of 1917.

Total weight of steel thrown by a single broadside from the Pennsylvania today is 17,508 pounds; maximum broadside of largest ship during Spanish-American war was 5,680 pounds.

Two weeks after war was declared contracts had been made covering the requirements of an army of 1,000,000 men, this material comprising 8,700,000 items.

More than 11,000 manufacturers bid for navy business.

Total deaths in the army from April 6, 1917, to March 14, 1918, for all causes was reported by the Adjutant General's office to be 1,191. Of this number, 132 were reported as killed in action and 237 died or were lost at sea. The total number wounded in action was 404. Thirty-five men have been reported as missing; 28 of them are said to have been captured. Casualties in the navy and marine corps from April 6 to December 31, 1917, include 5 naval officers and 139 enlisted men, killed or died from wounds. No officers were reported as wounded in action, but 10 enlisted men were so reported.

Government now operates 260,000 miles of railway, employing 1,000,600 men and representing investment of $17,500,000.

Bonds, certificates of indebtedness, war-savings certificates, and thrift stamps is issued by the treasury up to March 12 totaled $8,560,802,052.96.

The United States government had loaned to foreign governments associated in the war on March 12, 1918, $4,436,329,750.

To March 12 the war-risk insurance bureau had issued policies for a total of $12,465,116,500 to the armed forces. Allotments and allowances to soldiers' and sailors' dependents paid by the government in February amounted to $19,976,543.

The ordnance department manufactures about 100,000 items. One type of gun with its carriage has 7,990 parts, exclusive of accessories.

For training troops in cantonments 1,000,000,000 rounds of ammunition have been bought.

The navy has developed an American mine believed to combine all the good points of various types of mines, and is manufacturing them in quantities.

Army medical training schools have been created with capacity of 21,000 officers and men—15,000 enlisted men and 6,000 officers already trained and graduated.

Naval communication service operates all radio service; 5,000 youths are studying radiotelegraphy at two naval schools.

Medical officers numbering 1,675 are members of the medical department of the navy. Navy maintains 12,000 hospital beds and 5,000 are being added.

Of 63,203 candidates for officers' commissions at two officers' training camps 44,578 were successful; a third series is now in progress with 18,000 attendance.

During the year the latest type of naval 16-inch gun was completed for our new battleships; it throws a projectile weighing 2,100 pounds.

When war was declared, 123 naval vessels were building or authorized, and contracts have been placed since that time for 949 vessels.

Before the war a total of $1,500,000 had been appropriated for air service. Congress has made $691,000,000 available for aircraft production in first year of war.

There are now 180 firms employed in Germany in the manufacture of whole wood soles for new footwear with an output of 400,000 pairs weekly. Beechwood has been chiefly used, but any hardwood with the exception of oak, will serve equally well.

As a provision to maintain the supply of gas in districts where it is urgently needed for national work an order has been issued under which the use of gas manufactured or supplied by any specific undertaking may be prohibited in motor vehicles other than those used by the undertaking itself.

The Australian wheat crop for the season of 1917-18 is estimated at 114,020,000 bushels, compared with last year's yield of 152,565,000. The 25 per cent decrease is a result of reduced acreage and unfavorable conditions.

IN MISERY FOR YEARS

Mrs. Courtney Tells How She Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.—"For years I was simply in misery from a weakness and awful pains—and nothing seemed to do me any good. A friend advised me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I did so and got relief right away. I can certainly recommend this valuable medicine to other women who suffer, for it has done such good work for me and I know it will help others if they will give it a fair trial."—Mrs. LIZZIE COURTNEY, 108 8th Ave., West, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Why will women drag along from day to day, year in and year out, suffering such misery as did Mrs. Courtney, when such letters as this are continually being published. Every woman who suffers from displacements, irregularities, inflammation, ulceration, backache, nervousness, or who is passing through the Change of Life should give this famous root and herb remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a trial. For special advice write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of its long experience is at your service.

You never will land a Johnny-boy that's enough gray matter in his cupola to want a real, bang-up flossy lady for his kiddo instead of a skirt that palavers like a brainstorm with a busted steerin'-gear.' Any girl can talk like a lady, even if she never gets closer to one than to stretch her neck when some swell dame buzzes past in her gas-wagon. THE EAGLE SCREAMS.

It is enough to make the eagle on the American dollar scream with agony and despair at the number of times it is thrown across the bar in payment for kaiserism's liquid fire, booze, when it could, if thrown into the treasury of the United States, soar over the trenches of the German army and scream defiance and final victory for the world and for democracy.

If the $2,438,037,985.50 spent for liquor in the United States last year were used for the support of her army for one year this is what it would accomplish: It would insure the salaries of our fighting men ($715,828,440); would pay for necessary transportation in mobilizing our troops and equipment ($450,490,305); would clothe ($375,506,097) and provide subsistence ($329,672,218) for the army; would allow the medical corps to keep up its work and erect hospitals ($100,026,000); would cover the ordnance stores ammunition ($39,520,00) and ordnance stores supplies ($70,000,000); would erect barracks and quarters for the troops ($82,118,000); maintain the civilian training camps ($2,110,000); the very important engineer department could operate with sufficient funds ($104,800,000); would maintain the quartermaster's departments ($163,917,925), and the signal corps ($3,000,000); and besides all this would leave a balance of $1,540,000.50.—Malcolm C. Patterson, formerly Governor of Tennessee.

ONE OF THE "SURES."

Wyoming is one of the seven states which will vote upon the question of state-wide prohibition next November. The Republican party of that state has through its central committee declared itself emphatically for the measure. The resolution indorsing prohibition concludes with these words:

"We, the representatives of the Republican party of the state of Wyoming, in committee assembled, do here and now pledge every person receiving a nomination for any public office within the state of Wyoming at our hands, from United States senator down to ward constable, to the policy of absolute prohibition and the enforcement of every law enacted for the purpose of bringing about the complete prohibition of the manufacture, barter and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes."

Entirely surrounded by dry states, on the south and west two deep, Wyoming cannot logically remain wet. Ninety-nine per cent of the state is already dry under state and municipal statute. Women have voted there since 1869. That state-wide prohibition will win next fall is a foregone conclusion.

QUESTIONS FOR LABOR TO ANSWER.

In an appeal to the labor unions of the country to refuse to longer be the catspaw of the liquor industry when labor circles are in reality largely dry, Charles Stelze says: "Shall the trades unions be made the scapegoat for an evil which it is sought to continue, against the best judgment of increasing numbers of workingmen? Shall future generations hold it against organized labor that, in the twentieth century, it allied itself with those who stood for sin and the debauchery of the saloon? Shall the saloon dominate the labor movement when every other decent organization and institution is breaking loose from its power? These are questions which labor must answer, and answer so emphatically that no one can mistake the real attitude of the trades unions."

EXPLODED ARGUMENTS!

"States which have already adapted themselves to prohibition can smile at the arguments advanced by its opponents in New York, for they have already been exploded," says the Portland Oregonian, a paper formerly opposed to prohibition. "The lost revenue is already made up by other forms of taxation without hardship or complaint, especially as the effect of prohibition is already becoming apparent in a diminution of crime and insanity and consequently of public burdens. Breweries are applied to other uses than making beer and other retail business has occupied vacant saloons. Former employees of breweries and saloons have found other occupations, for there are practically no unemployed in Oregon who wish to work. States and cities have learned that they can get along without liquor revenue, capital has learned that it can find profitable use for property which was formerly applied to production of revenue, and workingmen have found other jobs. The liquor traffic has disappeared and we have quickly closed the gaps which it left."

PLENTY OF HISTORY.

Sidney Lanier said, "It is idle to argue from prophecy when we can argue from history." It is no longer a question whether prohibition is a benefit. Twenty-seven states, Alaska, District of Columbia and Porto Rico, not to mention nearly all of Canada, furnishes the history.

"The argument that the stopping of the liquor traffic will create a commercial famine is based upon the absurdity that the money spent for booze would not be spent for anything else."

CHANGE IN THE FARMER'S LIFE

"Making a Living" Idea Has Developed Into a "Money Making Fact."

A few years ago—and not so many at that—most farmers were satisfied if they saw ahead of them the opportunity to make a fair living, a reasonable competence in their failing years, and an assurance of an existence for their families. They worked hard, and tilled their acres with this end in view. Honest struggle, earnest effort and a true conception of upright manhood, together with the increasing knowledge that upon the fruits of their endeavor rested the structure of the world, whose people had to be fed and maintained. Economy in method, improved conditions of working, have added to the farmer's possibilities, and today instead of being a plodder for an existence, which his early training had bred into him, he has become the bulwark of the nation, and, as such, has become elevated to a position where his word and his work are recognized as the factors it was always intended they should be. He is now the man of business—of big business. He has forced an appreciation of his work, and the true value has been placed upon it. The big men of the country today are the farmers, who, with business acumen and forensic forethought are able to tell you—from their books—what it costs to produce a bushel of wheat or a pound of wool.

All of which is intended to prove that farming is a business, as much as banking or selling a suit of clothes. It is an industrial business, with more certain profits than accompany any other line of trade. It is a manufacturing enterprise, devoid of any of the dangers that the frills of fashion's follies and desires force upon ordinary pursuits. Food is something that all must have and the farmer produces it. The cheaper it can be produced the less will be the cost to the consumer. And this is one of the chief thoughts of the farmer. Within the memory of the ten-year-old boy there have been improvements in machinery, changes in methods, scientific discoveries of chemicals as adapted to agriculture, all of which have lessened cost of production and made possible the cultivation of increased acres. In some parts these things have brought about more intensified agriculture, growing heavier crops on less acres. Improved machinery and demand for greater production have led another class in search of larger areas, where their ability may cope with the growing of a greater number of bushels. That is one of the reasons why Western Canada lands have recently come into such demand. These, at from twenty to thirty dollars an acre, and producing the prodigious crops that are claimed for them, have attracted thousands of American settlers, while other thousands have gone out into the lands in the Western states. But, as to the Canada lands, there is this to say of them, today they are cheap, and if they will yield sufficient in one year to pay the cost of the entire purchase, why should not there be a demand. The country is well settled, and settlement is increasing. As evidence of the growth of the three Western Provinces into whose territories the Canadian Government invites settlers, recent reports show the following increases from 1913 to 1917 inclusive:

	Value of Field Crops
	1913	1917
Manitoba	...$ 64,557,000	$137,470,550
Saskatchewan	129,376,000	349,488,200
Alberta	 46,712,000	176,965,800
Total	.....$240,645,000	$663,924,550

The total value of field crops for 1917 was $663,924,550, produced on less than 59,000,000 acres of land.

Further evidence of prosperity and progress is found in the Government estimate of the value of farm lands, and increase in value since 1908:

	1908	1916
Manitoba	..............27.30	32.03
Saskatchewan	..........20.40	23.07
Alberta	..............18.20	22.18

It will be observed that the average price of lands has not kept pace with their producing value. It is therefore pointed out that the opportunities for the purchase of high-class land is still within the reach of those with limited means.

A good idea of advancement in a country's progress may be obtained by a knowledge of what has been done in the production of cattle, and when these figures are studied in connection with Western Canada, a country whose fame having been heralded as a grain-growing country, giving the idea that that was what it was mostly adapted to, it will be realized that there is there a vast storehouse of wealth awaiting those who choose to take advantage of it. In the three provinces in 1912 there were—horses, milch cows, other cattle, sheep and swine, four million head, while in 1917 the number was seven million.

In 1901 the entire population was 419,512; in 1916 1,698,220.

One marvels at the rapid progress of the United States during the nineteenth century. But America's opportunities for growth at the beginning of that century were nothing compared to the opportunities which are Canada's at the present time.

The fact that Canada has as its next door neighbor a nation of over 100,000,000—the richest nation in the world—is bound to have a stimulating effect on its progress. Already one sees signs of it on every hand.

Canada not only has the largest area of unoccupied, but fertile, land of any country, but this land is already made available by a network of railways. Cost of production of grain is lower than elsewhere, while the prices are on a basis of those of the United States.—Advertisement.

MARCH TO VICTORY

Courage is a matter of the blood. Without good red blood a man has a weak heart and poor nerves.

In the spring is the best time to take stock of one's condition. If the blood is thin and watery, face pale or pimply, generally weak, tired and listless, one should take a spring tonic. One that will do the spring house-cleaning, an old-fashioned herbal remedy that was used by everybody nearly 50 years ago is still safe and sane because it contains no alcohol or narcotic. It is made up of Blood root, Golden Seal root, Oregon Grape root, Queen's root, Stone root, Black Cherry bark—extracted with glycerine and made into liquid or tablets. This blood tonic was first put out by Dr. Pierce in ready-to-use form and since then has been sold by million bottles as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If druggists do not keep this in tablet form, send 60 cents for a vial to Dr. Pierce's Invalids' Hotel, Buffalo, N. Y.

Kidney disease carries away a large percentage of our people. What is to be done? The answer is easy. Eat less meat, eat coarse, plain food, with plenty of vegetables, drink plenty of water between meals, and take an uric acid solvent after meals for a while, such as Anuric (double strength), obtainable at almost any drug store. It was first discovered by Dr. Pierce. Most every one troubled with uric acid finds that Anuric dissolves the uric acid as hot water does sugar. You can obtain a trial package by sending ten cents to Doctor Pierce's Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute in Buffalo, N. Y.

Two More Boys Gone

The F. M. Monroe home is doubly sad today because of the absence of both their sons, Stanley leaving for camp on last Thursday and Vernie leaving for camp on Wednesday of this week. It was thot that Vernie would be able to finish his school before leaving, which term was to have closed on May 3.

Upon the arising of Mr. and Mrs. Monroe last Thursday morning, they discovered upon the library table the marriage certificate of their son, Vernie revealing the fact that on December 30, 1917, that he had taken unto himself a wife, namely, Miss Agnes Sechler daughter of Frank and Mary Sechler. The ceremony was performed at Lansing, Michigan by Rev. Martin Luther Fox of the M. P. church The young couple upon leaving St Joe, during the vacation period went to New Haven, Indiana, for a few days visit with Jesse Copp and family and they remained over night and took a train out of Fort Wayne for Lansing, returning to St. Joe on No. 6, on Saturday evening. No one had any insight into this secret although at times the parents of the groom asked whether he was married and he acknowledged to them that he was, but in such a way that they really did not believe it. But now there is no doubt. The bride is teaching at the Cheesetown school and will remain here during his absence.

For the big show on Friday evening, April 12—Have you a joke on the "other fellow?" Hand it to Woodcox. He will weave it into the big program for that night and you will be amply repaid by "putting one over" on your neighbor. Jokes must not be offensive or vulgar—something crisp and snappy illustrating a peculiar trait or personality. Then come and get your smile.

Think of it! Two and one-half hours of fun, frolic and frivolity. Three big shows in one.

We have staged the first one under the caption—"A Symposium of Personalities," depicting a southern cotton picking scene garnished with plantation melodies and closing with the impersonation of various "noted" characters of St. Joe. Fourteen young colored ladies will entertain you thus for one hour; while an all star cast of imported actors are donning their war paint for the second part of the "Big night's program, the Rip Roaring Irish Farce—"That Rascal Pat," when the debris of this melee (don't choke on that) is cleared away, from out the gloomy recesses of nowhere in particular will come the Royal Black Faced Comedians, who, accompanied by their "Orchestrina Feminina" will rip the lid off from a hogshead of fun and up-to-date jokes, completing the evening's hilarity with a genuine old fashioned minstrel stunt.

The proceeds of this show go to the Manual Training and Music Departments of the public schools of Concord township See bills for further particulars.

Admission 20 cents.

How Do Your Sacrifices Compare With These?

THE American boy who goes to war gives up the position which means so much to his future, or the little business which has just begun to show promise of success.

He severs home ties; gives up home comforts; leaves behind parents, friends, wife or sweetheart.

He faces the probability of being obliged to take up life anew when he returns; of losing all the advantages which years of hard work have won for him.

He faces the possibility of coming back incapacitated for earning a living, and of being dependent upon his friends or upon charity.

He faces the possibility of never coming home at all.

Facing these things, he goes to France to fight for us who remain safely at home—and when the moment comes for him to go over the top—he GOES!

What will he think, how will he feel, if we complain because we are asked to make a few sacrifices for him—sacrifices so insignificant when compared with his?

Show him that to invest in Liberty Bonds is not a SACRIFICE but a PRIVILEGE—an appreciation of his sacrifice!

E. L. Sanders writes his parents, Wilson Sanders and wife of St. Joe. Many Queer Experiences.

Manila, P. I.
Feb. 14th. 1918

Dear Father and Mother;—

I wrote you on the ship, while on my way over here, and thought probably by this time you might have written to me, but it takes a long time to get mail thro gh from here. We figure on three months from the time a letter is written to the time that a reply would come if answered promptly.

I had a good trip coming over, took just 30 days to make it, although there was 10 days of that time that the Ship was laying over in the different ports of Japan, which gave me a chance to get a look at that country.

About the only thing interesting in a trip to a foreign country is to observe the difference in the manner and customs of the people, for as a sight seeing proposition, I suppose the U S offers many more and better things of interest, than could be seen in all of Asia and Africa.

I did not care much for Japan, the working class, work very hard, and the leisure class, take it very easy. One class goes around in the coldest weather nearly naked and barefooted, while the other class, wear more than enough clothes to make up for the difference. Men and women are hitched up in a harness to two wheeled carts, and pull very heavy loads, nine tenths of the hauling in the cities and country is done that way. Women are hitched up to plows and cultivators, and work all day in the fields, and in the country the woman has the preference for that kind of work, and where a double team is necessary, two men, or a man and a woman, and I saw a woman and a small cow or steer hitched up together to a wagon hauling something in a field. The men work very hard too, and they all expose themselves to all kinds of weather, men and women standing up to their knees in ice cold water in the rice fields is a very common thing I noticed that the morals seemed to be quite low in general, and in the cities it is very unsanitary, the sewerage running down the streets in open gutters causing a very had oder in winter to say nothing of what it must be in summer when it gets warm? The stores and market places are on a different scale than in America, even in Capitol, as large as Chicago, the stores are small dumps. I visited the four largest cities including Tokio, the capitol, saw quite a few of the Sacred Temples and Shrines where the idols, etc., are worshiped by a large proportion of the people, it looks ridiculous to a person that knows better.

There are few street cars in Japan, most of that kind of traffic is taken care of by Jinrickshaws, a small carriage for one person, which is hauled by a man, who runs along about as fast as a horse can trot. The streets are full of this kind of traffic, and the charges are about the same as street car fare, about 30 Yen, (15) per hour, shorter time in proportion.

In the Phillipine Islands everything is different, in the first place, this is the land of eternal summer. I am wearing less clothing than I ever wore before at any time of the year, any place. Everybody wears white clothing, coat and pants, made of a light material very close to duck, but lighter, except in the country districts, the Natives, wear little of nothing, many go stark naked in the more remote districts. Contrary to the Japanese custom, the Filipino does not believe in work, and it is hard to get them to work, except in the cities, they will do some work. The pay for a laborer runs about 50c. per day, and it takes a good one to earn that much.

The Higher class of natives, of course, dress and act much the same as American, and there are doctors and lawyers galore among them, as they have a strong inclination to educate themselves to be professional men. There are about ten million people in the Islands, composed of many different tribes of natives, about 2,000 islands, about 50 of them inhabited, many Chinese, a few Japanese, quite a few Americans and Europeans. The most of the business being in the hands of the Chinese, Europeans and Americans. Manila is the capitol of the Islands, and a city of about the size of Seattle, and is the headquarters of nearly everything for the Islands.

About 400 years ago, the Spanish who then were in control, built an immense wall around what was then the City of Manila, this wall is 50 or 60 feet high and about that thick, and fortified from all sides, inside the wall which is about a mile square, is the old part of the city, including the Palaces of the Rulers, Convents, Cathedreals, Government Buildings, etc., and this wall was originally surrounded with a moat full of water. The wall and city is still in good state of preservation, and is the most densely populated part of the city today, but another and larger section of the city entirely surrounds the walled city on all sides, part of the new section being up-to-date, that is the residencial part. This makes what is called a city within a city, and is one of the features of Manila, that you will be sure to find in any article descriptive of Manila. The climate, so far, has been ideal, but from now on, they tell me, we will have some warmer weather; but while the weather is warm, everybody takes things easy and aim to keep cool, for instance the stores close at 12 noon, and do not open again until 3 o'clock, the people in the meantime taking it easy, and many take the Siesta, which originated in this and Spanish countries.

Most everybody talks Spanish, and I talk some, but am trying to improve by study. There are many things of interest in this country, and if you get hold of anything on the Phillipine Islands, and will read it, you will know all I can tell you.

For myself I am trying to work into an export and import business, and I may stay here for two or three years, at which time, I would like to be able to go back via England and New York, and come home to St Joe, which would make me a trip around the world, as so far, I am only half way.

Well, I hope that you will write me soon, and if I should not be in Manila, it will be forwarded to me. I have been thinking of going about 1,000 miles further south and east of here, very near the equator, near Zulu Land, and Borneo, any way your letter would be forwarded, and I may not go.

I hope that you are both enjoying good health, and that you will write soon. I am, Your Son,

E. L. Sanders.

FIRST YEAR OF WAR REVIEWED

Achievements of United States Recounted in Official Statements.

GREAT ARMY IN TRAINING

Land Forces Now Aggregate 123,801 Officers and 1,528,924 Enlisted Men—Navy Personnel Is Tripled.

The United States is now entering upon its second year of war. On the first anniversary of the beginning of hostilities between this country and Germany, the people are interested in knowing what has been done by the United States in waging and preparing to wage war upon the forces of Prussian autocracy. The committee on public information of the United States government, in a review of the first year of the war, gives a resume of the activities of the various departments of the government as they are concerned with prosecution of the war. The committee announces that all statements made are authorized by the war department, the navy department, the United States shipping board and the treasury department.

The outstanding feature of the first year of war, it is pointed out in the review, has been the transformation of the standing army and National Guard, composed of 9,524 officers and 202,510 men into a fighting force that now aggregates 123,801 officers and 1,528,924 enlisted men.

A statement of the adjutant general shows that the regular army which in April, 1917, comprised 5,791 officers and 121,797 men, now is made up of 10,698 officers and 503,142 men. The National Guard in April, 1917, included 3,733 officers and 76,713 men, while now it comprises 16,893 officers and 431,583 men. The reserve corps in service one year ago included 4,000 men. Now it includes 96,210 officers and 77,360 men. The National army, which did not exist one year ago, now includes 516,839 men.

A substantial vanguard (military expediency prohibiting publication of actual numbers) of this army is meeting the enemy in France today or is encamped there awaiting the call to the trenches; in 16 cantonments and 16 camps and on numerous aviation fields and in a variety of other schools in all parts of the United States the men of the remaining army are hardening and training for their part in the great contest overseas.

Behind the activities of this vast force lies a great industry organized to produce an adequate supply of munitions, equipment, and provisions, and to provide transportation to the firing line, almost every branch of essential industry of the country having been drawn upon to produce these material requirements.

Expeditionary Forces.

Military necessity particularly forbids a detailed review of the activities of the American expeditionary forces.

General Pershing and his staff arrived in Paris on June 14, 1917, 69 days after the declaration of war. The first American troops arrived in France on June 26. On July 4, in celebration of our natal day and a new fight for liberty, American troops paraded the streets of Paris and were greeted as the forerunners of great American armies and vast quantities of supplies and ammunitions.

On October 10, 1917, 187 days after the war was declared, American soldiers went on the firing line. In January American soldiers took over permanently a part of the line as an American sector, and this line is gradually lengthening.

Behind the fighting line in France the American forces have scientifically prepared a groundwork of camps, communications, supply bases, and works in anticipation of operations by the full force of the army. They are building and have built railroads, hospitals, ordnance bases, and docks in France. They have constructed immense barracks, erected sawmills, reclaimed agricultural lands, and carried forward many incidental enterprises.

The construction of an ordnance base in France, costing $25,000,000, is now well under way. Great quantities of material used in the foreign construction work have been shipped from the United States—from fabricated ironwork for an ordnance shop to nails and crossties for railroads, and even the piles to build docks.

All the while there has been a fairly even flow of men and materials from the United States to France. The men in the trenches, back of the lines, on the construction projects, and in the hospitals have been steadily supplied. Our losses at sea, in men and materials, have been gratifyingly small. The greatest single loss occurred on February 5, when the British ship Tuscania was torpedoed and sunk. The bodies of 144 soldiers, en route to France, have been found and 55 others were still missing on March 16.

To secure an adequate number of competent officers to lead the new armies various plans were devised. Two classes at West Point were graduated in advance of the usual graduating dates and special examinations were held in various parts of the country for appointments from civil life. Three series of officers' training camps have been held. Of 63,203 candidates in the first two series of camps 44,578 qualified and were awarded commissions. In the third series of camps, opened January 5, 1918, about 18,000 candidates, consisting largely of enlisted men, have been in attendance.

Corps of Engineers.

At the beginning of the war the engineer troops consisted of three regiments of pioneer engineers, with trains, one mounted company, one engineer detachment at West Point. The aggregate strength was approximately 4,125 officers and enlisted men. At present the aggregate authorized strength is over 200,000, with an actual strength of approximately 120,000.

Of the special engineer units recruited for service on railways and in the maintenance of lines of communication, many are already in France and others are awaiting recruitment to full strength in order to be ready for overseas service. The first engineer troops, 1,100 strong, to be sent abroad, arrived in France about three months after war was declared. Since that time the number has been greatly augmented. These troops have been constantly engaged in general engineering work, including the construction of railways, docks, wharves, cantonments, and hospitals for the use of the American expeditionary forces. They have, in some instances, in the performance of their duties, engaged in active combat with the enemy.

Ordnance Department.

Since the outbreak of war the commissioned personnel of the ordnance department has expanded from 97 officers, operating with yearly appropriations of about $14,000,000 and with manufacture largely confined to government arsenals, to 5,000 officers in this country and abroad, transacting an unprecedented war program for the supply of ordnance, the total direct appropriations and contract authorizations for one year having been $4,756,503,185.

While building the foundation for greater production, the ordnance department has provided 1,400,000 rifles; has brought the rate of rifle production up to 45,000 per week, sufficient to equip three army divisions; secured deliveries on more than 17,000 machine guns; brought the rate of production of machine guns from 20,000 to 225,000 per year; increased the rate of production of 3½-inch to 9-inch caliber guns from 1,500 to 15,000 per year; and has arranged for the manufacture of some 35,000 motortrucks and tractors for hauling heavy guns and ammunition, which are being delivered almost as fast as they can be shipped.

One billion rounds of ammunition has been purchased for the training of troops in the cantonments alone.

An idea of the extent of the ordnance program may be gained from the following few items of purchase: Twenty-three million hand grenades, 725,000 automatic pistols, 250,000 revolvers, 23,000,000 projectiles for all calibers of heavy artillery, 427,246,000 pounds of explosives, 240,000 machine guns, and 2,484,000 rifles.

Quartermaster Corps.

The magnitude of the work of the quartermaster corps is indicated by the operation of the subsistence division, which is charged with the responsibility of seeing that food supplies for the army are available at all stations from the Philippines to Lorraine. Purchases recently made included 40,000,000 pounds dried beans, 116,000,000 cans baked beans of the 1917 crop, 65,184,475 cans of tomatoes, 91,000,000 cans of condensed milk, and 20,287,000 pounds of prunes.

The establishment of the subsistence division centralized the purchases of foodstuffs for the army, previous to which such products were distributed through the depot quartermaster. Effective January 1, the central control system has resulted in greater efficiency and a big saving. In January, for instance, $100,000 was saved under this system as compared with the prices obtained by depot quartermasters, and in February a saving of $39,740 was made on potatoes alone. The central control system is still being perfected.

Production of 10,000 new automobile trucks is in progress for the army, in addition to purchases of 3,520 passenger cars, 6,126 motorcycles, and 5,040 bicycles, with appropriate repair and replacement equipment.

In three months the cantonment division of the quartermaster general's department built 16 cantonments, each one practically a small city, comprising about 1,400 separate buildings and providing quarters for 47,000 men.

Air Service.

The air service has been called upon in the past 12 months to build an enormous structure of the most highly trained personnel and the most intricate equipment with practically no foundation to start from.

Three large appropriations, including the $640,000,000 act passed without a roll call, made a total of $691,000,000 available for the first year. All of this has since been obligated.

Last April the air service had an almost negligible force of 65 officers and 1,120 men, 3 small flying fields, less than 300 second-rate planes, practically no aviation industry, and only the most scanty knowledge of the kaleidoscopic development abroad. The first two months of war were required to secure information, establish a staff, and work out the program finally adopted. The problem was twofold—first, personnel; and, second, equipment.

Today the personnel is over 100 times that of a year ago, practically every member a skilled man who has gone through an intensive course of training. Schools of 11 different kinds have been instituted, courses of instruction laid out, and instructors secured, including foreign experts in a score of lines.

Development of Navy.

The development of the navy during the first year of war has given the greatest satisfaction. Its growth and achievements during this period may be epitomized in the following paragraphs:

Strength of the navy today is nearly 21,000 officers and 330,000 enlisted men; strength a year ago was 4,792 officers and 77,946 enlisted men.

Estimated total expenditures of the navy during first year of war: Disbursements and outstanding obligations, $1,881,000,000.

Total naval appropriations, real and pending, $3,333,171,665.04.

American destroyers arrived at a British port to assist in patrolling European waters 28 days after the declaration of war.

There are now four times as many vessels in the naval service as a year ago.

Nearly 73,000 mechanics and other civilian employees are working at navy yards and stations.

When war was declared, 123 naval vessels were building or authorized, and contracts have been placed since that time for 949 vessels.

More than 700 privately owned vessels have been purchased or chartered by the navy.

Six new authorized battleships are designed to be of 41,500 tons, the largest battleships in the world.

Our 35,000-ton cruisers, 35 knots, will be the fastest in the world, their speed equaling the fastest destroyers.

Prompt repairs of 109 interned German ships, partially wrecked by their crews, added more than 700,000 tons to our available naval and merchant tonnage.

The navy has developed an American mine believed to combine all the good points of various types of mines, and is manufacturing them in quantities.

During the year the latest type of naval 16-inch gun was completed for our new battleships; it throws a projectile weighing 2,100 pounds.

Navy has in its possession now a stock of supplies sufficient for the average requirements for at least one year.

Several hundred submarine chasers, built since the war, have been delivered to the navy by 31 private concerns and six navy yards; many of these boats have crossed the Atlantic, some in severe weather.

Naval training camps have a capacity of 102,000 in summer, 94,000 men in winter.

Shipping Board's Progress.

Up to date congress has authorized $2,034,000,000, of which $1,135,000,000 has been appropriated, for the United States Shipping board and Emergency Fleet corporation; on March 1, $353,247,955.37 of this sum had been expended.

The Emergency Fleet corporation had requisitioned March 1, 425 steel vessels and contracted for 720 steel vessels, making a total of 1,145 steel ships, of an aggregate dead-weight tonnage of 8,164,508 tons; it had let contracts for 490 wooden vessels, aggregating approximately 1,715,000 dead-weight tons; it had repaired and put in operation 788,000 dead-weight tonnage seized from Germany and Austria.

On March 5 the building program of the Emergency Fleet corporation was being carried on in 151 plants.

First Year's War Cost.

Total estimated expense of the United States government in the first year of war, without loans to the allies, is $12,067,278,679.07.

To help meet this expense, the treasury department floated $6,616,532,300 subscriptions to Liberty bonds.

Bonds, certificates of indebtedness, War Savings certificates, and Thrift stamps issued by the treasury up to March 12, totaled $8,560,802,052.96.

The United States government had loaned to foreign governments associated in the war on March 12, 1918, $4,436,329,750.

To March 12 the war risk insurance bureau had issued policies for a total of $12,465,116,500 to the armed forces.

Shell-Cap Cigar Lighter.

Capt. John Corrigan of the traffic squad of the police department has received a souvenir from his son, V. R. Corrigan, who is in France as a member of base hospital No. 22, and is displaying it to his friends. It is a cigar lighter, made from a machine gun one-inch brass shell cap. After the shell had been fired some enterprising Frenchman made it into a lighter, to be filled with alcohol and a wick, which is lighted by the friction of a steel wheel against a point of steel wire. A lid, or "cap," for the lighter is made from another piece of brass shell inclosed at one end with a French copper coin. It is a novel contrivance and neatly made.—Indianapolis News.

No Longer "Made in Germany."

Clinical thermometers have, in the past, been a feature of Germany's trade; and so, when the German prisoners in France were sorted out last year, they were asked if any of them were thermometer-makers, and if so would they care to work at their trade. A large number stepped out; and now nearly all the thermometers for use in France are made by these German prisoners. Their workshop is one of the old dismantled forts near Paris, and apparently they are most happy in their work. Possibly this is in part due to the fact that they are teaching their art to a number of French women.—Joseph S. Ames, in the Atlantic.

LOYAL AMERICANS MUST CONTRIBUTE

CRUSHING OF GERMANY CAN BE ACCOMPLISHED ONLY BY OUR FINANCIAL AID.

RESPOND TO LIBERTY LOAN

Appeal to All True Citizens to Help Eliminate the Diseased Tree Lying Across the Path of True Democracy.

(By WINSTON CHURCHILL, Who Recently Returned From the War Zone.)

Germany may be likened to a great tree that has fallen across the path of democracy. The trunk is being chopped through by two axes, the military ax and the propagandist ax. If the trunk is to be severed and the obstruction removed, neither ax must be spared. Americans must contribute willingly to help their allies, to support their army and navy, which will be the deciding military factor in the struggle.

Our American president was the first world statesman to make clear that while a military victory is essential, it is not in itself adequate. The great significance of this war lies not on the battle lines, but behind them. It is a war for human liberty, and that which restricts human liberty, not only in the German empire, but also in America and England and France and Italy and Russia must be abolished. We are beginning to perceive that the future progress of democracy depends on national unselfishness and international co-operation scientifically conceived.

Issued World Proclamation.

In a series of masterly state papers Mr. Wilson has announced to the world that America enters the war unselfishly, and has defined the true issue for all the peoples of the earth—even for those deluded portions of the German population which, because of a false system of education, have hitherto upheld the hands of the worst enemies of liberty, the junkers. Until quite recently, one of the most disquieting symptoms from the point of view of the allies was a discontent with, if not an actual opposition to, the war of large elements among the working classes of the allied peoples. In Russia, where democracy was most cruelly suppressed, where conditions for the peasant and the workingman were hardest, a revolution actually took place—a revolution that has sounded the keynote of our times. The world service which our president is doing is that of enlisting the allegiance of those masses for the war. He is convincing them that it is their war. And these are they upon whom the evils of an outword economic system have pressed hardest, and who hitherto have seen little hope that victory over the Germans meant their own deliverance. Mr. Wilson has issued a world proclamation of emancipation from economic slavery.

Make Their Own Treaties.

He not only declares that powerful nations shall cease to exploit little nations, but that powerful individuals shall cease to exploit their fellow men. He declares that henceforth no wars shall be fought for domination, and that to this end secret treaties shall be abolished. The peoples through their representatives shall make their own treaties. And just as national democracy insures to the individual the greatest amount of self-determination, of self-realization, world democracy shall insure self-determination to the individual nations of the earth, in order that each may be free to make its own contribution to world democracy.

Fighting for Oppressed.

This is the spirit in which America has entered the war. We are fighting for the oppressed everywhere. And we are equally determined that the injustice and inequalities that exist in our own government, the false standards of worth, the materialism, the luxury and waste shall be purged from our midst. We shall seize this opportunity to finish up the cleaning of our own household. To sustain our army and navy in the struggle for such a cause, to uphold our president, to aid our allies who have fought so long and so bravely, these are worthy of our sacrifices. I am confident that the response of the American people to the third Liberty loan will be generous.

Bonds Feed the Boys.

Every farmer knows how his boys like to eat. Mother's fried chicken and apple dumplings and pumpkin pies haven't a chance in the world when the boys sit down at table. Lots of farmers' boys are in France and the farmer doesn't want them to go hungry over there. Liberty Bonds buy food for them.

Don't Bury Your Bond.

When you and your neighbor have bought your Liberty Bonds, don't take them home and hide them in the cupboard. Take them to your country banker and have him give you certificates of deposit for the bonds. Your banker can take these bonds to a Federal Reserve bank and borrow money for your use in case you suddenly find yourself in need of funds. Hiding a bond is as bad as hoarding money. Keep the bonds and the money in circulation and the country will pull through this crisis all right

A negro lad, one of the dusky kind that come up from the South, appeared at a local draft board recently and inquired for the questionnaire.

"How old are you?" he was asked, and his answer was: "Eighteen."

"It wasn't necessary for you to register for the draft," he was told.

"Not necessary! Man, you don't know that town where Ah registered. Ah was working on the street when two big cops grabbed me and said, 'Niggah, you beat it over there and registah or we'll beat yoh haid.'"

Mr. Ragless

J. B. Ragless, carpenter, 210 W. 60th St., Chicago, Ill., says: "My back gave out completely and I had to quit work. I could hardly endure the pain in my back and nights I tossed and turned, unable to sleep. Often in the morning my back was as stiff as a board, so that I couldn't stoop to dress myself. When I did manage to bend over, everything before me turned black. My head seemed to be whirling and sometimes I was so dizzy I had to grasp something to keep from falling.

"The kidney secretions were irregular in passage, getting me up at night and the passages burned cruelly. I lost my appetite, was weak and listless and went down twenty-five pounds in weight. "OVER THE TOP"

By An American Soldier Who Went

Arthur Guy Empey

Machine Gunner, Serving in France

Copyright 1917, by Arthur Guy Empey

EMPEY GETS INTO THE FRONT LINE TRENCH—AND WISHES HE WERE BACK IN JERSEY CITY.

Synopsis.—Fired by the sinking of the Lusitania, with the loss of American lives, Arthur Guy Empey, an American living in Jersey City, goes to England and enlists as a private in the British army. After a short experience as a recruiting officer in London, he is sent to training quarters in France, where he first hears the sound of big guns and makes the acquaintance of "cooties."

The greatest shock a recruit gets when he arrives at his battalion in France is to see the men engaging in a "cootie" hunt. With an air of contempt and disgust he avoids the company of the older men, until a couple of days later, in a torment of itching, he also has to resort to a shirt hunt, or spend many a sleepless night of misery. During these hunts there are lots of pertinent remarks bandied back and forth among the explorers, such as, "Say, Bill, I'll swap you two little ones for a big one," or, "I've got a black one here that looks like Kaiser Bill."

One sunny day in the front-line trench, I saw three officers sitting outside of their dugout ("cooties" are no respecters of rank; I have even noticed a suspicious uneasiness about a certain well-known general), one of them was a major, two of them were exploring their shirts, paying no attention to the occasional shells which passed overhead. The major was writing a letter; every now and then he would lay aside his writing-pad, search his shirt for a few minutes, get an inspiration, and then resume writing. At last he finished his letter and gave it to his "runner." I was curious to see whether he was writing to an insect firm, so when the runner passed me I engaged him in conversation and got a glimpse at the address on the envelope. It was addressed to Miss Alice Somebody, in London. The "runner" informed me that Miss Somebody was the major's sweetheart and that he wrote to her every day. Just imagine it, writing a love letter during a "cootie" hunt; but such is the creed of the trenches.

CHAPTER III.

I Go to Church.

Upon enlistment we had identity disks issued to us. These were small disks of red fiber worn around the neck by means of a string. Most of the Tommies also used a little metal disk which they wore around the left wrist by means of a chain. They had previously figured it out that if their heads were blown off, the disk on the left wrist would identify them. If they lost their left arm the disk around the neck would serve the purpose, but if their head and left arm were blown off, no one would care who they were, so it did not matter. On one side of the disk was inscribed your rank, name, number and battalion, while on the other was stamped your religion.

C. of E., meaning Church of England; R. C., Roman Catholic; W., Wesleyan; P., Presbyterian; but if you happened to be an atheist they left it blank, and just handed you a pick and shovel. On my disk was stamped C. of E. This is how I got it: The lieutenant who enlisted me asked my religion. I was not sure of the religion of the British army, so I answered, "Oh, any old thing," and he promptly put down C. of E.

Now, just imagine my hard luck. Out of five religions I was unlucky enough to pick the only one where church parade was compulsory!

The next morning was Sunday. I was sitting in the billet writing home to my sister telling her of my wonderful exploits while under fire—all recruits do this. The sergeant major put his head in the door of the billet and shouted: "C. of E. outside for church parade!"

I kept on writing. Turning to me, in a loud voice, he asked, "Empey, aren't you C. of E.?"

I answered, "Yep."

In an angry tone, he commanded, "Don't you 'yep' me. Say, 'Yes, sergeant major.'"

"I did so. Somewhat mollified, he ordered, "Outside for church parade."

I looked up and answered, "I am not going to church this morning."

He said, "Oh, yes, you are!"

I answered, "Oh, no, I'm not!"—But I went.

We lined up outside with rifles and bayonets, 120 rounds of ammunition, wearing our tin hats, and the march to church began. After marching about five kilos, we turned off the road into an open field. At one end of this field the chaplain was standing in a limber. We formed a semicircle around him. Overhead there was a black speck circling round and round in the sky. This was a German Fokker. The chaplain had a book in his left hand—left eye on the book—right eye on the airplane. We Tommies were lucky, we had no books, so had both eyes on the airplane.

After church parade we were marched back to our billets, and played football all afternoon.

CHAPTER IV.

"Into the Trench."

The next morning the draft was inspected by our general, and we were assigned to different companies. The boys in the brigade had nicknamed this general Old Pepper, and he certainly earned the sobriquet. I was assigned to B company with another American named Stewart.

For the next ten days we "rested," repairing roads for the Frenchies, drilling, and digging bombing trenches.

One morning we were informed that we were going up the line, and our march began.

It took us three days to reach reserve billets—each day's march bringing the sound of the guns nearer and nearer. At night, way off in the distance we could see their flashes, which lighted up the sky with a red glare.

Against the horizon we could see numerous observation balloons or "sausages" as they are called.

On the afternoon of the third day's march I witnessed my first airplane being shelled. A thrill ran through me and I gazed in awe. The airplane was making wide circles in the air, while little puffs of white smoke were bursting all around it. These puffs appeared like tiny balls of cotton while after each burst could be heard a dull "plop." The sergeant of my platoon informed us that it was a German airplane and I wondered how he could tell from such a distance because the plane seemed like a little black speck in the sky. I expressed my doubt as to whether it was English, French or German. With a look of contempt he further informed us that the allied anti-aircraft shells when exploding emitted white smoke while the German shells gave forth black smoke, and, as he expressed it, "It must be an Allemand because our pom-poms are shelling, and I know our batteries are not off their bally nappers and are certainly not strafeing our own planes, and another piece of advice—don't chuck your weight about until you've been up the line and learnt something."

I immediately quit "chucking my weight about" from that time on.

Just before reaching reserve billets we were marching along, laughing, and singing one of Tommy's trench ditties:

I want to go home, I want to go home,
I don't want to go to the trenches no more
Where sausages and whizz-bangs are galore.
Take me over the sea, Where the Allemand can't get at me,
Oh, my, I don't want to die,
I want to go home—"

when overhead came a "swish" through the air, rapidly followed by three others. Then about two hundred yards to our left in a large field, four columns of black earth and smoke rose into the air, and the ground trembled from the report—the explosion of four German five-nine's, or "coalboxes." A sharp whistle blast, immediately followed by two short ones, rang out from the head of our column. This was to take up "artillery formation." We divided into small squads and went into the fields on the right and left of the road, and crouched on the ground. No other shells followed this salvo. It was our first baptism by shell fire. From the waist up I was all enthusiasm, but from there down, everything was missing. I thought I should die with fright.

After awhile, we reformed into columns of fours, and proceeded on our way.

About five that night, we reached the ruined village of H——, and I got my first sight of the awful destruction caused by German Kultur.

Marching down the main street we came to the heart of the village, and took up quarters in shellproof cellars (shellproof until hit by a shell). Shells were constantly whistling over the village and bursting in our rear, searching for our artillery.

These cellars were cold, damp and smelly, and overrun with large rats—big black fellows. Most of the Tommies slept with their overcoats over their faces. I did not. In the middle of the night I woke up in terror. The cold, clammy feet of a rat had passed over my face. I immediately smothered myself in my overcoat, but could not sleep for the rest of that night.

Next evening, we took over our sector of the line. In single file we wended our way through a zigzag communication trench, six inches deep with mud. This trench was called "Whisky street." On our way up to the front line an occasional flare of bursting shrapnel would light up the sky and we could hear the fragments slapping the ground above us on our right and left. Then a Fritz would traverse back and forth with his "typewriter" or machine gun. The bullets made a sharp cracking noise overhead.

The boy in front of me named Prentice crumpled up without a word. A piece of shell had gone through his shrapnel-proof helmet. I felt sick and weak.

In about thirty minutes we reached the front line. It was dark as pitch. Every now and then a German star shell would pierce the blackness out in front with its silvery light. I was trembling all over, and felt very lonely and afraid. All orders were given in whispers. The company we relieved filed past us and disappeared into the blackness of the communication trench leading to the rear. As they passed us, they whispered, "The best o' luck mates."

I sat on the fire step of the trench with the rest of the men. In each traverse two of the older men had been put on guard with their heads sticking over the top, and with their eyes trying to pierce the blackness in "No Man's Land." In this trench there were only two dugouts, and these were used by Lewis and Vickers machine gunners, so it was the fire step for ours. Pretty soon it started to rain. We put on our "macks," but they were not much protection. The rain trickled down our backs, and it was not long before we were wet and cold. How I passed that night I will never know, but without any unusual occurrence, dawn arrived.

The word "stand down" was passed along the line, and the sentries got down off the fire step. Pretty soon the rum issue came along, and it was a Godsend. It warmed our chilled bodies and put new life into us. Then from the communication trenches came dixies or iron pots, filled with steaming tea, which had two wooden stakes through their handles, and were carried by two men. I filled my canteen and drank the hot tea without taking it from my lips. It was not long before I was asleep in the mud on the fire step.

My ambition had been attained! I was in a front-line trench on the western front, and oh, how I wished I were back in Jersey City.

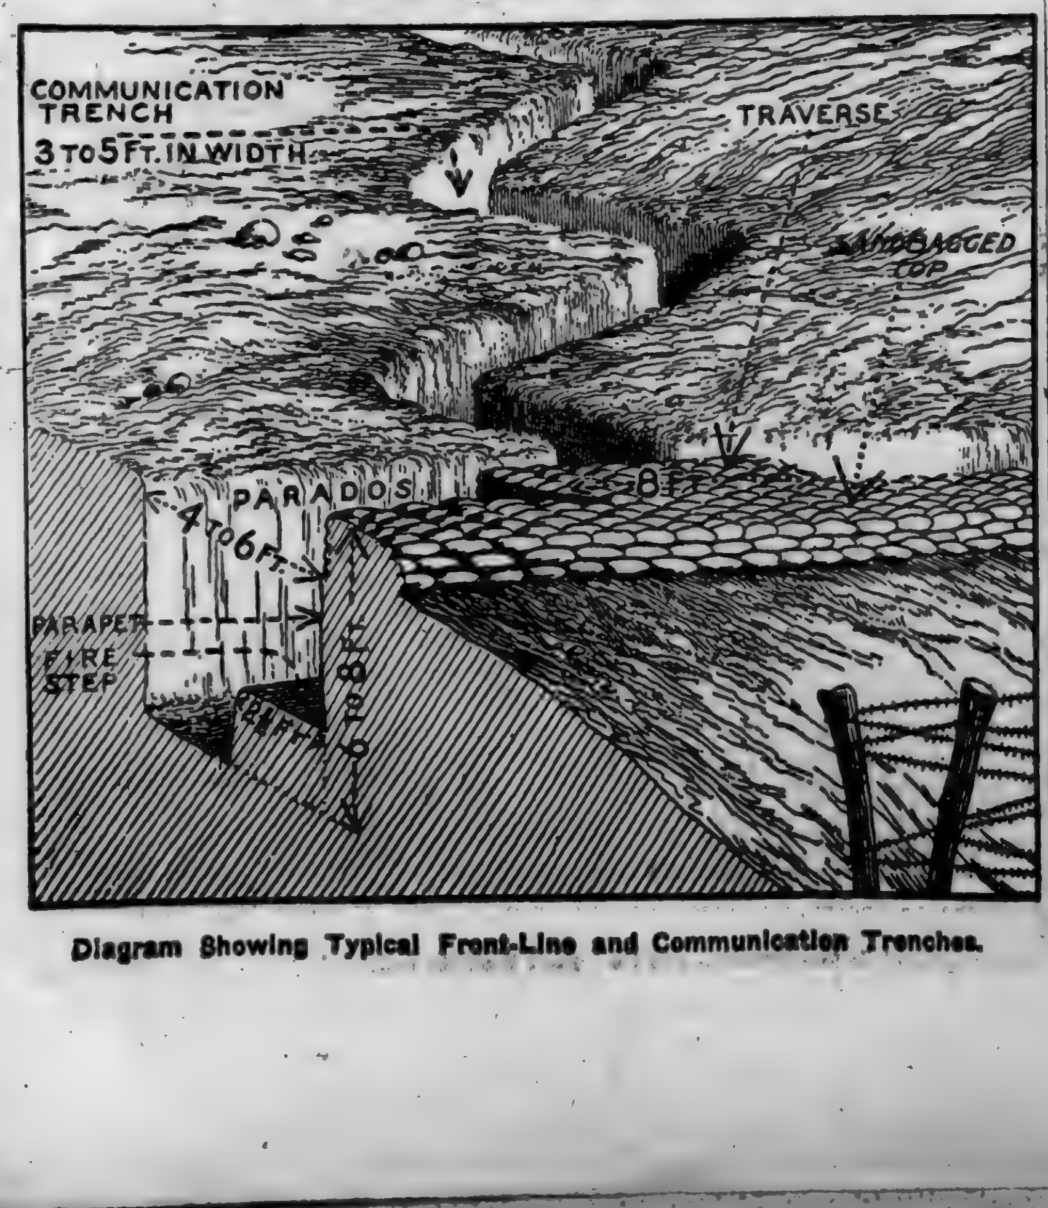

Diagram Showing Typical Front-Line and Communication Trenches.

Empey takes his first turn on the firing step of the trench while the machine gun bullets whiz over his head. He soon learns why Tommy has adopted the motto, "If you're going to get it, you'll get it, so never worry." Don't miss the next installment.

WILSON ACCEPTS FOE'S CHALLENGE

President Pledges America's Full Strength in War.

KAISER REVEALS REAL AIMS

Executive in Speech at Baltimore Says Germany Answered Offer of Just Peace by Crushing Russians.

Baltimore, Md., April 8.—President Wilson accepted in full the challenge of autocracy on Saturday night. He pledged to the world America's full strength in battle—to meet force with all the vast force of these United States and to fight until the world dominion plans of Germany are wiped from the earth.

Citing the answers of the central powers to his offers of a way to a just peace—answers spelled in the invasion of Russia and the crushing of the Slavs—he said:

"I am ready, ready still, ready even now, to discuss a fair and just and honest peace at any time that it is sincerely proposed, a peace in which the strong and the weak shall fare alike. But the answer, when I proposed such a peace, came from the German commanders in Russia, and I cannot mistake the meaning of the answer.

"There is but one response possible from us. Force, force to the utmost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force which shall make right the law of the world and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust."

America Shows Her Heart.

President Wilson's speech was the most notable feature of a day of remarkable demonstrations from one end of the nation to the other.

Every city, town and hamlet in the United States celebrated Liberty day and the opening of the Third Liberty loan drive—celebrated it with an enthusiasm, patriotism, wholeheartedness and sincerity that left no doubts as to where America stands.

The president said America was awake. Surely all reports that came in here as he spoke showed that he knew and spoke the truth.

President Wilson was given a great demonstration on his arrival at the Fifth regiment armory, which was packed with about 15,000 persons.

Cheer Acceptance of Challenge.

The president's declaration that nothing is proposed for Germany but justice, was warmly applauded, as was his statement that Germany's course in Russia is a cheap triumph.

When the president declared that he accepted Germany's challenge and that force must decide the issue, the audience arose to its feet and cheered for several minutes.

In the afternoon he reviewed 12,000 Camp Meade troops. They comprised drafted men from Pensylvania, Maryland and the District of Columbia.

In the stand with the president were Mrs. Wilson, Cardinal Gibbons, Maj. Gen. Joseph E. Kuhn, commanding the Seventy-ninth division at Camp Meade, and others.

President's Address.

President Wilson's address was in part as follows:

"Fellow Citizens: This is the anniversary of our acceptance of Germany's challenge to fight for our right to live and be free, and for the sacred rights of free men everywhere.

"The nation is awake. There is no need to call to it. We know what the war must cost, our utmost sacrifice, the lives of our finest men, and, if need be, all that we possess. The loan we are met to discuss is one of the least parts of what we are called upon to give and to do, though in itself imperative.

"The people of the whole country are alive to the necessity of it and are ready to offer to the utmost, even where it involves a sharp skimping and daily sacrifice to lend out of meager earnings.

"The reasons for this great war, the reason why it had to come, the need to fight it through, and the issues that hang upon the outcome are more clearly disclosed now than ever before.

"The man who knows least can now see plainly how the cause of justice stands and what the imperishable thing is he is asked to invest in.

"We must judge as we would be judged. I have sought to learn the objects Germany has in this war from the mouths of her own spokesmen, and to deal as frankly with them as I wished them to deal with me.

Ready for Just Peace.

"We have ourselves proposed no injustice, no aggression. We are ready, whenever the final reckoning is made, to be just to the German people, deal fairly with the German power, as with all others.

"I have sought to learn from those who spoke for Germany whether it was justice or dominion and the execution of their own will upon the other nations of the world that the German leaders were seeking. They have answered, answered in unmistakable terms. They have avowed that it was not justice but dominion and the unhindered execution of their own will.

"The avowal has not come from Germany's statesmen. It has come from her military leaders, who are her real rulers.

"At Brest-Litovsk her civilian delegates spoke in similar terms; professed their desire to conclude a fair peace and accord to the peoples with whose fortunes they were dealing the right to choose their own allegiancies.

"But action accompanied and followed the profession. Their military masters, the men who act for Germany and exhibit her purpose in execution, proclaimed a very different conclusion.

"We cannot mistake what they have done—in Russia, in Finland, in the Ukraine, in Roumania.

"The real test of their justice and fairplay has come. From this we may judge the rest. They are enjoying in Russia a cheap triumph in which no brave or gallant nation can long take pride.

"Their purpose is undoubtedly to make all the free and ambitious nations of the Baltic peninsula, all the lands that Turkey has dominated and misruled, subject to their will and ambition and build upon that dominion an empire of force.

"In such a program our ideals, the ideals of justice and humanity and liberty, the principle of the free self-determination of nations upon which all the modern world insists, can play no part.

Imperils America.

"That program once carried out, America and all who care or dare to stand with her must arm and prepare themselves to contest the mastery of the world. Everything that America has lived for, and loved, and grown great to vindicate and bring to a glorious realization will have fallen in utter ruin, and the gates of mercy will once more pitilessly shut upon mankind!

"The thing is preposterous and impossible, and yet is not that what the whole course and action of the German armies has meant wherever they have moved?

Accepts German Challenge.

"For myself, I am ready, ready still, ready even now, to discuss a fair and just and honest peace at any time that it is sincerely purposed, a peace in which the strong and the weak shall fare alike. But the answer, when I proposed such a peace, came from the German commanders in Russia, and I cannot mistake the meaning of the answer.

"I accept the challenge. I know that you accept it.

"Germany has once more said that force, and force alone, shall decide whether justice and peace shall reign in the affairs of men; whether right, as America conceives it, or dominion, as she conceives it, shall determine the destinies of mankind.

"There is, therefore, but one response possible from us—force; force to the utmost, force without stint or limit, the righteous and triumphant force which shall make right the law of the world and cast every selfish dominion down in the dust."

Chicago's Subscriptions to Liberty Loan Total $18,000,000 in Twento-Four Hours.

New York, April 8.—New York's first day subscription to third Liberty loan estimated at $102,000,000.

Chicago, April 8.—Chicago's first day subscription approximates $18,000,000—one-seventh of its minimum apportionment.

Two hundred towns—mostly small towns—filled their quotas. Seven Illinois counties report quotas passed.

Chicago set a pace on Saturday in the third Liberty loan drive which, if maintained daily, would lead the city over the top in a week.

With the people stirred by a patriotic demonstration which in its spontaneity probably never has been equaled in Chicago, the first day's subscriptions leaped to nearly $18,000,000, or about one-seventh of the quota for the city. Subscriptions began to come in early in the day and kept up until midnight.

One Hundred and Forty-Two Years of Labor and Struggle

THE American people fought their first battles for liberty and the rights of self-government one hundred and forty-two years ago.

¶ At that time, and for many years thereafter, their realization of their national aspirations and of the goal toward which they were really striving was vague and indistinct. But step by step they struggled onward and upward toward a light which grew clearer as their eyes and minds slowly opened to its significance. Today, as a result of their struggles and their sacrifices, we possess and enjoy our priceless American institutions.

¶ These institutions must be preserved. The structure so laboriously reared in these one hundred and forty-two years will be utterly destroyed if we do not spring to its defense with every atom of our energy and determination. This is not a situation which may be trifled with, or evaded, or put off. It is one which must be met now—today—no matter what sacrifices it may entail, or what the cost may be.

The immediate need is the investment of our money in LIBERTY BONDS!

Obituary

William Henry Gilbert, was one of a family of ten children, born to George and Katherine Gilbert, and he made his advent into the world at Millersburg, Pennsylvania, November 26, 1841. He spent the days of his childhood and young manhood there. During the civil war he was in the service of his country, working as a harness maker and at the close of hostilities received an honorable discharge. In about the year 1870 he came to Hicksville, Ohio and engaged in the harness business. He remained at his chosen work for years, making many friends and business acquaintances. A number of years ago he left the city and engaged in farming, coming to the present home in DeKalb county, seven years ago.

On April 17, 1883 he was united in marriage to Caroline Esterly, and it is her, his faithful companion, who is now left in deep sorrow and lonliness. Two brothers, James B. of Fort Wayne, Alfred, of Pine Grove, Pa., and two sisters, Mrs. Kate Ferree of Philadelphia and Mrs. Sue Hassinger of Santa Anna, California, also survive.

The deceased was a good citizen and neighbor and will be greatly missed in the home, where he was always a loving and faithful husband. He was of a sociable disposition and was always appreciative of friends and of favors did him and was always ready to accommodate a neighbor. His going from us removes another of the aged persons who has seen the wonderful development of our country.

The State Council of Defense requests the County Council of Defense to give the public the orders of the War Industry Board that attention be called to the recent statement by the Secretary of the Treasury to the fact that building operations should be determined by reference to the national welfare rather than to the comfort and convenience of citizens and that it is the sense of this council that there is increasing need of the most rigid observance of the recommendation by the National Council of Defense that no construction or other enterprise be undertaken unless justified by the text: Will the men, money and material be applied best contribute in this way to the winning of the war? The War Industry Board further says that all parties undertaking construction work are hereby warned that difficulties and delays will be subjected to all those who thus embark and it will be at their own peril.

It was intended to canvass every home and if anyone has been missed it was not intentional but it is not too late. If you have not been solicited go at once to the Bank or Post Office and buy at once, or if you refused to buy and your conscience is hurting you, find peace by buying at once.

The house now owned by Mrs. Kate Fusselman and where she makes her home, was the first school house built in Newville, and has been the property of the Fusselmans' ever since the academy was built. Here is what is claimed to be the greatest death-dealing war weapon yet conceived and its inventor, Levi W. Lombard of Boston. The machine gun, sometimes called the centrifugal gun, has a maximum firing power of 33,000 shots per minute. The ammunition is fed in a cuplike attachment at the left, and emitted through the slot just to the right of the top of the receiver. The gun has been tested and it is claimed it has been proven practicable.

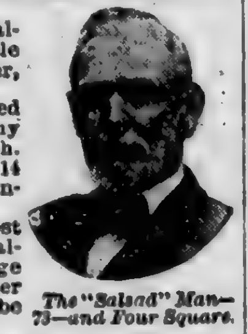
Coconut Macaroons.

One and one-half cups shredded coconut, one-half pound powdered sugar, whites of five eggs. Beat the egg whites until stiff and very dry, fold in carefully the powdered sugar and the coconut. Mix very lightly. Drop by teaspoonfuls on oiled paper; bake in a slow oven 20 minutes, take out of oven when a golden brown and, when cold, moisten the underside of the paper so that the macaroons may easily be removed.

Little Pitchers.

"My dear, will you run upstairs and get my hat and coat out of my closet?"

"No, ma'am, I won't. I'm afraid to. My father says you've got a skeleton in your closet."



WASHING IS NOT HARD WORK

Doing the family wash with "Salsad" is easy. "Salsad" in water loosens dirt and grime and never injures either the material or the hands. "Salsad" saves soap.

Clothes washed in "Salsad" water require little labor — and are whiter, cleaner and sweeter.

"Salsad" can't be wasted because it is put up in tiny packets—two for the wash. "Salsad" is used in 14 states and is strongly endorsed.

On account of parcel post rates, the way to buy "Salsad" is in the $1.00 package —100 packets. As a user said: "'Salsad' must be used to be appreciated." Send $1.00 to the Merchants National Bank or THE "SALSAD" MAN, SOUTH BEND, IND.

Bull Associations Valuable.

Bull associations should be a potent factor in the control of contagious diseases, according to the annual report of the bureau of animal industry, United States department of agriculture. One of the associations, of which on June 30 there were 86 actively operating in 17 states, has discarded all cattle that reacted to the tuberculin test, while other associations have been successful in avoiding contagious and infectious diseases of all kinds.

A Quitter.

"You don't seem to care for dancing as you did."

"I like dancing all right. But I never could settle down to one dance so that I could enjoy it. And I'm just naturally tired of taking lessons."

Gets Big Wolf

J. W. Fountain, a rancher of the McKenzie valley, living near Walterville, Ore., recently brought to Eugene the pelt of a huge black wolf trapped by him.

He caught it in two traps, set close to each other, and the animal had both broken and would have escaped soon had Mr. Fountain not arrived when he did. There are several of these animals in that vicinity, and the ranchers have been losing cattle and sheep as a result of their depredations.

This wolf was one of the largest ever seen in this county, measuring over eight feet from tip to tip.

Sowing the Seed and Producing Bigger Crops

Work in Joint Effort the Soil of the United States and Canada

CO-OPERATIVE FARMING IN MAN POWER NECESSARY TO WIN THE BATTLE FOR LIBERTY

The Food Controllers of the United States and Canada are asking for greater food production. Scarcely 100,000,000 bushels of wheat are available to be sent to the allies overseas before the crop harvest. Upon the efforts of the United States and Canada rests the burden of supply.

Every Available Tillable Acre Must Contribute; Every Available Farmer and Farm Hand Must Assist

Western Canada has an enormous acreage to be seeded, but man power is short, and an appeal to the United States allies is for more men for seeding operation.

Canada's Wheat Production Last Year was 225,000,000 Bushels; the Demand From Canada Alone for 1918 is 400,000,000 Bushels

To secure this she must have assistance. She has the land but needs the men. The Government of the United States wants every man who can effectively help, to do farm work this year. It wants the land in the United States developed first of course; but it also wants to help Canada. Whenever we find a man we can spare to Canada's fields after ours are supplied, we want to direct him there.

Apply to our Employment Service, and we will tell you where you can best serve the combined interests.

Western Canada's help will be required not later than May 5th. Wages to competent help, $50.00 a month and up, board and lodging.

Those who respond to this appeal will get a warm welcome, good wages, good board and find comfortable homes. They will get a rate of one cent a mile from Canadian boundary points to destination and return.

HOW TO GROW

TOMATOES.

The tomato is one of the most satisfactory of all the garden crops and one that is found in practically every vegetable garden. No matter how small the garden space available, it is always advisable to have a few tomato vines.

Tomatoes will grow in almost any good soil, but the soil should not be too high in nitrogenous matter, as this will cause the plants to go to vine, rather than to fruit. The plants should be started in the window box or in the hotbed, some six weeks before time to set them in the open. For best results they should be transplanted at least once. It is possible to secure a crop much sooner by carefully growing the plants indoors in pots and transplanting to the open ground as soon as conditions permit. They should not be set in the open until about two weeks after the last killing frost. If set sooner than this, they should in all cases be protected from frost with a muslin cover or with boxes covered with glass or by other means.

The pot-grown plants are especially desirable, as they may be brought to the blooming period by the time it is warm enough to plant them in the garden. If the plants are not to be trained, but allowed to lie on the ground, they should be set about 4 feet apart each way. If trained to single stalk and tied to stakes or a trellis, they may be planted in rows 3 feet apart and 18 inches apart in the row. If to be used for table purposes only, 25 plants under good conditions will supply the average family. If for canning, from 50 to 100 plants will be necessary. One hundred plants should supply sufficient tomatoes for present use, and enough to can at least 100 quarts.

Under favorable conditions tomatoes will continue to grow and bear for the entire season, and it should not be necessary to set a late crop

LATE CABBAGE.

Late cabbage is usually grown as a crop following early potatoes, peas or some other crop that leaves the ground free for about one-half the growing season. The plants may be grown in the seedbed, it being necessary to sow the seed some three or four weeks before it is desired to set them in position in the garden. It is an excellent plan to follow early potatoes with late cabbage, as none of the insects that affect early potatoes are liable to molest the late cabbage, and it is possible to set the plants between the potato rows some two or three weeks before the potatoes are dug. In this manner sufficient time is gained to permit the cabbage to reach maturity before hard freezing weather occurs in the fall.

The rows should be about 3 feet apart and the plants some 2 feet apart in the rows. Slight freezing does not injure cabbage, but it should not be subjected to repeated freezing and thawing. Late cabbage can be stored by taking up plants and packing them closely together in a trench, placing a frame of boards or poles around the trench, some supports across the top, and covering the whole with straw or corn fodder. The heads may be removed as needed and the roots and stems left in position in the trench. These will furnish an abundant supply of greens in early spring.

GARDENING NOTES

The more blisters you raise in cultivating, the less water your plants will need.

Weeds waste moisture and plant food. And they're not even pretty.

Have you filed your hoes? Some sticks to mark the rows?

BEETS.

The red garden beet may be grown in any good soil, but rich sandy loam will give the best results. The seed may be sown in spring as soon as the ground is in condition to work. They may be planted two weeks before danger of frost is past. If for horse cultivation, the rows should be from 2½ to 3 feet apart, or wide enough for the horse to walk between the rows. If for hand cultivation the rows need not be more than 12 to 18 inches apart. The usual custom is to sow the seed somewhat closer together than the beets are desired, and after the beets are up, to thin them from time to time, using the ones removed for greens until the beets finally are some 4 to 5 inches apart in the rows.

It should be remembered that what is commonly termed beet seed is really a seed ball, containing several individual seeds, and for this reason each one of these balls may bring from 3 to 4 plants. All of these plants except one should be removed during the thinning process. Two ounces of the seed are sufficient to plant a 100-foot row.

Beets should be planted in succession at intervals of about two weeks during the summer so as to have a supply of young tender beets at all times. The beets should be used before they exceed a diameter of 2 inches as the young beets of moderate size are of much better quality than those allowed to make a greater growth. The beets that remain unused during the latter part of the season should be allowed to grow until frost, pulled, trimmed and stored for winter use. If not desired for table use, they make an excellent stock or poultry feed.

CELERY.

Celery seed should be sown in the hotbed or window box about the time of the last frosts in the spring. The seed is very slow in germinating and the plants are small and delicate. They are improved by transplanting at least twice.

Celery requires a deep, rich, moist soil with plenty of well-rotted manure or fertilizer and frequent shallow cultivation. In the garden, celery may be planted after some early crop, such as lettuce, radishes or peas. As soon as the plants attain considerable size the leaves should be drawn together and a little soil compacted about the base of the plant to hold it upright. If the blanching is done with earth, care should be taken that the hearts of the plants do not become filled. Boards, paper or other material may be used for blanching, but earthing up will produce the finest flavor.

Celery may be stored and kept for winter use by placing it in old hotbeds, and covering it with fodder or straw; in trenches covered with coarse manure or straw; in outdoor cellars; or in the storage room in the basement.

Celery will test the skill of the gardener about as severely as any crop he may choose to grow, but no garden product pays better for painstaking care and effort than this crop.

For details as to the storage of celery, see Farmers' Bulletin 879, "The Home Storage of Vegetables.

SEED AND SUCCEED

Early to seed bed—early to sprout.

A time for everything, especially for planting.

Some seed left in that packet? Ask your neighbor.

CUCUMBERS.

The soil for cucumbers should be a rich sandy loam, rather moist but not wet. The seeds may be planted in berry baskets or on sods in the hotbed and these transferred to the open ground, or the seed may be placed directly in the ground. Considerable time will be saved by starting the plants in the hotbed. In either case they should not be placed in the open until the ground has warmed up, which will be about four weeks after the last killing frost in the spring.

They may be planted in hills 4 feet apart each way or drilled in rows 7 feet apart in the rows. It is a good plan to use an abundance of well-rotted manure in the holes or in the rows.

Cucumbers should receive frequent shallow cultivation until the vines begin to run freely; after this very little cultivation is required. They are ready for use as soon as large enough, and no fruit should be allowed to ripen on the vines. It is advisable to spray cucumbers with Bordeaux mixture, as they are quite liable to be injured by diseases.

For a full discussion of insects and diseases affecting cucumbers and remedies for them, see Farmers' Bulletin 856, entitled "Control of Disease and Insect Enemies of the Home Vegetable Garden."

SWEET CORN.

Plant sweet corn about the time of the last killing frost in spring and make 3 or 4 successive plantings at intervals of two weeks. From a quarter pint to a half pint of seed is sufficient for a hundred-foot row. Plant the seed in drills 3 feet apart and thin to a single stalk every 10 to 14 inches, or plant 5 to 6 seeds in hills 3 feet apart each way, and thin out to 3 to 5 stalks in a hill. Cover the seeds about 2 inches deep. Cultivate frequently, taking care to remove all suckers from around the base of the stalks.

WORK FOR PATRIOTIC WOMEN

Food Supply of Nation May Be Greatly Supplemented by Production of Chicken Flock.

The women in the farm homes of this country may greatly supplement the food supply of the nation by raising all the poultry and eggs they can this year. Every fowl and every dozen eggs raised and consumed on the farm will release meat and other foods for our armies and those of our allies. Patriotic production of poultry will pay profits to the patrons of the nation.

More Vegetables and Fruits.

The farm would lose much of its value as a place to live, enjoy life and rear a family without plenty of fruits and vegetables.

Substitutes for Wheat.

It is possible to make potatoes and beef scraps, meat trimmings from the kitchen, or cut fresh bone take the place of high priced wheat.

No Chance for Good Butter.

It is impossible to make sweet, clean-flavored butter from old, unclean cream.

Temperance Notes

(Conducted by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.)

THE NATION'S CAPITAL A POWERFUL PROHIBITION ARGUMENT.

"People can say what they please about prohibition, but if there was ever an argument in favor of it Washington, D. C., is that argument," says the Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution.

"Official verification of the wonderfully improved conditions in Washington under prohibition is furnished by the superintendent of police for the District of Columbia, officers of the Associated Charities, business men and Salvation Army heads. They ought to know! One of them reported that in one district during the saloon regime they had 12 nonsupport cases a week. Under the dry regime but one. In spite of the unusual war conditions, those who visit the poor testify that the children are better clothed and better fed than formerly.

"On every street the stores are crowded. At the Central market two weeks after the saloons were abolished one tradesman said: 'We are sold out.' People seem to have more money and buy better goods since the saloons were closed.

"A Salvation Army man, manager of the Industrial Home, said, 'It may be necessary to close this part of the establishment because there is such a scarcity of "down and outs" owing to prohibition.' He said he had it straight from the Occoquan workhouse that there are not enough men in the institution at present to do the work and take care of the stores. While about 200 men used to be sent to the prison every Monday morning by the courts of Washington for drunkenness, and petty crimes arising out of drunkenness, but few are sent there now. He knows this, because it is his duty to either go in person to the prison every day or send a representative to take care of the men who show a disposition to lead a better life. But he says so few are going in now, that for several days he has had no one to meet coming out."

WELL PUT.

"Down with the liquor traffic, and up with the liquor dealer" is the purpose that animates the men and women who are working for prohibition, says the Union Signal. In all their holy war they keep in mind not only the salvation of the men who have been or may be tempted by liquor but the redemption as well of individuals engaged in the trade by forcing them by law to engage in some business that will permit them to recover their self-respect and earn clean money. The attention of those misinformed people who waste sympathy on the poor liquor dealer whose business prohibition is supposed to destroy should be directed to some of the many enterprises that are taking the place of the old breweries and distilleries.

Especially notable is the success of the former Coors Brewery of Colorado. As a beer factory it had a capital of $60,000; as a manufacturer of malted milk and pottery, it enjoys a trade of $150,000. It formerly had one salesman where now it keeps twenty-eight busy. It had a pay-roll of eighty, and now has one of 200, all receiving 25 per cent better pay. It would not be difficult to multiply similar instances in other prohibition states. Be assured that every one who helps to secure for the state or the nation the adoption of prohibition, thereby forcing the liquor dealers to seek a decent and more lucrative means of livelihood, is placing them under a debt of eternal gratitude.

BRED IN THE BONE.

A party of Eastern bankers was being entertained at the Omaha club during the convention of the Nebraska Bankers' association recently.

There were a dozen at the table, including N. H. Loomis, general solicitor of the Union Pacific railroad. The host, as was customary at the time, ordered cocktails, but noticed that seven glasses which chanced to be in a row remained untouched.

Hoping to have some fun at the expense of the teetotalers, he called attention to the fact and said: "Just to start conversation, I wish you fellows would tell us one by one your reasons for not drinking, all in good faith. I know that Mr. Loomis never touches the stuff, because he is from Topeka, Kan., but you others are all Eastern men, and perhaps we can get a story."

Mr. Loomis looked up with interest as one after another of these widely known bank officers from New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis, Chicago, Kansas City and St. Joseph stated, in about the same terms, that they had been born and bred in Kansas, and for that reason, never having been familiar with liquor, had never formed a taste for it.

RAILROAD ENGINEERS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Members of the legislative committee of the Brotherhood of Railroad Engineers, representing 28,000 Illinois locomotive engineers, unanimously adopted a resolution favoring the ratification by the Illinois assembly of the federal prohibition amendment.

What was a short time ago a Keeley Cure institute in Omaha has, since Nebraska went dry, been converted into a dormitory by the Catholic university.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Teacher of English Bible in the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

(Copyright, 1918, Western Newspaper Union.)

LESSON FOR APRIL 14

JESUS REQUIRES CONFESSION AND LOYALTY.

LESSON TEXT—Mark 8:27-38.

GOLDEN TEXT—Whosoever will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross, and follow me.—Mark 8:34.

DEVOTIONAL READINGS—Romans 10:8-10; Hebrews 12:1-2, 12-15.

ADDITIONAL MATERIAL FOR TEACHERS—Luke 9:18-27; 57-62.

PRIMARY AND JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus and the Blind Man.

LESSON MATERIAL—Mark 8:22-26.

PRIMARY MEMORY VERSE—He hath done all things well.—Mark 7:37.

The time has now come for Jesus to take account of his ministry. Having been rejected by the rulers, he goes into retirement with his disciples. His primary object in his teaching during this time is to prepare the disciples for the tragedy of the cross, which he knew was so near. His teaching gathers around the great cardinal doctrines of the Christian faith. He instructs them touching his person, atoning death, resurrection and glorious coming again. He knew that in the measure that they intelligently apprehended these things they would be able to pass through the ordeals before them. The same is true today. Those who clearly apprehend the Divine Person, the vicarious atonement, the glorious resurrection, and second coming of Christ, are undisturbed by the world tragedies of the present hour.

I. Peter's Confession of Christ (vv. 27-30).

Two questions of Christ provoked this confession:

1. "Whom do men say that I am?" (vv. 27, 28).

This question referred to the opinions of the people regarding Jesus. Some believed him to be John the Baptist, some Elijah, and some one of the prophets. They all recognized him to be a teacher or prophet with more than human authority and power. Today, as then, there is a diversity of opinion among people as to Jesus Christ. Some think that he was only a man, others that he was a great teacher, but nothing more. Jesus was not content with this acknowledgment. Had he been satisfied with this, he would not have been molested in Jerusalem, for the Jews willingly acknowledged him as much more than a human teacher.

2. "Whom say ye that I am?" (vv. 29, 30).

II. Jesus Teaching Concerning the Cross (vv. 31-33).

Christ charged the disciples not to make public his Messiahship, as that would precipitate the crisis. The disciples needed much instruction yet to prepare them for the crucial hour of the cross.

1. What he taught (v. 31).

(1) "The Son of Man must suffer many things."

He suffered physical weariness and hunger, ridicule and contempt, and even misunderstanding and lack of appreciation on the part of his friends and disciples.

(2) "Be rejected of the elders, chief priests and scribes."

These were the nation's official representatives, the very ones who should have known and received Christ and recommended his reception on the part of the nation. Truly, he came to his own, and his own received him not—John 1:11. To be rejected by one's own friends and relatives is doubly painful.

(3) "Be killed."

This announcement was startling to the disciples. They had not yet come to realize that redemption was to be accomplished through the passion and the cross. Jesus now states with definiteness and certainty that he must die on the cross. This necessity was due primarily to the fact that it was the divine purpose to make the death of Christ the heart and core of the atonement; and also, to human hatred and opposition.

(4) "Rise again."

Though this was utterly incomprehensible to the disciples, he shows them that this would be the glorious issue of his death.

III. The Cost of Discipleship (v. 34).

The law of the Christian life is suffering. To follow Christ means to turn one's back upon the world. To repudiate the world means to incur the hatred of the world. To be Christians, therefore, means to share Christ's sufferings.

1. There must be denial of self (v. 34).

This means the sufferings and shame which lie in the path of loyalty to God. To live the godly life means suffering (2 Tim. 3:12).

3. Christ must be followed (v. 34).

This means to have the mind of Christ (Phil. 2:5) and to perform the service of Christ.

IV. The Issue of Discipleship (vv. 35-38).

The blessed issue of following Christ is a life of freedom here and now, and eternal life hereafter. Such sacrifice enriches the life that now is, and prepares for the enjoyment of the life which is to come. To barter the future life for present enjoyment is most foolish, for the choices of life are fraught with eternal issues. Those who refuse to follow in Christ's footsteps shall be separated from him at his glorious appearing (v. 38; compare 2 Thess. 1:7-10). Are you prepared when the call shall come?

Indiana Brevities

Indianapolis.—Nomination of a state ticket and the adoption of a state platform were the principal items of business before the Prohibition party stae convention, held here. The delegates attended the Dry Federation meeting, where W. J. Bryan spoke. The following nominations for members of the congress were made by the delegates: Sixth district, Omer Hufferd, Shirley; Tenth, I. G. Pollard, Hammond; Eleventh, Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, Upland, state president of the W. C. T. U. District chairmen named for two years, who will be the members of the state central committee, are: First, John K. McCleary, Evansville; Second, James Ranson, Bloomington; Third, W. R. Bottensfield, New Albany; Fourth, Albert L. Walters, Seymour; Fifth, Dr. J. G. L. Myers, Bloomingdale; Sixth, Dr. E. E. Worth, Spiceland; Seventh, Rev. Charles E. Fillmore, Indianapolis; Eighth, W. H. Hickman, Pennville; Ninth, John S. Clawson, Lebanon; Tenth, A. M. Mohr, Lafayette; Eleventh, Eli Beghtel, Huntington; Twelfth, Emory Johnson, Hudson; Thirteenth, J. M. Jolly, South Bend.

Indianapolis.—The statewide prohibition law closed 3,520 saloons in Indiana, of which 547 were in Indianapolis. The number of owners and employees in saloons who must seek other occupations is estimated at about 9,500. Thirty-five breweries and possibly fifteen big distilleries are affected by the law. Some of the distilleries, however, have for some time been devoting their plants to the manufacture of alcohol for the government or have been making other products, and such breweries as will not be dismantled are manufacturing soft drinks. The Anti-Saloon league estimates that $25,000,000 has been spent annually for liquor.

Wabash.—Through the will of Lydia Ellen Shambaugh, filed for probate, the Wesleyan Methodist institute and Bible training school of the Indiana conference of Wesleyan Methodist churches becomes the possessor of an estate valued at many thousand dollars. The will provides that the entire estate shall be held in trust for this school, the money and proceeds derived from it to be paid to the trustees each year. In case the school ever ceases to operate the estate will go to the Indiana conference of this body.

Indianapolis.—The Indiana supreme court granted a petition to submit and advance the case from Lake county testing the constitutionality of the state prohibition law, which probably means that the court will decide at the same time the questions involved in both the Vanderburg and Lake county appeals affecting the act passed by the 1917 legislature. On April 10, it appears, all the documents will be in the hands of the court, and it is generally supposed that the decision on the constitutionality of the law will be given a week or two later. Oral arguments in both the Vanderburg and Lake county cases were heard.

Petersburg.—All coal mines along the Evansville & Indianapolis railroad shut down, not being able to pay the excessive freight rates charged by the road for coal shipments, which made it impossible for them to compete with mines on other railroads. Eight hundred miners are idle. Many are leaving for other coal fields, while others are seeking work on farms. Coal operators hope for government intervention.

Indianapolis.—The necessity of keeping the Prohibition party intact in order to insure the election of administrations which will enforce the "bone dry" law, now effective in Indiana, was the keynote of speakers at the "jubilee" state convention of the party, held here. The immediate objectives of the party, as outlined in the general discussion of the delegates, were war prohibtion and ratification of the national dry amendment at the next legislature.

Terre Haute.—To disprove intimations that a reduction of 30 cents in the price of Indiana coal has been made, W. J. Freeman, president of the Indiana Bituminous Coal Operators, wired the national fuel administration for information. He received the following telegram: "Review of Indiana prices will not be completed for ten days at least. No authentic statement made by this office that Indiana prices are to be reduced; nor has any order been issued regarding any summer reduction."

Warsaw.—More than one thousand visitors, including three hundred minister delegates and as many more lay delegates, attended the five-day conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, which was held here. Bishop Thomas Nichols of Chicago was the presiding officer for the conference, which includes the districts of Goshen, Fort Wayne, Wabash, Logansport, Muncie and Richmond.

Warsaw.—At the seventy-fifth annual session of the north Indiana Methodist conference here a resolution was passed pledging loyal support to President Wilson "in the vigorous prosecution of the war until a righteous peace may be established throughout the world."

Washington, D. C.—Gov. James P. Goodrich of Indiana, here for a conference of governors on the problem of educating the illiterate, indicated that he was considering seriously the calling of a special session of the Indiana legislature to provide money for state institutions which face deficits.

Columbus.—Recently a representative of an Indianapolis veneering company visited Columbus and called on Mayor Frank S. Jones, proposing that the city sell the walnut trees in Donner park. The trees, according to the provisions of the deed made by William Donner, who gave the park to the city, are under the direct care and supervision of the Indiana state forestry commission. When informed by the mayor that the city would not permit the trees to be cut for any consideration the veneering company's representative said he was representing the government and that if the city would not sell the trees they would be confiscated by the government and turned over to his company and made into gunstocks for the army. Monday night at the regular meeting of the city council it was decided that the threat made by the veneering company be referred to the state board of forestry for investigation.

Indianapolis.—"Store your coal for next winter" was the advice that came out of the conference of railroad men, coal operators, the federal fuel administration and public service commissioners, held here. The conference was in the rooms of the public service commission in the statehouse. All of the Indiana coal-originating railroads were represented by superintendents in charge of the movement of coal and headed by J. W. Coneys, who is Director General McAdoo's representative in the operation of the railroads in Indiana. The Indiana coal operators were represented by C. J. Fletcher, secretary of the Knox County Operators' association, and C. R. Hall, who is now the district representative of the fuel administration. Evans Woollen, the state fuel administrator, was present and E. I. Lewis, representing the public service commission, presided.

Indianapolis.—The appeal of the case of Marion Caldwell against Adam H. Felker to determine who is entitled to the office of superintendent of the state oil inspection department reached the supreme court. A joint motion to advance the cause will be filed soon, it was declared. Caldwell is the head named by Governor Goodrich, and Felker is the head named by Edward Barrett, state geologist, when a controversy arose as to whom had the appointive power after court action concerning the present law. Caldwell brought suit in the Marion superior court against Felker as a claimant to the place, but lost his case. His appeal was recently filed.

Indianapolis.—H. E. Barnard, federal food administrator for Indiana, received a message from the national food administration at Washington saying the administration would revoke the food license held by Rollin H. Bunch, mayor of Muncie. Mayor Bunch received a food license from the national food administration several months ago, when he bought a quantity of potatoes, which he said he intended to sell to residents of Muncie at reduced prices. A controversy arose between Bunch and the consignees of a carload, and while the affair was being straightened out the car lay on the tracks for several days and the potatoes were frozen.

Fort Wayne.—It is estimated that there are 30,000 cases of grip in Fort Wayne at the present time. Many of the factories are working at times with less than a third of the regular force. In the city schools the epidemic is showing its effects in an unusually severe manner. According to Superintendent Himelick between twenty-five and thirty teachers in the grade schools are off duty, and hundreds of pupils are confined to their homes, while in the high school alone seven teachers and 200 pupils are absent.

Evansville.—The sixty-fourth annual conclave of the grand commandery, Knights Templar of Indiana, will be held in this city May 8 and 9. A patriotic mass meeting at the Soldiers and Sailors' coliseum will take the place of the usual ball held on the last night. A speaker of national reputation will be present and a massed choir will sing patriotic songs. Wartime conservation will mark every phase of the program for the two days.

Seymour.—The main market highways through Jackson county, which were designated by the state highway commission, cannot be improved with hard surface material this year, as the county council has failed to make the necessary appropriation. This is the only county through which the Indianapolis-Louisville highway is routed that has failed to provide money for the work. The Cincinnati-Evansville highway also passes through this city.

Lafayette.—Continuing their investigation of the finding of ground glass in bakery bread here, the police and county food administrator examined eight loaves brought in by citizens. One loaf contained a piece of glass half an inch long.

Orleans.—The county council, meeting with the county commissioners, appropriated $50,000, to which the state will add a like amount, for the construction of the first five miles of the new Lincoln highway to traverse Orange county for almost twenty miles.

Richmond.—The death of five valuable heifers on the farm of R. W. Warren, a farmer near Milton, and the serious illness of cattle on adjoining farms has been traced by members of the county council of defense to German agents. The death of the heifers was caused by poison, according to an investigation by the state veterinarian.

South Bend.—Because onions are a drug on the market, commanding only 25 cents a bushel, farmers, rather than take their loads home with them, dumped them along the St. Joseph river, Food Inspector A. F. Eby is investigating.

THE TRUTH ABOUT ECZEMA AND PILES

Thousands and thousands of people, says Peterson, are learning every week that one 30 cent box of Peterson's Ointment will abolish Eczema and banish piles, and the grateful letters I receive every day are worth more to me than money.

I had Eczema for many years on my head and could not get anything to do it any good. I saw your ad and got one box and I owe you many thanks for the good it has done me. There isn't a blotch on my head now, and I couldn't help but thank Peterson, for the cure is great, Mrs. Mary Hill, 420 Third Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.

I have had itching piles for 15 years and Peterson's is the only ointment that relieves me, besides the piles seem to have gone. A. B. Ruger, 1127 Washington Avenue, Racine, Wis.

Use Peterson's Ointment for old sores, salt rheum and all skin diseases. It banishes pimples and blackheads in less than 10 days and leaves the skin clean, clear and pleasant to look upon. Druggists guarantee it. Adv.

Building-up for the Spring Attack at the Front is a good deal like putting the body in condition for an invasion of the germs of grip, pneumonia or "Spring fever" here at home.

At this time of the year most people suffer from a condition often called Spring Fever. They feel tired, worn out, before the day is half thru. They may have frequent headaches and sometimes "pimply" or pale skin and white lips. The reason for this is that during the wintertime, shut up within doors, eating too much meat and too little green vegetables, one heaps fuel into the system which is not burned up and the clinkers remain to poison the system—a clogging up of the circulation—with inactive liver and kidneys. Time to put your house in order.

For an invigorating tonic which will clarify the blood, put new life in the body, sparkle to the eyes, and a wholesome skin, nothing does so well as a glyceric herb extract made from Golden Seal root, Blood and Stone root, Oregon grape root and Wild Cherry bark. This can be had in convenient, ready-to-use tablet form at all drug stores, sixty cents, and has been sold for the past fifty years as Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. By reason of the nerves feeding on the blood, when the blood is pure the nerves feel the effect, and neuralgia or other nerve pains disappear because such pain is the cry of the starved nerves for food. When suffering from backache, frequent or scanty urine, rheumatic pains here or there, or that constant tired feeling, the simple way to overcome these disorders is merely to obtain Dr. Pierce's Anuric from your druggist. In tablets, sixty cents.

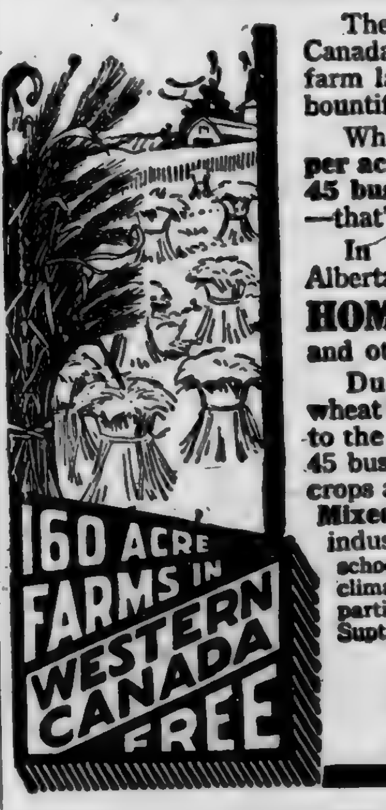
Are Common in Western Canada



The thousands of U. S. farmers who have accepted Canada's generous offer to settle on homesteads or buy farm land in her provinces have been well repaid by bountiful crops of wheat and other grains.

Where you can buy good farm land at $15 to $30 per acre—get $2 a bushel for wheat and raise 20 to 45 bushels to the acre you are bound to make money—that's what you can do in Western Canada.

In the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta you can get a

During many years Canadian wheat fields have averaged 20 bushels to the acre—many yields as high as 45 bushels to the acre. Wonderful crops also of Oats, Barley, and Flax. Twenty-one layettes—Each layette contains 27 made pieces and a filled sundry bag. These layettes represent a vast amount of work and much credit is due the Ladies Aid Societies of the three St. Joe churches and of the two Newville churches—also the various ladies who have worked independently both here and at Concord.

Mrs. Jno. Gillingham has turned in two pairs of knitted socks, and Mrs. Frank Sechler is credited with one knitted pair.

The balance of the baby layettes will be shipped May 1st., and if anyone has anything to donate in the way of baby clothes or articles for the sundry bag, it will be appreciated. They should be given to Mrs. Jackson or Mrs. Gee.

We have on hand snippings sufficient to make several pillows. Old muslin or sugar sacks are acceptable for this work and as new muslin is so expensive we urge all the ladies in our branch to look over their old sheets, pillow cases, etc., and see if they cannot donate a little muslin for these pillows. Please bring or send to the sewing room any Wed. P. M. during this month.

The Supt. of our Schools, Mr Smith, and Miss Shordan, the Prin. are much interested in organizing the Junior Red Cross in our schools. They have applied to our R. C. TRAGEDY AT ST. JOE Samuel W. Tustison, Cashier of St. Joe Valley Bank, Ends Life by Sending Bullet Crashing Through Brain---Accounts All Right. Seriously Wounds His Wife.

Big Rally In St. Joe Sunday

Mr. Oliver W. Oatland, representing the Indiana Dry Federation, has completed arrangements for a mass or union rally of all the Temperance people of St. Joe and surrounding country, the same to be held in the Widney Opera House on Sunday, April 21, at 8:00 P. M.

James E. Woertendyke, of California, with his singer, Mr. J. W. Huddleston, together with other workers, will have charge of the evening's program. A state-wide campaign is being launched for the stirring up of sentiment in behalf of War Prohibition, and the election of Representatives to the next Legislature who will stand on a platform of non-repeal of our state-wide law, and for the ratification of the National Prohibition Amendment.

Immediate Buying of Coal.

Evans Woollen, Federal Fuel Administrator for Indiana, has just issued the following statement to the coal consumers of Indiana:

"Householders should lay in now their coal for next winter. There are two reasons. They can not otherwise protect themselves against the chance of not having coal when they need it. I say this because I believe it likely there will be less coal for distribution in Indiana next winter than there was last winter.

The second reason is that, in the interest of the movement of munitions and other war supplies, our railroads should be spared the burden of hauling domestic coal under the unfavorable transportation conditions of the winter.

"It is accordingly unpatriotic as well as imprudent for the householder to delay getting his winter's supply. Indiana coal can be stored safely. There need be no apprehension about that by householders. They should, however, insist on having lump coal."

SIMEON H. MAURER

FOR RECORDER

EDITOR NEWS:—Please make the following announcement that I will again make the race for County Recorder. I also at this time wish to thank the people of the county for the many favors shown me four years ago, and will thank them in advance for any favors extended at the coming primary. I assure them that their confidence will not be misplaced. SIMEON H. MAURER.

The most shocking tragedy in the history of St. Joe occurred early last Sunday morning (about 5:30 o'clock), when S. W. Tustison, residing on Widney avenue, shot his wife, inflicting a serious wound, from the effects of which she lies in a critical condition at St. Joseph's hospital, Fort Wayne, and then turned the gun on himself with fatal results.

The fatal shot entered Mr. Tustison's head just above the right temple, ranged downward and came out just below the mastoid bone, burying itself in the pillow. Mrs. Tustison was shot at the base of the skull on the right side. The ball was deflected by the heavy bone at that point, and ranged upward about two inches, where it was later found imbedded under the skin. The brain was not injured, but the skull was fractured the entire distance traversed by the bullet. The lady undoubtedly owes her escape from being instantly killed to the fact that the ball did not hit her squarely, causing it to glance.

Two other persons were sleeping in the house at the time of the shooting—Margaret, the 14-year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs S. W. Tustison; and Martin Tustison, father of deceased. The last had a room downstairs, the other three upstairs.

The elder Tustison was awakened by the reports of the shooting. His first act was to run to the stairway leading to the upper part of the house. Mrs. Tustison was coming down. When about half way, she would have collapsed had he not assisted her. She did not know she was injured, and he attributed her condition to excitement.

Neighbors who had heard the shots and had come to their doors to see what had happened responded to Mr. Tustison's tries for help, Frank Sechler, whose home is on the opposite side of the street, being the first. Dr. Shook was then called. The physician could do nothing for Mr. Tustison, of couse. Having responded hurriedly to the call for his assistance, he left his spectacles at home. As a result, he did not examine Mrs. Tustison as closely as he otherwise would have done. She was bleeding, but he attributed this to powder burns. He had no reason to think she was seriously injured, as she was perfectly rational and showed no evidences of her real condition. He applied some remedies to stop the bleeding.

Soon after, the injured lady began to complain of her head and to vomit. Dr. Shook was again sent for. This time, with the aid of his spectacles, he discovered the serious nature of the injuries. Mrs. Tustison was immediately taken to the hospital in the Kinsey ambulance. Here she was operated upon by Dr. A. E. Bulson, specialist in diseases of the eye and ear and of injuries of the head. A piece of shattered bone about 1x1½ inches was removed and replaced by a silver plate. The operation required two and one-half hours. The patient came out from under the effects of the anesthetic all righs and was fully conscious, as, indeed, she had been from the very first. She expressed a desire to return home and attend her husband's funeral, but this was overruled by Dr. Bulson.

Coroner Howard A. Hinklin, of Garrett, came to St. Joe and began an inquest over Mr. Tustison's remains and then adjourned until Monday afternoon, when he completed his work. His verdict was that Mr. Tustison "shot his wife and killed himself while temporarily insane."

Mrs. Tustison declares that her husband did not try to kill her; that the shot that hit her was meant for himself, not for her Her opinion is shared by Mr. Tustison's father and other members of the family and by those who know most about the sad affair.

There is no doubt but Mr. Tustison's mind was deranged at the time of the shooting. He was cashier of the bank at this place, and had not been like his former self ever since the burning of the bank building, March 5. There were times when he worried over the affairs of that institution. He passed sleepless nights; and, at times by day, was moody and silent. Other times, he appeared cheerful; and on the evening before the tragedy, he was out in his automobile with his wife and daughter and made arrangements to take another ride the next day. On the night of the tragedy, he was restless; and this, no doubt, caused him to brood over his troubles. In this nervous, distracted state, he took his own life. Two shots were fired, and the supposition of his father is that the gun accidentally went off in his hands, wounding his wife, and that the second time he succeeded in taking his own life.

Had Mr. Tustison's management of the bank been crooked, his worrying over its affairs could be accounted for; but an examination made by a bank examiner, Tuesday, showed that the deceased man's accounts were all straight. But the fact that his mind underwent a change immediately after the fire is conclusive proof that that event had much to do in leading up to the suicide. It should not have had, but it did: a disordered brain is not one that reasons correctly. Correct reasoning proceeds only from a healthy brain.

Samuel W. Tustison was born in Concord township on the farm of his father, north of St. Joe, on Feb. 20, 1875; and was 43 years, 1 month and 15 days old at death. Here his entire life was passed, with the exception of several years passed in school at Springfield, Ohio. For a number years, he was connected with the St. Joe bank: First, as assistant cashier under his father-in-law, W. C. Patterson; and later, after the latter's health failed, as cashier.

On Oct. 16, 1901, he was united in marriage to Miss Bessie G. Patterson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Patterson. To them was born one child, a daughter, Margaret, now 14 years old.

Samuel W. Tustison's life is a book that is written, and its pages are open to and will bear inspection. Not one of them is soiled by meanness—all are clean. He will long be remembered as an exemplary citizen. There will be none so uncharitable as not to overlook the rash manner by which he himself ended an otherwise unspotted lifework.

Funeral services were held at the Lutheran church, where Mr. Tustison had worshipped for years, at 2 p. m. today (Wednesday), conducted by Rev. A. K. Mumma, the pastor. Interment was at Riverside cemetery.

NEWS OF THE TOWN

Save Pieces for Peace.

Leon Sechler, of Garrett, was in town on Tuesday. Harry Hursh and wife also arrived for a few days' vacation.

Three of Spencer township's soldier boys are home on visits. George Hart, of Camp Taylor, arrived on Friday. He is enjoying army life.

The town trustees, at their regular meeting last Tuesday evening, passed the following: "Resolved, That this board instruct the marshal to see that the state law governing speed limits and lights be observed by machines while in the town of St. Joe." The law referred to will be found on page 786, section 13, and page 788, section 16, of the 1913 Indiana statutes. If you do not know what it is, you had better look it up.

FURLOUGHS ARE TO HELP FARM WORK

WAR DEPARTMENT INTENDS TO LET ENLISTED MEN GO HOME TO SOW AND HARVEST.

HOW TO MAKE APPLICATION

Many Drafted Men Have Been Excused Under Vocation Provisions—Trade Tests Used to Secure Skilled Workers for Army.

(From Committee on Public Information.)

Washington.—For the purpose of augmenting agricultural production it is the intention of the war department to grant furloughs to enlisted men to enable them to engage in farming during the present season. Commanding officers may grant such furloughs within prescribed rules whenever it appears they will contribute to increased farm production.

Furloughs may be given by commanding officers of posts, camps, cantonments, divisions, and departments. They will be for short periods, largely for seeding and harvesting time. They will not be granted to enlisted men of or above the grade of first sergeant, nor in an organization that has been ordered to move or is in transit from points of mobilization or training to a port of embarkation. All furloughs granted will be recalled and the men ordered to their organizations when they have received preparatory orders for duty overseas.

Furloughs granted for farm work will be without pay and allowances, except that enough pay will be retained in each case to meet allotments in force on the day of the order, war-risk insurance, and pledges on Liberty bonds.

For specially qualified experts in agriculture furloughs may be granted by the secretary of war upon application by the secretary of agriculture, providing such furloughs are voluntarily accepted by the persons for whom application is made.

Individual applications for furloughs submitted by relatives will be on a form to be furnished by local draft boards. Two sections are to be made out and presented to the local board, which can complete the form.

If the furlough is granted the application will be filed by the commanding officer and a certificate furnished the soldier. If not granted, the application will be returned with reasons for disapproval.

If the soldier initiated the application he will give the name of the person for whom he desires to work, from whom will be ascertained the need for farm service.

Furloughs may be granted en bloc to men who are willing to accept them, upon requests of farmers, when time consumed in traveling from the post to the place of labor will not exceed 24 hours. In making these applications farmers will use a form of the provost marshal general's office, also going to the local board.

Under provisions of the selective-service law making specified vocations a ground for exemption or discharge, apart from the "necessary industries" dealt with by the district boards, 67,716 men were excused from military duty.

Of the men exempted, 1,665 were federal or state officers; ministers, 3,976; divinity students, 3,144; in the military and naval service, 47,822.

County and municipal officials numbering 889 were discharged; customhouse clerks, 171; mail employees, 1,476; arsenal workmen, 2,358; federal employees designated by the president, 1,777; pilots, 1,772; mariners, 2,666.

To increase the accuracy of selecting skilled workers among the enlisted men a system of trade tests has been developed. Exact and comprehensive definitions of the more than 600 different trades represented in the military organization have been brought together in a 300-page book, "Trade Specifications." Tables have been prepared showing the detailed needs of each unit for skilled and semiskilled workers. Work has been done in refining methods of selecting and training men for special duties in the navy, special service regarding selection of aviators, assistance to provost marshal general on the questionnaire, and assistance rendered the surgeon general for general intelligence tests for enlisted men and officers.

The war-service exchange of the committee on classification of personnel answers inquiries of persons desiring to serve the army. It informs the department of labor of the needs which the war department has for men.

The allen property custodian has been given power to sell, at private sale without advertisement, enemy-owned live stock, feed or food stuffs, hides and other animal products, agricultural products, fertilizers, chemicals, drugs, essential oils, lumber, cotton, tobacco, furniture, books, glass and china ware, wearing apparel, jewelry, precious stones, pictures, ornaments, bric-a-brac, objects of art, raw or finished textile materials, trunks, boxes, partially or completely manufactured metals, fabrics, rubber and rubber products, and all kinds of merchandise, in lots having a market value of not more than $10,000.

Such sales may be held at places and under conditions prescribed by the alien property custodian.

Federal reserve banks are to rediscount notes secured by farm tractors, according to the department of agriculture. Instructions have been issued to all federal reserve banks authorizing them to rediscount tractor paper presented by any member bank, provided it has maturity not exceeding six months and the tractors are purchased for agricultural purposes.

In Oklahoma, county councils of defense are securing pledges from automobile owners to furnish transportation to speakers for community councils. The pledge provides that the chairman of the county council may hire a car at the expense of any signer who fails to furnish transportation at the time promised.

Investigations by the department of agriculture in 15 states show that of a total of 6,836,492 sheep, 34,683 were killed by dogs in one year and were paid for by the counties.

The committee on public information has made public editorial comment in the German press on the revelations in the Reichstag main committee in connection with investigations of the Daimler Motor Works. It was shown that the Daimler company was earning 173 per cent. profit per annum, the company's sworn statement placing the profits at 11 per cent, and while the company was earning 400,000,000 marks monthly in excess of its peacetime profits it had threatened to reduce output unless higher prices were paid. The Berliner Tageblatt (Liberal), said:

"Energetic action of the authorities and the Reichstag is demanded. Such enterprises as the Daimler firm are not compelled to submit books for inspection, while every little trader selling vegetables must show his profits. We demand government confiscation of illegal profits and, if necessary, state control."

Vorwaerts (Government Socialist), said:

"The Raimler revelations will hardly occasion the same surprise in financial circles as among the masses. The Daimler company's purpose was not to deceive the financial world, but the authorities, so that its real profits might be kept from the public's knowledge. The company reckoned upon the commercial ignorance of the government and this experience shows that such reliance is usually justified."

Attention of fertilizer manufacturers and dealers has again been called to the necessity of taking out federal licenses.

All fertilizer manufacturers, including mixers, even though their output may be small, are required to take out licenses. Agents and dealers doing exclusively a retail business, whose gross sales do not amount to more than $100,000 a year, are not required to take out licenses or to make applications for blanks. However, any retail dealer or agent whose gross sales amount to more than $100,000 and who does not apply for a license, is liable under the provisions of the act of congress providing for the governmental control of the industry.

Application for license should be made to the law department, license division, United States food administration, Washington, D. C.

American soldiers and sailors in German prison camps prior to April 12, 1918, will not be deprived of their rights to war-risk insurance because of inability to make personal application, provided such application is made in their behalf.

According to a statement by the secretary of the treasury, applications for insurance may be made in behalf of such prisoners by persons within the permitted class of beneficiaries under the military and naval insurance law. This class includes wife, child, parent, brother, or sister. Application should be made to the bureau of war-risk insurance, at Washington, D. C.

The health of troops in the United States continues very good, according to a recent report to the surgeon general of the army by the division of field sanitation. Admission, noneffective and death rates are somewhat higher than last report, due chiefly to prevalence of influenza and bronchitis with complicating pneumonia, in many of our northern camps.

National Guard camps, as a group, continue with remarkably low rates. Very few new cases of measles and meningitis have occurred.
